"(c) Except as provided in subsection (d) of this section, sums paid by an employer to an employee regardless of whether the employee has worked in excess of the maximum number of hours specified in this section, or in amounts not based on the number of hours actually worked by him in excess of such maximum in each workweek, shall not be deemed payments of premium compensation required by this section for overtime employment; and notwithstanding any other provision of this section, any salaried employee who is employed in excess of 40 hours in any workweek shall be paid for each such hour in excess of 40, in addition to his salary for 40 hours of work, at a rate not less than one and one-half times the hourly rate obtained by dividing his weekly salary by not more than 40: Provided, That as to any employee employed in pursuance of a collective-bargaining agreement, made by representatives of employees certified as bona fide by the National Labor Relations Board, which (1) provides a contract regular rate of pay of not less than $1.50 an hour for such employee and compensation at not less than one and one-half times such rate for all hours worked in excess of 40, (2) provides a weekly guaranty of employment or pay for more than 40 hours and not more than 60 hours, and (3) meets the requirements of regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor prescribing such conditions as he shall determine to be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act, this subsection shall not be applicable.

"(d) As used in this section the 'regular rate' at which an employee is employed shall be deemed to include all remuneration for employment paid to, or on behalf of, the employee, but shall not be deemed to include—

"(1) sums paid as gifts; payments in the nature of gifts made at Christmas time or on other special occasions, as a reward for service, the amounts of which are not measured by or dependent on hours worked, production, or efficiency;

"(2) payments made for occasional periods when no work is performed due to vacation, holiday, illness, failure of the employer to provide sufficient work, or other similar cause; reasonable payments for traveling expenses, or other expenses, incurred by an employee in the furtherance of his employer's interests and properly reimbursable by the employer; and other similar payments to an employee which are not made as compensation for his hours of employment;

"(3) sums paid in recognition of services performed during a given period if either, (a) both the fact that payment is to be made and the amount of the payment are determined at the sole discretion of the employer at or near the end of the period and not pursuant to any prior contract, agreement, promise, arrangement, or a custom or practice causing the employee to expect such payments regularly; or (b) the payments are made pursuant to a bona fide profit-sharing plan or trust, meeting the requirements of the Secretary set forth in appropriate regulations which he shall issue, having due regard, among other relevant factors, to the extent to which the amounts paid to the employee are determined without regard to hours of work, production, or efficiency; or (c) talent fees (as such term is defined and delimited by regulations of the Secretary) paid to performers, including announcers, on radio and television programs;

"(4) contributions irrevocably made by an employer to a trustee or third person pursuant to a bona fide plan for providing old-age, retirement, life, accident, or health insurance or similar benefits for employees;

"(5) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for certain hours worked by the employee in any day or workweek because such hours are hours worked in excess of 8 in a day or 40 in a workweek or in excess of the employee's normal working hours or regular working hours, as the case may be;

"(6) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for work by the employee on Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, or regular days of rest, or on the sixth or seventh day of the workweek, where such premium rate is not less than one and one-half times the rate established in good faith for like work performed in nonovertime hours on other days;

"(7) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid to the employee, in pursuance of an applicable employment contract or collective-bargaining agreement, for work outside of the hours established in good faith by the contract or agreement as the basic, normal, or regular workday (not exceeding 8 hours) or workweek (not exceeding 40 hours), where such premium rate is not less than one and one-half times the rate established in good faith by the contract or agreement for like work performed during such workday or workweek.

"(e) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of 40 hours if, pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at between the employer and the employee before performance of the work, the amount paid to the employee for such employment in excess of 40 hours—

"(1) in the case of an employee employed at piece rates, is computed at piece rates not less than one and one-half times the bona fide piece rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours; or

"(2) in the case of an employee performing two or more kinds of work for which different hourly or piece rates have been established, is computed at rates not less than one and one-half times such bona fide rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours:

and if (i) the employee's average hourly earnings for the workweek exclusive of payments described in paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (d) are not less than the minimum hourly rate required by applicable law, and (ii) extra overtime compensation is properly computed and paid on other forms of additional pay required to be included in computing the regular rate.

"(f) Extra compensation paid as described in paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) of subsection (d) shall be creditable toward overtime compensation payable pursuant to this section.

"WAGE ORDERS

"SEC. 8. (a) The policy of this act with respect to industries engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce is to reach as rapidly as is economically feasible without substantially curtailing employment the objective of a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour in each such industry. Whenever a minimum-wage rate of 75 cents an hour in any such industry has resulted in, or threatens to result in, a substantial curtailment of employment, the Secretary shall convene an industry committee, appointed pursuant to section 5, and such committee shall recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 by employers engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce in such industry or classification therein.

"(b) Upon the convening of any such industry committee, the Secretary shall refer to it the question of the minimum-wage rate or rates to be fixed for such industry. The industry committee shall investigate conditions in the industry and the committee, or any authorized subcommittee thereof, may hear such witnesses and receive such evidence as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the committee to perform its duties and functions under this act. The committee shall recommend to the Secretary the highest minimum-wage rates for the industry which it determines, will not substantially curtail employment in the industry, and, in the case of any industry in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands, will not give such industry a competitive advantage over any industry in the United States outside of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

"(c) The industry committee shall recommend such reasonable classifications within any industry as it determines to be necessary for the purpose of fixing for each classification within such industry the highest minimum wage rate (not in excess of 75 cents an hour) which (1) will not substantially curtail employment in such classification and (2) will not give a competitive advantage to any group in the industry, and shall recommend for each classification in the industry the highest minimum wage rate which the committee determines will not substantially curtail employment in such classification. In determining whether such classifications should be made in any industry, in making such classification, and in determining the minimum wage rates for such classifications, no classifications shall be made, and no minimum wage rate shall be fixed, solely on a regional basis, but the industry committee and the Secretary shall consider among other relevant factors the following:

"(1) competitive conditions as affected by transportation, living, and production costs;

"(2) the wages established for work of like or comparable character by collective labor agreements negotiated between employers and employees by representatives of their own choosing; and

"(3) the wages paid for work of like or comparable character by employers who voluntarily maintain minimum-wage standards in the industry.

"No classification shall be made under this section on the basis of age or sex.

"(d) The industry committee shall file with the Secretary a report containing its recommendations with respect to the matters referred to it. Upon the filing of such report, the Secretary, after due notice to interested persons, and giving them an opportunity to be heard, shall by order approve and carry into effect the recommendations contained in such report, if he finds that the recommendations are made in accordance with law, are supported by the evidence adduced at the hearing, and, taking into consideration the same factors as are required to be considered by the industry committee, will carry out the purposes of this section; otherwise he shall disapprove such recommendations. If the Secretary disapproves such recommendations, he shall again refer the matter to such committee, or to another industry committee for such industry (which he may appoint for such purpose), for further consideration and recommendations.

"(e) Orders issued under this section shall define the industries and classifications therein to which they are to apply, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purposes of such orders, to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof, and to safeguard the minimum wage rates established therein. No such order shall take effect until after due notice is given of the issuance thereof by publication in the Federal Register and by such other means as the Secretary deems reasonably calculated to give to interested persons general notice of such issuance.

"(f) Due notice of any hearing provided for in this section shall be given by publication in the Federal Register and by such other means as the Secretary deems reasonably calculated to give general notice to interested persons.

"ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

"SEC. 9. For the purpose of any hearing or investigation provided for in this act the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 16, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., 1946 edition, title 15, secs. 49 and 50), are hereby made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary and the industry committees.

"COURT REVIEW

"SEC. 10. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Secretary issued under section 8 may obtain a review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals for any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal places of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Secretary be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Secretary, and thereupon the Secretary shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order in whole or in part, so far as it is applicable to the petitioner. The review by the court shall be limited to questions of law, and findings of fact by the Secretary when supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive. No objection to the order of the Secretary shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Secretary or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceeding and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Secretary, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Secretary and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Secretary may modify his findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall file with the court such modified or new findings which if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive, and shall also file his recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in title 28, United States Code, section 1254.

"(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Secretary's order. The court shall not grant any stay of the order unless the person complaining of such order shall file in court an undertaking with a surety or sureties satisfactory to the court for the payment to the employees affected by the order, in the event such order is affirmed, of the amount by which the compensation such employees are entitled to receive under the order exceeds the compensation they actually receive while such stay is in effect.

"INVESTIGATIONS, INSPECTIONS, AND RECORDS

"SEC. 11. (a) The Secretary or his designated representatives may investigate and gather data regarding the wages, hours, employment of minors, and other conditions and practices of employment in any industry subject to this act, and may enter and inspect such places and such records (and make such transcriptions thereof), question such employees, and investigate such facts, conditions, practices, or matters as he may deem necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated any provision of this act, or which may aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this act. The Secretary shall bring all actions under section 16 to restrain violations of this act.

"(b) With the consent and cooperation of State agencies charged with the administration of State labor laws, the Secretary may, for the purpose of carrying out his functions and duties under this act, utilize the services of State and local agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may reimburse such State and local agencies and their employees for services rendered for such purposes.

"(c) Every employer subject to any provision of this act or of any order issued under this act shall make, keep, and preserve such records of the persons employed by him and of the wages, hours, and other conditions and practices of employment maintained by him, and shall preserve such records for such periods of time, and shall make such reports therefrom to the Secretary as he shall prescribe by regulation or order as necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act or the regulations or orders thereunder.

"CHILD LABOR PROVISIONS

"SEC. 12. (a) No producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in commerce any goods produced in an establishment situated in the United States in or about which within 30 days prior to the removal of such goods therefrom any oppressive child labor has been employed: Provided, That a prosecution and conviction of a defendant for the shipment or delivery for shipment of any goods under the conditions herein prohibited shall be a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries for shipment of any such goods before the beginning of said prosecution.

"(b) No employer shall employ any oppressive child labor in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce.

"EXEMPTIONS

"SEC. 13. (a) The provisions of sections 6, 7, and 12 shall not apply with respect to (1) any employee engaged in the delivery of newspapers to the consumer; or (2) any employee of a retail or service establishment. An establishment shall not be deemed a retail or service establishment within the meaning of this subsection if more than 50 percent of its annual dollar volume during the preceding calendar year was derived from activities other than retail selling or servicing. As used in this subsection, 'retail selling or servicing' means selling or servicing to private individuals for personal or family consumption, or selling or servicing (but not for resale) where (1) the goods sold or serviced do not differ materially either in type or quantity from goods normally sold or serviced for such personal or family consumption, or where (2) the customer is a farmer and the goods sold or serviced are of types and in quantities used by the ordinary farmer in his farming operations.

"(b) The provisions of sections 6 and 7 shall not apply with respect to (1) any employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative or professional capacity, or in the capacity of outside salesman (as such terms are defined and delimited by regulations of the Secretary); or (2) any employee employed in the catching, taking, propagating, harvesting, cultivating, or farming of any kind of fish, shellfish, crustacea, sponges, seaweeds, or other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, including the going to and returning from work and including employment in the loading and unloading, when performed by any such employee, and in the icing, cleaning, salting, or other preparation of such products in their raw state for shipment from the place of unloading to market or to processors; or (3) any employee employed in agriculture; or (4) any employee employed as a seaman; or (5) any employee employed in connection with the publication of any weekly or semiweekly newspaper the major part of the circulation of which is within the State where printed and published; or (6) any employee of a street, suburban, or interurban electric, railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier not included in other exemptions contained in this section; or (7) any employee of a telephone system organized for the purpose of serving, and engaged primarily in serving, any rural area (as defined in sec. 13 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C., sec. 913)); or (8) any switchboard operator employed in a public telephone exchange which has less than 500 stations; or

(9) any employee of an employer engaged in the business of operating taxicabs; or (10) any employee who, deriving the majority of his annual income from some other occupation or employment, is employed for a period or periods of not more than 14 workweeks per annum by any employer who, though covered by this act, is not directly engaged in the sale or shipment of goods in commerce; or (11) any employee or proprietor in a retail or service establishment as defined in subsection (a) of this section, with respect to whom the provisions of sections 6 and 7 would not otherwise apply, engaged in handling telegraphic messages for the public under an agency or contract arrangement with a telegraph company where the telegraph message revenue of such agency does not exceed $500 a month; or (12) any employee employed as a learner or apprentice, as defined by the Secretary, or as a messenger employed exclusively in delivering letters and messages, and any employee who is physically or mentally handicapped; or (13) any individual employed in or about a sawmill or similar facility for processing forestry products where such sawmill or similar facility has less than 16 employees; or (14) any employee of a peoples' utility district, or of a cooperative, nonprofit, or limited-dividend association, organized for the purpose of financing construction and operation relating to rural electrification and eligible for loans under section 4 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C., sec. 904).

"(c) The provisions of section 7 shall not apply with respect to (1) any employee employed during the greater part of any workweek as a driver or helper riding a motor vehicle in the performance of over-the-road transport operations (as defined by the Secretary of Labor); or (2) any employee of an employer which is an express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act; or (3) any employee employed as flight personnel on an aircraft by a carrier by air subject to title II of the Railway Labor Act.

"(d) The provisions of section 12 relating to child labor shall not apply with respect to any employee employed in agriculture outside of school hours for the school district where such employee is living while he is so employed, or to any child employed as an actor or performer in motion pictures or theatrical productions or in radio or television productions.

"PROHIBITED ACTS

"SEC. 14. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) to transport, offer for transportation, ship, deliver, or sell in commerce, or to ship, deliver, or sell with knowledge that shipment or delivery or sale thereof in commerce is intended, any goods in the production of which any employee was employed in violation of section 6 or section 7; except that any such transportation, offer, shipment, delivery, or sale of such goods by a purchaser who acquired them after such violation occurred shall not be deemed unlawful if such purchaser proves that he was without knowledge of such violation, and acted in good faith in reliance on written assurance from the producer that the goods were produced in compliance with the requirements of the act, and no provision of this act shall impose any liability upon any common carrier for the transportation in commerce in the regular course of its business of any goods not produced by such common carrier, and no provision of this act shall excuse any common carrier from its obligation to accept any goods for transportation;

"(2) to violate any of the provisions of section 6 or section 7, or any of the provisions of any regulation or order of the Secretary issued under section 4 (c);

"(3) to discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any employee because such employee has filed any complaint or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or related to this act, or has testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding, or has served or is about to serve on an industry committee;

"(4) to violate any of the provisions of section 12;

"(5) to violate any of the provisions of section 11 (c), or to make any statement, report, or record filed or kept pursuant to the provisions of such section or of any regulation or order thereunder, knowing such statement, report, or record to be false in a material respect.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a) (1) proof that any employee was employed in any place of employment where goods shipped or sold in commerce were produced, within 90 days prior to the removal of the goods from such place of employment, shall be prima facie evidence that such employee was engaged in the production of such goods.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 15. (a) Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of section 14 shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both. No person shall be imprisoned under this subsection except for an offense committed after the conviction of such person for a prior offense under this subsection.

"(b) Any employer who violates the provisions of section 6 or section 7 of this act shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in the amount of their unpaid minimum wages, or their unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be, and (except as provided in section 11 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947) in an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. Action to recover such liability may be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated. No employee shall be a party plaintiff to any such action unless he gives his consent in writing to become such a party and such consent is filed in the court in which such action is brought. The court in such action shall, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow a reasonable attorney's fee to be paid by the defendant, and costs of the action.

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to supervise the payment of the unpaid minimum wages or the unpaid overtime compensation owing to any employee or employees under section 6 or section 7 of this act, and the agreement of any employee to accept such payment shall upon payment in full constitute a waiver by such employee of any right he may have under subsection (b) of this section to such unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. At the request or with the consent of any employee claiming unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation under section 6 or section 7 of this act, the Secretary may bring an action in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the amount of any such claim. The Secretary may join in one cause of action the claims of any employees similarly situated who consent thereto. The consent of any employee to the bringing of any such action by the Secretary, unless such action is dismissed without prejudice on motion of the Secretary, shall constitute a waiver by such employee of any right he may have under subsection (b) of this section to such unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. Any sums thus recovered by the Secretary on behalf of an employee pursuant to this subsection shall be held in a special deposit account and shall be paid, on order of the Secretary, directly to the employee or employees affected. Any such sums not paid to an employee because of inability to do so within a period of 3 years shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall affect or limit in any way the full equitable jurisdiction of the courts under section 16 of this act.

"INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 16. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of the Territories and possessions shall have jurisdiction, for cause shown, to restrain violations of section 14.

"RELATION TO OTHER LAWS

"SEC. 17. No provision of this act or of any order thereunder shall excuse noncompliance with any Federal or State law or municipal ordinance establishing a minimum wage higher than the minimum wage established under this act or a maximum workweek lower than the maximum workweek established under this act, and no provision of this act relating to the employment of child labor shall justify noncompliance with any Federal or State law or municipal ordinance establishing a higher standard than the standard established under this act. No provision of this act shall justify any employer in reducing a wage paid by him which is in excess of the applicable minimum wage under this act, or justify any employer in increasing hours of employment maintained by him which are shorter than the maximum hours applicable under this act.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 18. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

AMENDMENT OF THE PORTAL-TO-PORTAL ACT OF 1947

SEC. 3. (a) Section 10 (b) (1) of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) in the case of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended—the Secretary of Labor or his duly authorized representative;".

(b) Section 13 (d) of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended', means the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, including the fair labor standards amendments of 1949, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1949, and amendments thereto."

EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN CHANGES

SEC. 4. (a) This act shall take effect upon the expiration of 120 days from the date of its enactment, except that the functions of the Secretary of Labor provided for in the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1949 may be exercised forthwith, and the provisions of section 7 of said act (relating to overtime compensation) shall be in full force and effect from and after the date of enactment of this act.

(b) Any order, regulation, or interpretation of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division or of the Secretary of Labor, and any agreement entered into by the Administrator or the Secretary of Labor, in effect under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 on the date of enactment of this act, shall remain in effect as an order, regulation, interpretation, or agreement of the Secretary of Labor pursuant to this act, except to the extent that any such order, regulation, interpretation, or agreement may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or may from time to time be amended, modified, or rescinded by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the provisions of this act.

(c) No amendment made by this act shall affect any penalty or liability with respect to any act or omission occurring prior to the effective date of this act.

Mr. Speaker, among the things the bill specifically exempts would be all farm operations, farm processing plants, cotton gins, packing sheds, etc. Also rural telephone systems, small sawmills employing less than 16 people which sell their products locally or to final processors within the State. It would exempt weekly and semiweekly newspapers where more than 50 percent of the circulation is within the State of publication. It would exempt that part of sawmill operation which has to do with the growing and harvesting of timber. To do that it treats all timber operation as a farming operation rather than as a manufacturing operation up to the point where the logs are delivered at the mill for processing into lumber.

A number of other businesses are specifically exempted; such as REA electric co-ops, news vendors, and so forth.

It would also exempt from coverage of the act employees of local streetcar and motorbus systems. These receive their franchise from the municipality which also regulates the fares they charge and as a consequence their income. It is better for all parties concerned including the employer, the employee, and the public that wage adjustments be kept on the local level.

Also the bill would exempt seamen, and those engaged in fishery operations, and so forth. Seamen operate under a contract fixing their wages and working conditions. Moreover, the law vests in the Maritime Commission the power and the duty to regulate the wages of seamen.

There are a number of provisions in the bill which I do not have even the time to mention. I trust you will read the bill in the RECORD. Let me say just this in conclusion. I would find it impossible, as I believe many of you would, to support any substantial increase in the minimum wage under the coverage of the existing law or under the bill reported out by the Committee on Education and Labor, H. R. 3190. There are provisions in the existing law, which, by interpretation of the courts and the administrative agencies, could seriously affect many purely local businesses and industries, most of them small. For example, it has been held that the employee of a local guard service supplying night watchmen in a local community are under the wage-and-hour law because the building they guard is occupied by some tenants who are engaged in interstate commerce. It has been held that a local automobile dealer who sells more than 25 percent of his automobiles and trucks to businesses engaged in interstate commerce is under the act.

In short, the present law, as construed by the courts and administrative agencies, could result in sending the wage-and-hour inspectors into almost every community and into every small business and industry throughout the Nation. There is a marginal type of industry in this country in almost every locale which is important and yet which has little impact on the industry of other States. All such industries and all purely intrastate businesses and industries should be left to regulation by the States where it is possible to take local conditions into consideration. The message President Roosevelt sent to Congress in 1937 recommending the enactment of the present wage-and-hour law specifically recommended that that particular field of wage-and-hour regulation be left to the States. Unfortunately, certain language contained in the bill as passed had the opposite effect. The bill I have introduced is a new approach, and, in my judgment, a sound basis for a just and fair minimum-wage law at a sufficiently high level to prevent unfair interstate competition because of the existence of low-wage standards.

The South has a number of marginal industries which developed in the days of economic depression following the Civil War which built up methods of operation that enabled them to survive. They have not yet adjusted themselves to high-wage standards. On the other hand, the new industrial developments in the South have produced types of industries that can and do pay high wages. By making the minimum-wage law applicable to the latter and excluding the former, we make it possible for many of us to support a high minimum wage who otherwise could not. I trust you will find H. R. 4782 to offer a sound approach to the solution of a difficult legislative problem.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a copy of the bill H. R. 4782, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative business and any other special orders that may have been entered, I may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

THE REDWOODS OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a movement on in Washington to semicommunize a large portion of my district. The redwoods of California are the growing wonders of the world. We have set aside 55,000 acres as redwood parks for the enjoyment of the people of the world. Again come the perennial dreamers, who would set up a Federal agency to take over and operate 2,100,000 acres comprising practically all of the commercial timber in my district, to be operated in accordance with policies set up by some Washington bureaucrat.

I want to serve notice that we in my district want no part of this scheme. We can run our own business as we have for the past century and assure you we will develop that great section of California in the good old American way, free from foreign ideologies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

CALIFORNIA POWER PROJECTS

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, Gov. Earl Warren, of California, in a recent speech before the American Public Power Association in Los Angeles, advocated Federal aid for the development of electric power to meet a most extraordinary condition in California. It is hoped Governor Warren in his speech designated the agency of the Federal Government to construct the self-liquidating multiple-purpose hydroelectric power developing dams and reservoirs in California. Governor Warren knows that revenues from power developed by projects built by the Army engineers and marketed under section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 are required by law to be covered into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury; whereas on the other hand, revenues from power created by multiple hydroelectric power developing dams and reservoirs built and operated by the Bureau of Reclamation, and referred to as interest component, can be used to assist in paying off irrigation costs. Without these revenues the burden of irrigation costs to farmers, irrigationists, and water users in the Central Valley project area of California would be doubled if not trebled.

Moreover, Governor Warren should lead the way and make known to certain Representatives in Congress from California, and California State officials, in the strongest possible terms, that they should support and vote for a water and power policy which would inure to the benefit of the farmers and irigationists in the great Central Valley and other sections of the State.

WARREN URGES GREATER PUBLIC POWER OUTPUT

Governor Warren today called for a rapid expansion of California's power development and emphasized it must be done primarily by public agencies.

In an address prepared for delivery before the American Public Power Association in Los Angeles, the Governor declared:

"We are on thin ice and we must have greater power development as rapidly as possible to keep up with our growth.

"The most of this power development must be hydroelectric power and it must be developed by public agencies."

The text of the Governor's address was released in Sacramento.

RECALLS POWER SHORTAGE

The Governor said that last year the State was forced to go on daylight saving time to conserve power. He paid a tribute to the cooperation of all power agencies, public and private, for carrying the State through the crisis.

Warren explained 36 percent of California's electric energy is produced by steam through the use of oil and other fuel. He declared at the present rate of consumption, known oil and gas reserves will last only 20 years.

He stated:

"If we increase this use of oil in the production of electricity, our reserves will be dissipated even earlier than estimated. * * *

"On the other hand, most of our power potential is inseparably connected with water conservation for all purposes; irrigation, flood control, navigation, salinity control, municipal purposes, recreation and conservation of wildlife. It must therefore be developed in projects which serve all the purposes."

PUBLIC UNITS CAN DO JOB

"No private utility has either the means, the jurisdiction, or the urge to do such a job. No private interest could integrate these functions. Only public agencies, acting in cooperation where jurisdictional lines are transcended, can do such a job."

The Governor described the Central Valleys project as an outstanding example of Federal-State cooperation.

"The power developed will process the food products grown, service the cities in the area, and turn the wheels of industry which will provide the jobs for our people," continued the Governor.

He then described the rapid growth of the State, asserting the immigration exceeds the emigration by 20,000 persons a month. He said he believes the State must prepare for an additional 10,000,000 population in the next 25 years.

THREE MILLION FORTY-NINE THOUSAND WORKERS

He pointed out there are 3,049,000 workers in industry in this State compared with 2,047,000 in 1940. On the unfavorable side he mentioned there are 528,000 unemployed, or 14 percent of the State's total working force, which he said is about twice the national percentage.

Unless industry can be developed, he explained, the proportion of jobless may increase.

Again stressing power is the foundation for industry, the Governor concluded:

"Large blocks of power which remain to be developed in California must, of necessity, come from multiple-purpose projects which can only be developed by the public. This power by law and by right must be available to those public agencies which desire to buy it. And we must make this development with dispatch. California's problem is jobs. These jobs must come from industry and industry must have electric power."

He made it clear he is not prejudiced against private power interests and asserted he has great admiration for the accomplishments of the two major private power utilities of the State.

[From the Sacramento (Calif.) Bee of May 12, 1949]

WARREN PROPOUNDS BROAD POWER DEVELOPMENT VIEW

Gov. Earl Warren's view on power development in California and elsewhere, as set forth in an address this week in Los Angeles, are indisputable.

Speaking before the annual convention of the American Public Power Association, the Governor declared:

The greater part of the power development must be in the hydroelectric field.

And it must be by public agencies.

Without any reference to the philosophical side of public power, the Governor's statements make sense.

Power generation, other than by water, must be by steam plants which are fueled by oil or gas.

At the present rate of consumption, the Governor said, the known oil and gas reserves are good for only another 20 years.

Any increase in the use of these fuels in the generation of electricity obviously is going to depiete the reserves that much sooner.

Thus, to employ oil and gas in steam plants when hydro sources are available is an unnecessary use of these resources.

But when the streams are dammed for power generation, many other purposes can and most certainly should be served.

These include irrigation, domestic water supplies, flood control, navigation, recreation, and wildlife preservation.

The public is being short-changed if the State's water resources are not utilized for all of these purposes and to the maximum extent possible.

With reference to the development of all-purpose hydro plants by privately owned utilities, there is a rub.

In this connection, Governor Warren said: "No private utility has either the means, the jurisdiction, or the urge to do such a job. No private interest could integrate these functions. Only public agencies, acting in cooperation where jurisdictional lines are transcended, can do such a job."

When the matter is presented in this light, can there be any doubt as to why the job must be done by public agencies?

Only in this way can the most people derive the greatest number of benefits. And that should be the yardstick.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two letters.

Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a statement of policy on the part of the Los Angeles city school system.

Mr. ENGLE of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. FURCOLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Chicopee, Mass.

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. GORSKI of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the New York Sun.

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in today's proceedings on the rule on the military pay bill immediately following the address made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee (at the request of Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GRANT, for today, on account of official business.

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF MAY 23

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of my good friend, the majority leader, if he will enlighten the House as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday we will take up House Resolution 206, to allow the Committee on Foreign Affairs the ordinary powers of subpena; and also H. R. 3662, authorizing surveys to be made of public buildings projects.

Tuesday: I should like to make the following announcements with reservations with reference to Tuesday, if I may. If a rule is reported out on the displaced-persons bill that may be called up, or the executive pay raise bill, either one, if a rule is reported out; and I make this statement with qualifications.

Wednesday, there will be the memorial exercises.

On Thursday we will consider the pension bill. I have been served notice by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that he will call this up under the rules of the House on Thursday next.

Assuming the pension bill is disposed of on Thursday, if there is any other program next week, I will announce it in due time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman propose that the House meet on Memorial Day a week from Monday next? A good many of the Members are trying to make plans for speaking engagements on that day.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any Member can make whatever plans he desires on that day with the absolute knowledge there will be no legislative business. We might have some Members who would want to make Memorial Day addresses in the House. However, that is a matter on which I will confer with the Speaker and the gentleman from Massachusetts. My only thought is that some Members might like to make memorial addresses here in Washington and they could be given the opportunity to do so on that day, if they wanted to.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have never found any great demand for Members to come up here and deliver a memorial speech in the past.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a matter we can discuss and easily settle in a few seconds.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would much prefer that there be no session on May 30.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the Speaker.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then it is unanimous.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial by Mr. E. F. Tompkins.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address recently made by H. C. Brady at a luncheon of the United States Chamber of Commerce. If this exceeds two pages of the RECORD, I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 20, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear God and Father of us all, with silenced hearts listening for Thy voice, we wait for Thy word. In Thee only do we find light for life's meanings, wisdom for life's questions, strength for its duties, and courage for its unknown ways.

We thank Thee for this new day, a clean white page in the Book of Destiny if we but take it from Thy hand as trustees of Thy unfolding purpose. Strengthen our hearts to follow the gleam of the highest and best we know, 'til the evening comes, and the busy world is hushed, and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then, in Thy great mercy, grant us a safe lodging and holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MYERS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 19, 1949, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF JOINT RESOLUTION

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Concurrent Resolution 34

"Concurrent resolution making application to the Congress of the United States for the elimination of the 15-percent Federal transportation tax on rail, air, and bus transportation

"Whereas the Dominion of Canada has repealed the 15-percent transportation tax on rail, air, and bus transportation in that country and it is now possible for a resident of the United States in the border cities of Detroit, Port Huron, and Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to cross the border into Canada and purchase, tax free, rail, air, or bus tickets between two points wholly within the United States; and

"Whereas numerous Michigan residents engaged in the sale of rail, air, and bus tickets in the border cities of Detroit, Port Huron, and Sault Ste. Marie are now faced with the loss of employment as a result; and

"Whereas the high tax on transportation which in most cases is a necessity, bracketing it with jewelry, fur coats, perfumes, and other luxuries is not equitable; and

"Whereas the transportation tax was enacted largely for the purpose of discouraging travel on the country's overburdened transportation system during the war years and as this condition no longer exists: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the members of the Michigan Legislature request the Congress of the United States to repeal the transportation tax on rail, air, and bus tickets; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

"Adopted by the house April 29, 1949.

"Adopted by the senate May 4, 1949."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"House Concurrent Resolution 30

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to take the necessary steps to secure the establishment of a national cemetery at Fort Custer

"Whereas many families of deceased veterans have expressed their desire to have the deceased members of their families buried in a national cemetery; and

"Whereas the nearest cemetery available for Michigan veterans is in Indiana, which makes it difficult for the family to visit the graves of their loved ones; and

"Whereas a bill has been submitted to the Congress of the United States for the purpose of establishing a national cemetery at Fort Custer, Mich., which location has been recommended because the Veterans' Administration has a small cemetery adjoining the hospital in which a number of veterans have been buried, and considerable vacant land owned by the Government of the United States is available: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the members of the Michigan Legislature respectfully request the Congress of the United States to take suitable action to secure the establishment of a national cemetery at Fort Custer, Mich.; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

"Adopted by the house, April 25, 1949.

"Adopted by the senate, May 4, 1949."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Concurrent Resolution 20

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act so that veterans' readjustment allowances may be extended for at least five additional years after July 25, 1949, as proposed in H. R. 1374 of the Eighty-first Congress

"Whereas section 700 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 provides for the payment of unemployment allowances to the veterans of World War II, and such allowances have been of immeasurable importance in protecting the economic security and welfare of veterans in Michigan and other States; and

"Whereas the Servicemen's Readjustment Act at present provides that such allowances shall be payable for no more than 2 years after the termination of the war, which has been set by Congress for this purpose as July 25, 1947, so that such rights expire on July 25, 1949; and

"Whereas 700,000 Michigan veterans are at present eligible for such allowances, but only 400,000 of these veterans are in employment which qualifies them for unemployment compensation under existing State law; and

"Whereas less than 3 percent of Michigan's veterans have exhausted their entitlement to allowances under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act; and

"Whereas the number of veterans currently receiving such allowances is more than 40,000, representing the highest volume of claims from veterans in the past 2 years, and the number of veterans needing such benefits is expected to increase because of increasing unemployment and completion of school by 42,000 veterans now attending college under Federal legislation; and

"Whereas termination of the servicemen's readjustment allowance program in July 1949 would impose an additional burden of an estimated $20,000,000 per year upon the Michigan unemployment compensation fund, and would at the same time involve an additional loss of some $10,000,000 per year to Michigan veterans not protected by the State unemployment compensation fund; and

"Whereas this situation would create a serious additional burden upon State welfare funds and facilities and upon the veterans' trust fund, and would impair the living standards of veterans entitled to recognition for their services to their country: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the members of the Michigan Legislature do hereby urge and recommend that the Congress of the United States amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act so that veterans' readjustment allowances may be extended for at least five additional years after July 25, 1949, as proposed in H. R. 1374 of the Eighty-first Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

"Adopted by the house March 4, 1949.

"Adopted by the senate May 4, 1949."

INVESTIGATION OF INTERSTATE TRAFFIC IN SUBVERSIVE TEXTBOOKS—PETITION

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference the petition of the Minnesota Society, Sons of the American Revolution, of Minneapolis, Minn., signed by Mott R. Sawyers, president, and Francis E. Olney, secretary, praying for an investigation of the interstate traffic in subversive textbooks and teaching materials, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION FOR REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

We hereby petition for an independent and impartial investigation of the interstate traffic in subversive textbooks and teaching materials as requested in the petitions now on file presented by the National Society and the California Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and we do hereby join in and make ourselves a party to those proceedings.

We request the Congress to grant us all relief possible in this matter by determining the facts and giving them to the people with appropriate recommendations.

Dated this 20th day of May 1949 in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota.

UNIFICATION OF IRELAND—RESOLUTION OF UNITED IRISH SOCIETIES OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the United Irish Societies of Western Pennsylvania, at Pittsburgh, Pa., relating to the unification of Ireland.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Ireland, from the dawn of history, until 1920, was known as one nation. For purposes of local government Ireland was divided into 32 counties; and

Whereas the English Parliament, in 1920, imposed an act of partition upon the Irish people, separating 6 of these counties from the original 32 counties, perpetuating English control and English tyranny over these 6 northeastern counties; and

Whereas the Irish people, at a general election held in 1918 for all 32 counties, voted by a majority of 80 percent to establish one government for all of Ireland; and

Whereas again in 1920 the Irish people, by a majority of 82 percent, voted to have one government for all of the 32 counties of Ireland; and

Whereas the English Government, despite the democratic rights of the Irish people as expressed in 1918 and again in 1920's general elections to have one government for all Ireland, did in 1920 by military force and other coercive methods hold six of the most historic counties of Ireland and continues to hold them off from the rest of Ireland; and

Whereas the United States of America stands for justice among al peoples and for the right of people to govern themselves in accordance with their wishes expressed at elections held according to the fundamental principles of democracy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we American citizens of western Pennsylvania, assembled in the city of Pittsburgh, call upon the Congress of the United State and the President to intercede with the English Government to have its Parliament immediately repeal the 1920 Partition Act, to withdraw all troops, special police, and other armed forces from these six counties so that partition may be peacefully removed: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That we endorse Joint Resolution No. 346, introduced by Congressman THOMAS J. LANE, of Massachusetts, to provide a commission to assist in the unification of Ireland and we will petition our Representatives in Congress and our United States Senators to support this resolution; and be it

Resolved, That we pledge our continued efforts in behalf of complete freedom for Ireland; and be it

Resolved, That we Americans, assembled by the United Irish Societies at Pittsburgh this 18th day of April 1949, are in agreement with President Truman's promise in his inaugural address that the United States will strengthen freedom-loving nations against the dangers of aggression, and with his assertion that "What we have achieved in liberty, we will surpass in greater liberty. Steadfast in our faith in the Almighty, we will advance toward a world where man's freedom is secure."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

S. 1309. A bill granting the consent and approval of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of New Mexico and Texas relating to the waters of the Pecos River; without amendment (Rept. No. 409); and

H. R. 3334. A bill to grant the consent of the United States to the Pecos River compact; without amendment.

By Mr. DOWNEY, from the Committee on Public Works:

S. 1324. A bill to provide for the modification of the Corps of Engineers flood-control project on the Heart River at Mandan, N. Dak.; without amendment (Rept. No. 411); and

S. 1577. A bill to revive and reenact, as amended, the act entitled "An act creating the City of Clinton Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to acquire by purchase or condemnation and to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa, and at or near Fulton, Ill.," approved December 21, 1944; without amendment (Rept. No. 412).

CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING ADJACENT TO MILITARY AND NAVAL INSTALLATIONS—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 1184) to encourage construction of rental housing at or in areas adjacent to military and naval installations, and I submit a report (No. 410) thereon.

The bill was originally introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], for himself, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and myself. The bill, as amended, has the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If I remember correctly, the majority leader stated yesterday that he intended to have a call of the calendar next Monday. Am I correct in that? Can the acting majority leader answer the question?

Mr. McGRATH. I understood the majority leader to say that the calendar would be called at the conclusion of the civil functions appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, because I understood he had plans which might take him from the Senate on Monday or Tuesday, if at sometime today, if it is necessary for him, in his official capacity, to leave the Senate, he will make an observation regarding the bill, because it is my hope that there will be little if any controversy with respect to it, and that it may pass to the calendar in the event the calendar shall be called in the absence of the Senator at sometime this afternoon.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall certainly do so before I leave. I might say to the Senate that the reason I was not present earlier is because the Senator from Nebraska and I were in the Independent Offices Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which is engaged in hearings on the Atomic Energy Commission funds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. With reference to the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from South Carolina, and myself and which has now been reported unanimously, does it contain a provision that any housing which is to be constructed under the bill may be constructed only when there is certification that it is permanent in nature rather than temporary?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is, it is to be constructed at permanent posts, so that the housing shall not be wasted.

Mr. MAYBANK. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland that the principal amendment was in relation to the question of whether the mortgage should be 95 percent or 90 percent. After consultation with Mr. Symington, Mr. Johnson, and the head of the Housing Administration, we reached an agreement on 90 percent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDRICKSON:

S. 1913. A bill for the relief of Adelaide Giovanna Summa; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL HEALTH-INSURANCE AND PUBLIC-HEALTH PROGRAM—AMENDMENT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 1679) to provide a program of national health insurance and public health and to assist in increasing the number of adequately trained professional and other health personnel, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and, without objection, the statement of the Senator from Minnesota will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement presented by Mr. HUMPHREY is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HUMPHREY IN SUPPORT OF AN AMENDMENT PROPOSED BY HIM TO S. 1679, THE NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE AND PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

I am submitting an amendment to S. 1679, the National Health Insurance and Public Health Act, to add to that act in section 742 (a) of title VII, after the word "States", a ninth condition which would provide for the right of any nonprofit association or consumer cooperative to contract with physicians on a mutually satisfactory basis for the furnishing of services to their members.

I believe this amendment to be very vital to the effective operation of S. 1679. There are today restrictions in many States which prevent consumer cooperatives from organizing and operating voluntary prepayment plans. Most of these prohibitions were sought after and obtained by medical associations, and I consider them to be monopolistic and contrary to the public interest.

Consumer-sponsored voluntary plans, through their experience, have shown that they strive to achieve comprehensive health care, preventive medicine, and group medical practices. They have proven their ability to bring more and better health care to the people, particularly in rural areas where there is a shortage of physicians. Rural communities ought to be free, if they choose to organize and set up modern medical workshops and a pool of funds to assure adequate income to physicians as a way of effecting a better distribution of medical care.

Neither the medical societies nor any cooperative plan nor any State can claim to have the blueprint for the best type of local plan. This is a matter for public acceptance. Thus, there should be freedom of opportunity to develop local plans, by whatever sponsorship, and the equal right of any plan to ask for an agreement to operate under the provisions of the law. Needless to say, the State agency will continue to determine the proper standards and will continue to effect agreements with its people about how to render good medical services.

It is important that within the framework of the national health-insurance plan the people should have the right to organize a local plan which will bring the doctors to the people, which will bring the people modern medicine through group medical practice, and which will produce health-conservation programs and comprehensive services.

It is intended that the amendment I propose will serve these needs.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment and an explanatory statement by me be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the amendment and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

AMENDMENT

SEC. 7. Section 350 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended by adding a new subsection as follows:

"(3) Quotas for petroleum and petroleum products to be imported to the United States shall be provided limiting the total quantity imported from all countries, including petroleum and petroleum products purchased abroad for use of the United States Military Establishment and oil for supplies for bunkering vessels at United States ports but excluding oil for manufacture and reexport, in any quarter of a year to an amount not to exceed 5 percent of the domestic demand for petroleum and petroleum products in the United States for the same quarter of the previous year as reported by the United States Bureau of Mines, plus petroleum and petroleum products purchased abroad for use of the United States Military Establishment. Quotas established under this provision may be suspended during any period of inadequacy of petroleum supplies to meet current national consumption."

The statement presented by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA

I have today submitted an amendment that I expect to propose at the proper time when H. R. 1211 comes on for consideration and debate. The subject of this pending legislation is the extension of the President's authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements and to supervise the operation of those previously negotiated.

The amendment which I have submitted provides that the President shall provide quotas on the importation of crude petroleum and petroleum products into the United States, thus limiting the importation of all petroleum to an amount not exceeding 5 percent of our domestic requirements. It provides that such limitation would not be effective during periods of inadequacy of domestic supplies to meet national requirements.

It has been called to the attention of the Congress repeatedly during the past year that imports of petroleum were increasing steadily. This form of injury to the domestic industry has already resulted in the reduction of production in the United States of about 750,000 barrels per day since the beginning of the year.

The Congress must not permit our national safety to be weakened, undermined, or destroyed by the displacement of the oil production of the United States in its own natural markets by importations from abroad.

The talents of the many thousands who work in the oil fields and the refineries of the United States must not be destroyed through lack of opportunity to use them. The employment of Americans in this typically American industry is a large element in our economy.

Transcending all else in importance, however, is the security of our Nation. Increasing dependence for petroleum supplies which are so highly essential to our safety on sources outside the United States, beyond the control of our Government, renders vulnerable the defense program of our Nation. Our safety then becomes dependent upon the slender thread of long water transportation of this essential war material and upon sources which are in considerable part more available to potential enemies than to ourselves.

The economy of a number of our States is based in great measure on the production of crude oil. Thousands of independent producers explore, develop, and produce the oil. Through their efforts the known and available reserves of crude oil in the United States annually grow larger. The distribution of proceeds from the sale of domestic crue oil to farmers, land and royalty owners, annually amounts to many millions of dollars. The economy of these States and the competitive drive and energy of the independent producing, refining, and marketing companies is threatened by the increasing volume of imported oil, controlled by a few large corporations who have daily gained in the power of life and death over the domestic independent industry ever since the close of the war.

In 1929 I began my efforts to prevent the destruction of the independent petroleum producing, refining, and marketing industry of the United States. A duty was placed on imports in 1932. It was a declaration of policy by the Congress that had far-reaching effect. Under the reciprocal-trade-agreements program the schedule of duties has been lowered by 50 percent. It is time for the Congress once more to reaffirm the policy which previously resulted in the maintenance and expansion of the domestic industry and the available reserves of petroleum.

I believe in the theory of the reciprocal-trade program but the program as well as our country may be destroyed if the Congress that provided the authority does not exercise such supervision of its administration as to insure the preservation of the principle that gave it birth.

I conceive it to be the responsibility and duty of the Congress to review the application of this law from time to time so as to preserve not only the intent of Congress but the safety of the Nation.

The oil industry of the United States is now capable of supplying the full requirements of our country. We must not permit it to become so weakened as to render it unable to meet the extreme requirements of a great emergency should one arise.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF ABRAHAM BENJAMIN CONGER TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in accordance with the rules of the committee, I desire to give notice that a public hearing has been scheduled for Friday, May 27, 1949, at 11:30 a. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, upon the nomination of Abraham Benjamin Conger, of Georgia, to be United States district judge for the middle district of Georgia. At the indicated time and place all persons interested in the nomination may make such representations as may be pertinent. The subcommittee consists of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], chairman; the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND]; and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER].

TAFT-HARTLEY DISGRACE—ARTICLE BY A. F. WHITNEY

[Mr. HUMPHREY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Taft-Hartley Disgrace," by A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, from this week's issue of Trainman News, which appears in the Appendix.]

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY FROM FOREIGN IMPORTS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement which I have prepared regarding the protection of American industry from cheap foreign imports.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS ON JAPANESE COMPETITION WITH AMERICAN-MADE GLOVES

I should like to cite an illustration of the problem confronting our Nation in connection with the reciprocal-trade-agreements program and as a matter of fact in connection with our entire United States trade policy with nations, whether or not we have reciprocal trade agreements with them.

Every one of us agrees on the importance of international trade. We do not like to see arbitrarily erected restrictions to hamper trade. We want to see the widest possible commerce between peoples. We believe that international trade improves chances for an enduring peace and for mutual prosperity. We do not want economic isolationism.

WILL OUR ECONOMIC THROATS BE CUT?

At the same time, only a blind Pollyanna would fail to recognize that there is always the danger in many industries that our American workers and our American businesses will have their economic throats cut by cheap foreign imports. Let me cite just one instance. It concerns the American knitted-glove industry.

In 1 year, 1934 to 1935, Japanese imported gloves jumped in totals from 35,000 dozen to over 500,000 dozen, resulting in tremendous damage to the American knitted-glove industry. Today, with Japan seeking her way to reconstruction, seeking to rebuild her industry, to become self-supporting, a parallel situation seems to be developing.

As was shown at hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee, Japanese gloves landing in the United States at $5.80 and $6.04 per dozen would have cost $14.64 and $18.93 per dozen respectively to duplicate here—without adding in the costs of administration, selling, and profit. A third glove exhibit presented at the hearings—machine-made throughout—would have cost $10.53 for direct labor alone in our country against a landed cost of $5.50 for the Japanese glove.

In Japan the domestic male worker earns $9.00 a week compared to our American wages earned here which are obviously far higher. In the knitted-glove industry the labor value represents around 57 percent of the sales value. Obviously, our American gloves cannot possibly compete with these cheap foreign imports, even though we have superior efficiency and workmanship.

SITUATION IN APPLETON

Recently, when I was in Appleton, I discussed this matter with Mr. Robert W. Zwicker, secretary of the Zwicker Knitting Mills, which represents over 25 percent of the productive capacity of the American knit-glove industry. Mr. Zwicker informed me then and in a subsequent communication that it would be impossible for his company and similar American companies to compete with the Japanese, and that our companies would be driven from business in a short time when the volume of Japanese imports climbs to its prewar level. Mr. Zwicker rightly stated to me:

"It is disheartening to me personally, after having spent 37 months in the Pacific combating the Japanese way of life, to return to my business only to find that that way of life is again threatening the security of my family and myself. My Government is supporting this program. The need of rebuilding Japan is recognized, but not at the expense of tearing down American labor and industry. Canada has seen fit to protect its knit-goods industry."

Now, Mr. President, I cite this matter as an illustration of the over-all problem confronting American industry. Mr. Zwicker's comments to me were endorsed by hundreds of letters from workers in his plants and other folks in Wisconsin. Many of them are war veterans. Whether or not, however, they are veterans, they are honest American workers seeking to make a fair living for themselves and asking only that they be given a fair break by their Government.

They are not getting that fair break now. Their very communities are threatened by disaster—mass unemployment.

On contact with the Association of Knitted Glove and Mitten Manufacturers, I find that the association rightfully regards the so-called present escape clause for protection of United States goods as a complete farce. Not a single proclamation by the President for relief of an American industry from ruinous imports has come, although many industries have shown the tremendous damage resulting to them from cheap foreign labor.

DISCUSSION WITH AUTHORITIES IN JAPAN

I have raised this issue with the United States Tariff Commission. I have written to our occupation authorities in Japan, asking them how we can possibly be helping the Japanese by allowing their low standard of living and low standard of wages to continue indefinitely and simultaneously to bring down the American standard of living.

There is no single pat solution to this problem applicable to every industry. I am trying to get the cooperation on the part of United States tariff authorities, the Congress, military authorities in Japan, and other groups interested in the solution of this problem.

We want to be fair to the Japanese people, but our primary obligations are to our own workers and our own businessmen. We dare not sell our own people down the river. The American market—the greatest in the world—belongs primarily to Americans. A strong America is still the strongest possible guaranty of a peaceful world. Destroy American industry and you have taken a step toward the destruction of world peace and prosperity.

I ask my colleagues to review this illustration and to bear in mind that it is duplicated many times by innumerable other instances involving trade with countries in reciprocal-trade treaties. Reciprocity is a wonderful principle if correctly applied, but we have found that many times the only reciprocity is shown by us whereas foreign governments by cartels and other nefarious arrangements have often broken their word.

I submit this question to the administration and to my colleagues. I personally will seek the solution to it and I ask them to give it their own best thinking.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3734) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have all been disposed of. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, I wish to make a brief statement concerning the bill. It deals largely with figures, and I am obliged to use notes. My statement will be very brief. Then Senators may ask questions of me or of other members of the committee, on both sides, and we shall take pleasure in answering them.

First, the total budget estimate for all purposes in the bill was $772,458,220. The House cut the budget estimates before it by $174,440,950, leaving the amount of the bill as it passed the House at $593,292,270. That is the way the bill came to us.

In reaching the $593,292,270 figure, the House deducted 15 percent on construction items, Corps of Engineers. The House based its estimates on an anticipated fall in prices. The House also made a reduction in the bill of $75,000,000 based on its estimate of the unobligated balance of the Corps of Engineers on June 30, 1949. The Senate committee did not agree with the House on estimated unobligated balances, but the Senate committee took the bill up item by item and reported the sum for all purposes, including subsequent budget estimates that were sent in and amendments presented by Senators and others, and reported the bill at $751,440,690, which increased the bill over the House figure by $158,148,420.

But I wish to call the attention of all Senators to the fact that, notwithstanding this increase, the Senate committee, after painstaking hearings covering 15 days and hearing 271 different witnesses, among whom there were some 70 Senators, including those who wrote in behalf of certain projects in their States—and I believe that 59 or 60 Senators appeared in person—has reported a bill which is more than $21,000,000 under the budget estimates.

It is true that the Senate committee differed with the House about straight-across-the-board reduction on construction items, and also did not believe that the House was correct in its estimates of unobligated balances, or that the situation would be seriously changed by a fall in prices. Senators will remember that both those arguments were used in the House of Representatives. With respect to the contention as to a fall in prices, of course, there may or may not be one; I do not know. On the other hand, there may be a rise in prices. That is a matter for the future to determine. However, most of the contracts are continuing contracts which already have been let, and the Government has to pay the amounts stated in them, regardless of a possible fall in prices, because the prices for the work covered by the contracts are already fixed in the contracts themselves, which already have been entered into. When we consider, as we must, that this reduction was applied to all items, including those for continuing construction contracts on which work has already begun, and on which obligations the Government could not reduce the amount provided in the agreements already made, this is particularly evident. So after the full testimony the Senate committee took—the printed testimony comprises a volume several inches thick—it will be seen that we have made a reasonable report to this body, in an amount of $21,017,530 less than the budget estimate.

Incidentally, we not only had to consider the original budget estimate, but other estimates and requests which were brought to the attention of the committee. The amounts involved in all the requests made of the committee aggregated $1,015,182,690. The bill as reported to the Senate reduces that amount to $751,440,690, in round numbers. Subsequent budget estimates came in; but after considering all estimates and requests, the amount covered by the bill as reported to the Senate has been reduced to the figure I have just stated.

I wish to call attention to another thing the Senate committee has done in connection with this bill. As Senators know, most of the river and harbor projects and probably a number of the flood-control projects have been under construction for many years. We found that quite a number of them, to be exact 93, could be completed by means of a comparatively small appropriation at this time. The committee adopted the policy of recommending the appropriation of sufficient money in this bill to permit the completion of those 93 projects. In each case the chairman of the committee or some other member of the committee asked the Corps of Engineers whether they would say that the amount proposed to be appropriated would permit the completion of whichever one of the 93 projects was then under consideration. Although the total for that purpose increases somewhat, the appropriation this year, it will mean economy, in that next year there will be a very much smaller estimate made for deficiencies, when the deficiency bill comes to the Congress.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I notice in the report that the appropriations for the projects to which the Senator has referred result in increasing the total amount only $13,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct, $13,283,700.

Mr. WILEY. I am interested in knowing in a general way how all the other increases came about.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very happy to make a statement in regard to that matter as we go along.

The committee had submitted to it for consideration 149 river and harbor projects. The total requested for all rivers and harbors purposes was $349,095,090. The committee has approved appropriations for 115 river and harbor projects, including construction funds for 97 projects and planning funds for 18 projects. The total amount recommended for all river and harbor projects is $229,606,390, including $145,694,290 for construction and $1,900,000 for planning purposes.

Of course the engineers have to plan these projects in advance, and the amount of almost $2,000,000 is recommended for appropriation by the committee for future planning.

The total of $229,606,390 recommended by the committee for river and harbor projects is $53,064,120 in excess of the amount of $176,542,270 allowed by the House of Representatives, and is $1,608,230 under the 1950 budget estimates of $231,214,620 for rivers and harbors.

As Senators know, the two principal appropriation items covered by this bill are those for river and harbor projects and those for flood-control projects. Under the appropriations for "Flood control, general" the committee had submitted to it for consideration 264 projects. The total requested for all purposes for "Flood control, general" under this bill, was $516,029,600. The committee has approved funds for 242 flood-control projects, including construction funds for 178 projects and planning funds for 64 projects.

The total recommended by the committee for all flood-control projects, under the appropriation "Flood control, general," is $415,084,300, including $400,826,300 for construction and $2,973,000 for planning.

The total of $415,084,300 for "Flood control, general" is $94,084,300 in excess of the amount of $321,000,000 allowed by the House of Representatives, but is $20,578,300 less than the budget estimates of $435,662,600.

I wish to say at this time that not only is the total amount of the bill for all purposes as reported to the Senate by the Appropriations Committee $21,017,530 under the budget estimate, but last year there was appropriated, including the deficiency appropriations, for river and harbor and flood-control and purposes covered by this bill, the sum of $683,000,000, in round numbers. This year the committee has reported a bill increasing that amount by only some $68,000,000 representing the excess over the appropriation made for fiscal year 1949, including deficiencies; and, of course, as Senators know, some of these projects have been under construction for a number of years, as has been the case, for instance, in the McNary Dam project, in Oregon. For several years that project, like hundreds of others, has had an increased appropriation each year. After the projects reach a certain point the appropriations begin to decrease. We are closing up entirely 93 projects the next fiscal year. I confidently expect that next year there will be a reduction in the appropriation. It will probably be small, but the reduction will become larger as the years go by.

Thirty million dollars was requested for the McNary project last year. Forty million dollars is requested the fiscal year 1950, from which it will be seen that the project, like several others, is continuing to grow.

In making these comparisons with the pending bill we are using last year's figures. The bill has not yet been finally passed. It must go to conference, where, as we know, there is always a system of give and take. The amount actually appropriated by the law will not be as great as the amount stated in the bill as passed by the Senate.

While there are able engineers in the Engineering Department of the Government, taking it by and large, Senators themselves keep remarkably well informed regarding the projects in their own States. Anyone who doubts that need only read the great volume of testimony taken by the committee, which will show that what I say in that regard is true.

In my judgment, the bill as finally agreed upon by both Houses in conference will be satisfactory to all who believe in economizing at this time. I believe in economy as much as anybody else in the country. We ought to cut down the appropriations wherever possible, and it is my purpose to cut them down in the regular, ordinary, and proper way. I do not believe in percentage cuts, but I believe that, to use an old expression, we should cut the garment according to the cloth; in other words, we should at this time cut our appropriations to meet the revenues which come into the Federal Treasury, without having to increase taxes.

I now desire to call attention for a moment to the appropriation for "Flood Control, Mississippi River and Tributaries." As Senators know, this is a very great flood-control undertaking, the appropriation for it is the third largest one in the bill. The budget estimate for the fiscal year 1950 for this item is $70,000,000. Last year, $61,000,000 was appropriated for it. For the fiscal year 1950 the House allowed $63,000,000, a difference of $7,000,000 below the budget estimate. However, the Senate committee received requests totaling $104,000,000. The committee favorably reported the $70,000,000 as recommended by the budget, and $3,500,000 additional for two other items. One in the amount of $500,000 is for a project known as the Devil's Swamp project in Louisiana. The remaining $3,000,000 was a general increase allowed for construction.

That, I believe, is about all I have to say, except I think there should be placed in the RECORD a full statement of the sums appropriated for the lower Mississippi River. I ask unanimous consent to have the statement included in my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLOOD CONTROL, MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES

For the separate appropriation in the bill "Flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries," the budget estimate is in the amount of $70,000,000, and the House allowed an appropriation of $63,000,000. In the course of its hearings, the committee had presented to it requests under this appropriation totaling $104,500,000.

The committee has approved an appropriation in the amount of $73,500,000. This action has been taken with the understanding that $70,000,000, which is the amount of the budget estimate, will be allocated by the Corps of Engineers in accordance with the allocation submitted to the committee by the Corps of Engineers, which allocation is shown in column 5 of the table below.

Of the $3,500,000 increase recommended by the committee above the 1950 budget estimate, $500,000 is for the Devil's Swamp project, Louisiana, and the remaining $3,000,000 for construction is to be allocated by the Corps of Engineers.

The following table sets forth, by phases of this work, the amounts of the budget estimate, the amounts under the House as allocated by the Corps of Engineers, and the amounts recommended by the Senate committee:

Mr. WILEY. The statement covers what period of time?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is for the next fiscal year.

Mr. WILEY. Is it a statement of the sums included in the pending bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. The items which are included in the bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, for many reasons this is a very important bill, one of the most important that will come before the Senate. It is a bill in which every State in the Union is interested. They are always interested in it, and they have been for many years. It is a matter of vital interest to the people of the entire country. Our committee has worked faithfully for more than 2 months on the bill. We have examined each item. We have had before us representatives of the Corps of Engineers and all those who were interested in the various projects. We have presented to the Senate the very best report possible. We have given due regard to the economies of the situation. We believe there are no extravagances in the bill. It has been reported practically unanimously.

I understand the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] intends to offer an amendment calling for a 5-percent cut. That is all right. The Senator and I differ about it. I differ with him, he differs with me very strongly on that point. We frequently differ about such things. That has been especially true in the consideration of appropriation bills at the present session of the Congress.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Michigan are, however, still friends, are they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are still friends. I think the committee should be upheld in the careful work it has done. Excusing myself, I think there is no better committee in the Senate or in the Congress than the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. I need not name the members of the committee, because Senators know them all. They are fair and just men, on both sides of the aisle. I believe what we have done in the matter of the civil functions bill is about as good as could be done. I have not agreed with everything. Some projects have received larger appropriations than they should have received, perhaps; but, all in all, it is a good bill. It is a bill for the benefit of the country. Every dollar is to be spent in the United States or its possessions. It will help the Nation, and it ought to be passed, in my judgment. The great West is interested in it, the great East is interested in it, the southern section of the country is interested in it, the central section of our country is interested in it. I believe that, when the Senate comes to consider it carefully, it will vote to pass the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. I hope that will be done.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted, as a part of my remarks, the tables beginning on page 22 of the committee report and continuing to the end of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[4] $200,000 for planning allowed by House shows under "Alabama," construction table.
[5] Includes $9,000 for maintenance dredging at Havre de Grace, Md., and $400,000 for realinement of authorized channel of the Hudson River in the vicinity of Kingston, N. Y.
[6] Includes $496,000 for Gulfport Harbor, Miss., included in bill on House floor and carried in separate paragraph in bill, leaving in the lump-sum appropriation for "Rivers and Harbors" as passed by House $176,034,270 and the amount of the lump-sum appropriation for "Rivers and Harbors" as recommended by the committee, $229,098,290. These totals exclude the item for "alteration of bridges," for which the House allowed no appropriation and the Senate committee recommends $100. They also exclude $12,000 allowed by the House and approved by the Senate committee for "miscellaneous civil works."

ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the 1950 budget was transmitted to the Congress last January. At that time there were prepared nine charts explanatory of it. I have one of the charts on the easel which is before the Senate, and I should like to discuss it briefly.

The title of the chart is "The Budget Dollar for the Fiscal Year 1950." The chart is made up of estimates as to the source of the money and where it will go. The left side of the chart indicates that it was then estimated by the Bureau of the Budget that 43 cents of each dollar available for budgetary purposes would come from direct taxes on individuals. Twenty-eight cents of the budget dollar would come from direct taxes on corporations. Nineteen cents of that dollar would come from excise taxes. Eight cents would come from customs and other taxes, and 2 cents was to come from new taxes. The 2 cents amounts to about $850,000, which was the sum estimated to be required to balance the budget.

It will be remembered that the President recommended that new taxes be levied to the extent of $4,000,000,000. It was expected that approximately half of the $4,000,000,000 would be collected in the fiscal year 1950 and the remaining $2,000,000,000 in the following fiscal year, and that the money so collected would be principally applied to reducing the national debt.

On the other side of the chart it is indicated where the money will go. It shows that 34 cents of each 1950 budget dollar is for national defense. That will amount to $14,300,000,000. The budget estimate was $13,100,000,000 for the National Military Establishment, $525,000,000 for stock piling strategic and critical materials, and $600,000,000 for beginning universal military training. The House of Representatives, in its wisdom, transferred that $600,000,000 to the Air Force so that the actual appropriations for all of the armed services as they have come to the Senate amount to $13,700,000,000.

The next item is labeled International, and consists of 16 percent of the total estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year. The amount of money involved is $6,700,000,000. Of that sum the European Recovery Administration, in order to carry out the Marshall plan, will require approximately four and a half billion dollars. For the expenses of Government and for relief of distress in Japan, Germany, and other occupied areas, an additional $1,000,000,000 is required. There are other expenses of approximately a billion dollars, which make up the total.

The next 1950 budget item is 13 cents from each dollar for veterans' programs. That amounts to five and a half billion dollars which will be somewhat less than during the present fiscal year. Of that sum $2,000,000,000 is payable in pensions, and another $2,000,000,000 is to pay the expenses of the training and educational courses which veterans are now taking.

That is an expenditure which will be further reduced as time goes on, because the law providing for such education and training will soon expire. It may be looked upon as a capital investment, in the sense that men who are well trained and educated earn more money. I remember that former Senator Brooks of Illinois, once stated that he was a beneficiary of an educational course which enabled him to become a lawyer after he came out of the First World War, but that the fees he had earned and the taxes he had paid had many times repaid the Government for the cost of his education. The next item on the chart is 13 cents of the budget dollar which is applied to interest on the public debt. It amounts to $5,450,000,000. At the outbreak of the Second World War the national debt was approximately $50,000,000,000. There has been added to it more than $200,000,000,000 since 1941. The payment of the interest on the debt is a must. There is no getting away from it. We must maintain the credit of the United States, we must pay the interest on the debt, and we are fortunate indeed that the debt has been so managed that the interest rates have not been as high as some people expected they would be.

Add up the four categories of expenditures that I have mentioned, 34 cents for national defense, 16 cents for international costs, 13 cents for veterans, and 13 cents for interest on the public debt, and we have 76 cents, or 76 percent of all the expenditures estimated in the 1950 budget, due either to a war we have finished or to fear that we may become involved in another war.

If we did not have that burden to bear, certainly the other side of the picture would be very different. We now have double taxation, in that taxes are twice paid on the profits of corporations. First, when they declare a dividend and it is paid to a stockholder, as an individual he pays a second tax on the same money. If we did not have the burden of 76 percent of the budget being required for wars, past or future, the American people would not have to endure double taxation. Congress certainly would be able very promptly to reduce excise taxes. The only excuse for double taxation, the only excuse for the excise taxes, is that Uncle Sam must have the money in order to balance the budget. If we could reduce the war expenditures, tax reduction would follow automatically.

Now we come to the remaining 24 cents of the budget dollar which is available for expenditure.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield before he gets to the remaining 24 percent of the budget?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator is familiar, is he not, with the testimony given before the Committee on Armed Services by former President Hoover relative to the unification of the armed services, namely, that in his judgment a substantial saving, which might be from a billion and a half to two billion dollars, might be effected out of the $15,000,000,000 if duplication could be eliminated? The Senator also is familiar with the fact, I assume, that the former Secretary of the Army, Mr. Royall, testified before the Committee on Armed Services that if a unification bill, similar to the one which is now pending, had been passed earlier it was his judgment that at least a billion dollars a year could have been saved during the past several years, and that without doing anything that would have been detrimental to the security of the country.

I merely mention that because apparently the Senator has included the entire $15,000,000,000 budget estimate of the Department of National Defense as being in the category of an estimate from which reductions could not be made. I do not think it necessarily follows that that item is precisely in the same category with interest on the national debt, for instance, which I think we all agree could not be reduced.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I was not so fortunate as to hear the testimony before the Committee on Armed Services. I have read about it, and appreciate the reference the Senator has made. I am merely pointing out at this time what the Bureau of the Budget sent to the Congress as of last January, and what the break-down is. We have already made one contribution toward economy, that is, the Senate has not appropriated as much as was recommended by the Budget, and it does not necessarily follow that we will do so in other instances. But I thought Senators would be interested in the broad proposition that 76 percent of the entire budget is due to the expenditures caused by past wars or by our fear of a future war, and that there remains but 24 cents of the budget dollar available for other purposes. Of that 24 cents, 6 cents, as shown on the chart, is for social welfare, health, and security. That amounts to $2,400,000,000, and of that sum $1,100,000,000 is for grants to States. Congress has passed laws granting aid to the States for old-age assistance, for aid to the blind, for the care of crippled children, and whenever a State complies with the Federal law, automatically the Treasury of the United States pays out the money. Until the basic law is changed, Congress itself has no control over the expenditures. Certainly the Bureau of the Budget has not.

The next category set forth on the chart is 5 cents of the budget dollar for development of natural resources which amounts to $1,900,000,000. The principal items in it are, first, for the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, $725,000,000. Next is flood control, which is included in the bill now pending before the Senate, $481,000,000. The next feature is for the reclamation of arid lands, including the development of multiple purpose power projects, $340,000,000. Such expenditures appear to me to be fully justified even in larger sums, since all of them are wealth-producing in character. It makes no difference whether water is kept off vast areas of the fine farming land in the Atchafalaya Basin in Louisiana, or whether water is applied to thirsty acres in the Columbia Basin in Washington; in each case new wealth is created, valuable property is preserved, and from which revenue is obtained to help balance the budget. There are two ways of balancing the budget, one by cutting down expenditures, the other by increasing revenues.

There is included in this category a total of $300,000,000 for the Forest Service, the Bureau of Mines, Fish and Wildlife Service, the Bonneville project, the Tennessee Valley Authority. The sum of all those activities amounts to 5 cents out of the budget dollar.

The remaining 13 cents, under the heading "All others," amounts to $5,600,000,000. The break-down of that is, for the Department of Agriculture and its action programs, $1,700,000,000. For Civil Aeronautics, $198,000,000. For river and harbor improvements by the Corps of Engineers, included in the pending bill, $209,000,000. For Federal aid to highways, $501,000,000, and for the postal deficit, $402,000,000. Other items, to finish out the $5,600,000,000 include housing, education, research, and the general governmental expenditures.

There are two particular items in this last 13 percent of the budget estimates which are substantial, one the Federal-aid highway appropriations and the other the river and harbor expenditures, which come under the head of transportation improvements.

It is to the glory of this country industrially that it is possible to move a commodity from a place where it is produced to a place where it is needed in less time and for less money than anywhere else in the world. The budget estimate of $500,000,000 for Federal aid to highways represents as fine an investment as any government could possibly make, and is badly needed now, because our highways were sadly neglected during the war. There are now being delivered from the automobile factories millions of new cars to further crowd the roads. Soon we will be at the place where, if better roads are not provided, the automobile companies will not be justified in producing more cars and trucks.

As to rivers and harbors, the testimony before the committee was perfectly clear that with the increased size of ships, particularly oil tankers, many vessels are unable to get into the ports with the present depth provided in the channels. In many instances a great tanker loaded with oil needed by the manufacturing plants in a city will lie off a port, and part of its cargo will be taken away in barges in order that the tanker can float into the harbor and be docked and the remaining cargo discharged.

The extra cost of maintaining the tanker, and the time lost in that connection, all must be borne by the manufacturers using the oil in the city where it is needed. It certainly is a sound Government investment to make improvements of that kind.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. And in turn such extra expenses must be added to the cost to the consumer.

Mr. HAYDEN. The added expense must be applied in one of two ways: Either to the cost to the consumer, or by the manufacturer making less profit than he would otherwise make and on which he would pay taxes to the Federal Government.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator made the point a while ago about the advantages of spending funds for expanding our road system so as to assure a continuation of the manufacture of automobiles and other vehicles which require good roads for the transportation of persons and commodities. Is it not also true that the expenditure of money now being asked for to develop our natural resources is really the thing which makes our country click; that without the preservation and development of our natural resources, this great country will sooner or later die on the vine? Is that not true?

Mr. HAYDEN. There can be no question about that at all. I have a theory that all wealth comes out of the ground. Either a crop is grown which is sold on the market place or ore is mined, smelted, and made into articles of value. The work that is done and the expenditures that are made for the original production and the procurement of raw materials gives employment in the ratio of 6, or 8, or 10 persons for every 1 who produces from the ground, the other persons being employed in the manufacturing, the handling, or marketing of products. Unless we develop our natural resources, which are the original wealth of the country, the Nation cannot continue to grow and prosper.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator from Arizona is certainly expressing my own sentiments at the moment. I have been quite amused in the last week or two to notice that many commentators, columnists, and editorial writers in the press have reverted to the old slur, which is now practically worn out, "pork-barrel legislation," when they speak with reference to the pending measure. Those individuals ground this term "pork" into sausage many years ago and tried to feed it to the American people. They stated that all legislation dealing with river and harbor improvements and flood control represented nothing but pet projects for Members of Congress; that the improvements were of the pork-barrel variety. Well, the American people would not eat it then, and now it is again being offered in decayed form by prejudiced individuals who are undertaking to feed that dish to the public at a time when we should be doing just what the Senator from Arizona says we should be doing, that is, try to conserve and develop the natural resources of the country for future wealth, for future profits, for future jobs, for future security.

I wish to say to the able Senator and to all my colleagues that security for the individual does not come primarily by way of grants-in-aid and by way of pensions and by way of Federal gratuities. The present security of the American people and the security of the next generation and following generations must come as a result of prosperity which is based upon enlarged production and opportunities for jobs and opportunities to create national wealth.

In the bill before us we are simply undertaking in part to finance the development of our natural resources for the benefit, for the convenience, and for the support and sustenance, not only of the present generation, but of the next generation that is to follow.

I wonder, Mr. President, whether the columnists and editors, those who would try to poison the public mind against these worth-while projects, would not be doing their country and the security of our Nation a great disservice if they succeeded in misleading the people by the lack of truth in their statements. Why do they not tell the American people the real truth about the matter? The truth is that the American people already know the right and the wrong of the matter. I am pretty much persuaded when I read some of this propaganda which appears by some columnist in the press today that the authors of it either are plain dumb or they are like the old farmer's mule that kept butting his head against a tree, although he was not blind. He simply and plainly just did not give a d——.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his interruption in my remarks, because I thoroughly concur in all he has said.

The Senator from Arkansas spoke of the security of the United States. We worry about having trouble with foreign countries; I may be entirely mistaken but I believe that when any foreign power thinks about making war upon us what gives them pause is the productive capacity of the United States. We have demonstrated in two great wars that, if required, the American people can turn to the production of armament and equipment for war on a scale that can be matched by no other nation. On top of that we can furnish more intelligent soldiers and sailors to do our fighting than can any other nation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The distinguished Senator from Arizona was a most diligent attendant at all the hearings of the subcommittee considering the bill. Can the Senator point to one project presented to the subcommittee, which was not worthy, and which, if undertaken, would not assist in developing our resources and protecting them for our future use.

Mr. HAYDEN. I only wish that a number of the columnists and editorial writers who criticize the Committee on Appropriations had taken the time to attend the hearings to listen to the arguments presented and the facts submitted as to the merits of these flood-control and river and harbor projects. It was not that the committee was hunting around for some kind of pork to hand out. We had to make a deliberate choice between projects of great merit to determine which were the most important and most urgent, and which could come within a limited sum of money.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. As was pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the requests aggregated a total in excess of $1,000,000,000. Can the Senator tell us where this money could be better spent than on projects which were asked for by the witnesses who appeared before the committee?

Mr. HAYDEN. There can be no question about the merit of the projects adopted by the committee. We could have adopted projects which would have used up the whole $1,000,000,000 which was requested, and could have justified our action, except that it would have meant putting the budget out of balance. We determined to stay within the budget, and the committee reported the pending bill containing an amount less than the budget estimate. To do that we had to make these selections. Every one of them is fully justified, and could be replaced, perhaps, by other projects equally meritorious. But these projects were recommended by the Corps of Engineers after careful study and investigation. The committee, after listening to all the evidence, approved the projects contained in the bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I should like to show to the Senator from Arizona and to other Senators the volume of proof which was taken by the committee. It contains 1,798 pages of closely printed proof, as can be seen. Every single project was gone into with the most meticulous care. It seems to me the committee has made a very wise determination in each case.

I appeal to Senators who believe in building up our common country to consider seriously the statement just made by the Senator from Arizona, that the projects we have reported are worthy in every sense, and that the money is going to be well spent, and spent for the upbuilding of the country, and not for wild harum-scarum schemes such as have often been presented to the Congress.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I wonder if the Senator would be good enough to go into a little detail as to how the committee screened all those projects. It will be recalled, as brought out by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, that the House appropriated $593,000,000 plus, for these various projects. As I stated, the requests were in excess of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. As the Senator will remember, the committee made the suggestion that we call in the engineers and ask them to determine where $150,000,000 plus in addition to what the House appropriated could be best spent. As the Senator will recall, we placed before them two separate figures in addition to that of the House, one of $741,377,000 and the other of $841,377,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is to say, the committee asked the Corps of Engineers again to review the estimate in the President's budget, and then take a second look to see what could be done if we went $100,000,000 above it. But the committee did not exceed the budget figure.

Mr. ELLENDER. We asked the engineers to again screen the projects with a view of doing the most good with a specific amount of money that we suggested, and following that course the committee proceeded to write up the bill which resulted in agreement on the bill now under consideration.

Mr. HAYDEN. Based upon the latest information they had from their field forces.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator.

While I am on my feet, may I further indulge on the Senator's time. I would like to call the attention of Senators to one project in particular in the State of Louisiana which is of the utmost importance to thousands of families. It affects some of the finest agricultural land in the Nation. I refer to the Atchafalaya River Basin. Back in 1928 an over-all plan for controlling the Mississippi River was approved by the Congress. As a result of that plan, and subsequent appropriations by the Congress, the United States engineers have built a vast system of levees up and down the Mississippi River and its tributaries. It has shortened the course of the great Mississippi River by 150 miles, so as to hasten the flow of floodwaters to its lower stretches. The system of dams, levees, cut-offs, and other works will take care of a designed flood of 3,000,000 second-feet at the latitude of Angola, La.

As I have said, adequate protection is to be given to the entire Mississippi River Basin under the engineers' plan, and all of these floodwaters, in the event of a major flood, will be contained within the banks of the Mississippi River and brought down by a system of levees to find their way eventually to the Gulf of Mexico. However, below Angola, La., the Mississippi River cannot take over 1,500,000 second-feet, or one-half the discharge of a designed flood of 3,000,000 second-feet. The other half of these waters must be diverted through the Atchafalaya River Basin. Two fuse plugs, the Morganza and West Atchafalaya Floodways, will be breached in the event the flow of waters exceeds 2,200,000 second-feet. The engineers have planned guide-line levees on each side of these floodways, to contain the waters until they reach the Gulf. But those guide-line levees are not yet completed. In the event of a major flood, all of this water from the upper stretches of the Mississippi and its tributaries will be dumped on this section of Louisiana. If this should ever happen, there will be millions of dollars of property damaged, with the possibility of heavy loss of life, not to mention the inevitable suffering and hardship that will be imposed on the people living in that area.

Mr. President, that is why I plead so hard with members of the Appropriations Committee to increase the funds allocated to the Atchafalaya River Basin. And I am pleading today with members of the Senate not to disturb this project, and not to disturb the hundreds of other worth while and essential projects that are located elsewhere in my State and in practically every State in the Nation.

The United States engineers testified before the committee that approximately $50,000,000 is required to complete these two floodways. Five million one hundred and forty thousand dollars is included in the pending bill, and in addition the committee approved $3,000,000 to be allocated by the Chief of Engineers. I am very hopeful that this money will be used to hasten completion of the Atchafalaya project. At the rate of $5,000,000 a year, it will require 10 years to finish this essential link in the Mississippi River flood-control plan. With the aid of the additional $3,000,000, which as I stated I hope will be used on the Atchafalaya, the work could be completed in 6 years if future appropriations are maintained on the same level. Both General Feringa and General Pick testified that the Atchafalaya floodway projects are of the utmost importance to the entire Mississippi River flood-control plan—using the words of Generals Feringa and Pick, "you cannot have flood control until you have the Atchafalaya floodways completed."

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with a discussion of other essential projects in the State of Louisiana and in other States for which funds are provided in the pending bill. I merely want to point out this one example of the essential nature of the projects that were approved by our committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, by authority of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 7, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the project for Oklahoma City authorized in the Flood Control Act of 1946 is hereby modified to provide for construction of the canal plan as presently proposed by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated Federal cost of $10,460,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FERGUSON. What was the amendment which was agreed to? I did not hear the Chair state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. May we have it stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk stated it at the time it was offered. It will be stated again. However, it has already been agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 7, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the project for Oklahoma City authorized in the Flood Control Act of 1946 is hereby modified to provide for construction of the canal plan as presently proposed by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated Federal cost of $10,460,000.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I do not yield for that purpose. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I shall be glad to join with him in a request for reconsideration as soon as I have completed a brief statement on the bill. In explanation of the item which he is discussing, I will say that it does not increase the appropriation. It merely authorizes the project to be built for the benefit of Oklahoma City in a different way than was originally authorized.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is also legislation on an appropriation bill, is it not?

Mr. GURNEY. That is correct.

Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly about the civil-functions bill. The appropriations carried in this bill which affect the seven States in the Missouri River Valley are very important to all the people in those seven States. We feel that it is absolutely mandatory to continue this development of the river in an orderly fashion so that the potential benefits which have been flowing by our door for many, many years, will become a reality. I suspect that any statements I might make about the items for projects within our territory would be similar to the statements which might be made by any other Member of this body with respect to a project in his particular State.

I have taken a great deal of interest in the subject of wealth-producing projects, such as are provided for in this bill. Last fall I took occasion to spend about 6 weeks visiting many of these projects. I traveled literally from border to Gulf, starting in Montana and following the river systems down to Louisiana. I inspected the work on the Mississippi River, and projects for hydroelectric power and flood control in the States of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas, Texas, and other States. I observed the operations of locks in the river system, including those at Keokuk, Iowa, on the Mississippi. From such an inspection of projects—and I urge every Member of the Senate to make such a trip whenever he can—one returns with a conviction that Congress appropriates money for no more worthy purpose, insofar as benefits to all the people are concerned, than for the construction of these wealth-creating projects.

Now and then I hear criticism by Members of Congress from States which do not have large projects—especially States in the eastern part of the country. The Government of the United States helped to develop the eastern part of the United States for 100 years before the West was truly settled. Now it is proper and desirable for the country as a whole that the Federal Government assist in developing the natural resources in our territory, and especially in the Dakotas through which flows one of the greatest untapped sources of electric power in the world today. We have a great need for the development of the Missouri and tributary rivers.

It has been said many times on the floor of the Senate that we are short of electricity—and that is painfully true. Our farmers are operating with less electricity than are the farmers in any other section of the country. The Dakotas have been appearing on the list in forty-seventh and forty-eighth place. Great strides are being made in the direction of correcting that situation. Nevertheless, electricity will not be available until it is generated—and it will not be generated in substantial quantities until the projects included in this bill are completed.

I have sat with the committee considering flood control and river and harbor work for more than 6 years. I feel that we are presenting to the Senate today a plan of construction which we can unreservedly support. This is not a "pork barrel" bill and our committee can furnish any Senator with convincing evidence that it is not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Hill	Murray
Baldwin	Hoey	Myers
Brewster	Holland	Neely
Bridges	Humphrey	Reed
Butler	Ives	Robertson
Byrd	Jenner	Schoeppel
Cain	Johnson, Colo.	Smith, Maine
Chavez	Johnson, Tex.	Sparkman
Connally	Kefauver	Stennis
Cordon	Kem	Taft
Donnell	Kilgore	Taylor
Douglas	Knowland	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Lodge	Thomas, Utah
Eastland	Long	Thye
Ellender	Lucas	Tydings
Ferguson	McCarthy	Vandenberg
Graham	McClellan	Watkins
Gurney	McKellar	Wiley
Hayden	Maybank	Williams
Hendrickson	Morse	Withers
Hickenlooper	Mundt

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to call up the amendment which is printed as amendment A, and which I think is on the desks of all Senators. It is an amendment to the pending bill, H. R. 3734.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 406. (a) The Secretary of the Army, with respect to appropriations made in this act, is authorized and directed to make such reductions in the total appropriations contained in this act as will cause the total so appropriated to be not greater than $450,000,000, making a reduction of $301,440,690 in the amounts recommended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. The Secretary of the Army, with approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, shall have the power to eliminate completely appropriations for certain projects and to reduce others by such amounts as he may deem proper.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like, if I may, to call the attention of the Senate to a few simple facts. The Appropriations Committee is asking us to spend $751,000,000 next year for rivers, harbors, and flood control. This is over a hundred million dollars more than was appropriated last year. It is $158,000,000 more than was appropriated by the House. It is only twenty-one million, or 3 percent, less than the amount submitted in the budget.

I think we all know that this is the bill upon which we can save tremendous amounts of money if we really want to do so. In the old days, when I first began to read the congressional debates, this historic bill was called the rivers and harbors bill. It was also commonly, if irreverently, referred to by the people as "the pork barrel." It was commonly believed that sufficient fat chunks of appropriations were passed around among the various districts and States to insure its passage.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say to the Senator from Louisiana, I have a very brief speech, which I shall finish in about 4 or 5 minutes, after which I shall be very glad indeed to endeavor to answer any questions the Senator may desire to ask.

This bill is now being marketed within a comparatively new package. It is no longer labeled the rivers and harbors bill, but about a quarter of a century ago its name was changed, and it has now become the civil functions of the Department of the Army bill. This has a very impressive and dignified sound, but when the new wrapping is peeled off I have a very real feeling that, however succulent the slices, it is still the same old bologna.

Since we are now heading for a budgetary deficit of at least three to four billion dollars a year, this is our chance to make big savings. I urge, therefore, that we cut these appropriations by 40 percent, or by approximately $300,000,000, to a total of $450,000,000, and that we give the Secretary of the Army and the Director of the Budget Bureau the responsibility for making these cuts.

The appropriation of $450,000,000 which I am proposing would permit work to be continued on the $300,000,000 of projects which are now under construction; it would provide the estimated $75,000,000 for operation and maintenance; and then, in addition, it would leave $75,000,000 for new projects. I submit that it is better to postpone the rest, principally in the field of flood control, to a depression period when the projects will be just as useful as now, but when they will be more needed.

Perhaps one final comment will be pardoned. It is unfair of the press primarily to blame Congressmen and Senators for this patchwork of projects representing a pooling of political strengths. The demand for these juicy appropriations comes in fact from the business groups back home organized into their various associations. These gentlemen will commonly meet one day and pass a resolution that Government expenditures should be cut to the bone and that the budget be balanced, and will write irate letters to their Senators to that effect. They are especially insistent that in order to avoid bankruptcy we must cut out all appropriations for housing and education. Then, the next day, they will want their water front improved, and they will begin to turn the heat on us here in Washington for big appropriations for relatively nonessential projects. Of course, these groups are not alone in exhibiting this split personality. Nearly all groups in the Nation seem to have it. They want economy on the other fellow's projects, but they want big appropriations for their own.

But this is just the type of action which, if we yield to it, will land us in disaster. The time to save is now, and the place, above all others, is here. There are huge quantities of fat in this bill. Let us build a hot fire and fry out three hundred millions of the fat. I, therefore, call up and urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Senator be kind enough to point out just one piece of fat?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to move toward the Senator from Arizona with an atlas.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Senator point out one particular piece?

Mr. DOUGLAS. In the appropriation for the State of Maine, which is the State in which I grew up, there is an item, it is true, of not many thousands of dollars, but I think $33,000 for the Josias River. I had never known of the Josias River, though my family has been a searfaring family along the coast of Maine for some 300 years. I have searched most zealously with a magnifying glass to find the Josias River somewhere. It may be it is a popular term for some other river, but I am unable to find it, and I should like the distinguished Senator from Arizona to look at the atlas with a magnifying glass and see whether he can find it.

There is also an appropriation for Cape Porpoise, Maine. Cape Porpoise is barely visible with the magnifying glass. I have summered near Cape Porpoise. I should not say it was such a seaport that it needed harbor facilities. What I am a little bit afraid of is that this may be a measure to provide moorings for summer yachts and motorboats.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator read the hearings on those two items?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should be glad to have the Senator show them to me.

Mr. LONG. Personally I do not know them. I think probably hearings have been held on all items.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have hunted for them in the hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have here the justification. First, I want to say that both the Senators from Maine came before the committee and testified as to the necessity and value of this work. I now read the justification:

Josias River is a small stream running through Flat Pond to Perkins Cove, which is the harbor for Ogunquit, a village on the coast of Maine 30 miles southwest of Portland. The project provides for a channel 5 feet deep and 40 feet wide in the Josias River from that depth in Perkins Cove to and including an anchorage basin of the same depth and about 3.2 acres in area in Flat Pond.

A condition survey was made in 1946 to determine the amount of material to be removed by the United States. Local interests have expended about $35,000 in dredging and have completed such portion of the project as is necessary to meet this feature of the requirements of local cooperation. There remains about 24,000 cubic yards of mud, sand, and gravel to be removed. No actual construction has been undertaken by the United States. The allocation of $33,500 for fiscal year 1950 will be applied to dredging the anchorage basin and approach channel.

Justification: Since preparation of the project document, local interests have expended $35,000 toward accomplishment of the project. This feature was taken into consideration in the authorizing act which provided that useful work done on the project by local interests should be accepted toward the fulfillment of the required local cooperation. In view of the considerable expenditure by local interests and of the benefits which will accrue to the fishing and other boats, the Federal share of the project should be carried out at an early date. The total value of all fish landed is reported to have been $93,000 in 1946 and in excess of $100,000 in 1947.

Those were the facts which the committee had before it, and upon those facts, with the additional recommendation of the two distinguished Senators from Maine, the committee allowed the project; and I think the committee was right.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for the information on this project. I think the same thing could be said regarding 20,000 other communities in the Nation.

I am still looking with a magnifying glass to find the Josias River, and I am unable to find it. I should be very glad to have some other Senator look through the glass to see if he can find it. It so happens that I spent two vacations at Ogunquit many years ago, and I have a vague recollection of a very small stream running out of an inland pond. It is my suspicion that probably the people there want a fresh-water anchorage for the motorboats and sailboats of the summer residents.

Does the Senator want more illustrations? I wonder how important Cape Porpoise is.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. How much is involved in the two items?

Mr. DOUGLAS. $33,000 for one and $45,000 for the other. That may seem to be peanuts, but it is money. I have a number of other illustrations, and if any Senator challenges me I shall turn my magnifying glass loose and see if they can be detected.

Mr. LONG. Personally, I cannot see why, if $93,000 worth of fish have been produced at that port, it would not be worth improving to the extent requested.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is not my judgment, knowing something about fishing along the coast of Maine, that the fish industry would be appreciably improved by providing this harbor.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator whether he can point out in the items for his own State any fat of the type to which he has been referring. For instance, on page 24, in the column relating to river and harbor items, $12,100,000 worth of appropriations is recommended by the committee for four different projects, aggregating $12,100,000 in the good State of Illinois. Are any of those projects in the classification of fat, to which the Senator has so aptly referred?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that he did not add in the sum of $6,000,000 plus provided for Illinois for the purpose of flood control. So Illinois is really receiving more than the Senator from Florida has mentioned. It is receiving approximately $19,000,000. So far as I am concerned, I am ready for the State of Illinois to take its chances, along with other States, on any reductions which may be made. I do not regard myself as being here purely as an emissary to get river and harbor and flood-control projects for my State. Although I shall represent my State before committees, I shall not vote for appropriation bills which I regard as excessive, in view of the present budgetary situation, merely to get more appropriations for my State.

The Senator from Florida tempts me very much, when he raises the question, to refer to appropriations for certain other States; but, since he is a very good friend of mine, I shall refrain from doing that unless I am pushed.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Do I correctly understand that the Senator is not able to point out any projects listed under rivers and harbors for the State of Illinois, aggregating $12,100,000, which contain pork?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will say to the Senator from Florida that, if there is a 40-percent cut put into effect, as I hope there will be so far as I am concerned, I am ready to have the Illinois projects take a 40-percent cut along with others. We are not seeking any special treatment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLLAND. With reference to the flood-control list referred to a moment ago, I note that on page 38 of the report of the committee there are included 11 items in the flood-control program in the State of Illinois totaling $6,577,800.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I called the attention of the Senator to those projects.

Mr. HOLLAND. I wonder if the Senator would care to refer to any of them as containing fat or pork. I believe he has used both those words.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will say that, on the flood-control projects, as on the river and harbor projects, I am perfectly willing that my State shall receive the same relative cut which I am asking for the country as a whole. That is the consistent thing to do and I am very ready to do it.

Mr. President, I see the Senators from Maine in the Chamber, who have hurried in, probably, because I have questioned this mysterious river, the Josias River, somewhere around Ogunquit, Maine.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Does the Senator have any difficulty, even with the use of his magnifying glass, in discovering any of the 15 projects in the State of Illinois, including both rivers and harbors and flood-control projects, which are shown in the bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope that I have my own State so perfectly in mind that I can locate almost every village even without a map, and I am quite acquainted with the 15 projects. But I think I am ready to let these go up before the Secretary of the Army and the Bureau of the Budget, and let them be cut along with everything else.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield to the subtle and eloquent Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am a little embarrassed by the fact that I have to display the ignorance of the Senator from Illinois with reference to his native State, the State of Maine.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I left there early.

Mr. BREWSTER. Not until the Senator had received an education which should have made him somewhat better informed than he appears to have been in suggesting that he cannot find these projects in the State of Maine.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is the Josias. Hunting for it even with a magnifying glass, I cannot find it. I telephoned to the Library of Congress, which checked with the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and the United States Board of Geographical Names and no one found it anywhere. It is supposed to be located somewhere near Ogunquit, where I spent a couple of summer vacations. If it is what I think it is, it is a miserable little stream running into an inland pond.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have equally great difficulty in discovering the appropriation of $33,000 for the Josias River, as it is so completely overshadowed by the $12,000,000 for the State of Illinois. I do not wonder the Senator from Illinois is concerned when he sees $12,000,000 going to Illinois, and I would suggest that he is picking pins in challenging $33,000 for the Josias River in Ogunquit. One is reminded of the rabbit stew that consisted of one horse and one rabbit. The attack does not do justice to the Senator's sense of proportion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I did not launch an attack on the Josias River project. I made a brief speech in which I said there were enormous quantities of fat in the bill as a whole, that we should build a hot fire and fry it out. The distinguished Senator from Arizona asked me to select and point out one single piece of fat. So, not in any spirit of trying to deprive the town of Ogunquit of this improvement which the senior Senator from Maine is seeking for it, I tried for 15 minutes to find the river, and I could not find it, and, even with my magnifying glass, I cannot find it yet. If the Senator will come over to my desk, I will give him the magnifying glass to see if he can locate it.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it would have been simpler, instead of exhausting all the resources of the agencies of the Government, if the Senator had called the office of the senior Senator from Maine, or the junior Senator from Maine, who sits at my right. We would have been ready to continue the education of the Senator from Illinois, as the State of Maine was obviously a little inadequate in the education it provided him before he left, particularly in geography.

Ogunquit is a rather well-known spot which the Senator has selected for comment. The citizens of Ogunquit, Maine, have already expended on this particular project something over $40,000, and unless this particular improvement, which was indicated in the original plan as approved by the Corps of Engineers, is carried out, there is grave danger that the entire development the citizens have accomplished will be lost. I think that was the consideration which led the Committee on Appropriations to recognize and include this project. As the Senator will see, the matching of the community is in the amount stated.

I think we are quite ready to take our share of any cut. We have shown that spirit, and the State of Maine for 20 long years has been standing for a balanced Federal budget and for economy in expenditures. If it is not possible to squeeze any fat out of the $12,000,000 for Illinois, we will be glad to contribute what we can from the State of Maine. But the $33,000 for the Josias River, or the $45,500 for Cape Porpoise—if the Senator will pronounce the name correctly; it is not "Pawr-poise," but it is "Porpoise"——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator for his lesson in pronunciation.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is designed to enable some hard-working fishermen on the coast of Maine to continue to earn an honest living, and not be obliged to depend on the bounty of either the State of Illinois or the Federal Government, as this project is entirely devoted to enabling those fishermen there to make a livelihood. I hope that with the Maine background of the Senator from Illinois, he will view with some charity the very meager amounts we are asking in the appropriation, when we consider the hundreds of millions of dollars that are otherwise included.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Maine. I should like to point out to him that I said that the State of Illinois, so far as I am concerned, is perfectly ready to take its share of the cuts, along with other States. I rather infer from the glowing peroration of the Senator from Maine that he is willing that the State of Maine should take its cuts also and that this project could be proportionately pared down.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure the Senator's reference is facetious when he refers to the great projects we are getting, and he reflects on the small total Maine is getting, when the Senator from Illinois is getting about $12,000,000. The Senator from Illinois has apparently been a very eloquent and very successful advocate. Whether, when he was advocating the projects, he told the committee that he would later come in and propose a 40 percent cut, I do not know. Perhaps the committee would have been willing to make a 40-percent cut in advance if they had known he thought it was entirely feasible.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I find overtones in the remarks of the Senator from Maine which are very reminiscent of the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday. The Senator from Maryland was contending that one was not privileged to work for reductions on the floor of the Senate unless he had previously urged them in the committee. The proposal of the Senator from Maryland did not seem to meet with a very warm response yesterday from the other side of the Senate. It is most interesting to find today that the eloquent Senator from Maine, in a matter which refers to his own State, leaps forward and adopts the argument of the Senator from Maryland. Does the Senator want me to go further?

Mr. BREWSTER. Not at all. I should not wish to be associated with the Senator from Maryland in the argument which he made yesterday.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But the Senator is associated with him in the argument which he is now making.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am not sure to which portion of the Senator's argument the Senator refers. As I remember, the Senator from Maryland started out with an eloquent attack on the five and twenty bill, and ended up by proposing exactly the same solution. I do not know with which phase the Senator is associating me. At any rate, I stand today on my proposal that we have some worthy projects in Maine, and if there is a general reduction we are ready to take our share. I only wish the Senator from Illinois would be as generous in his attitude as he was in his advocacy of the $12,000,000 appropriations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Since the question has arisen as to what I did before the committee, and if the implication is left that I urged the $12,000,000 appropriation for rivers and harbors, and some six and six-tenths million for flood control, let me say that I did not appear in behalf of those projects. I did appear in behalf of one project, the Calumet-Sag project, stating, that representing my constituents, I thought it was a worthy project, and I asked the committee to consider it. I want the committee to know that I cherish no grudges because they turned the project down. I am not asking to have it restored. I think I am privileged to represent both my constituents, and, to the best of my ability, the country on the floor of the Senate. Further, I am attacking no particular items by my amendment. It is the total amount which I am interested in reducing. The committee has done a fine job in bringing the various projects into balance, but, in view of our need to cut expenses to avoid a deficit, I am urging that we cut the total.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator said he called the Library of Congress to find out where a certain project was. There is a very excellent index in the back of the hearings which refers to the statement made on the Josias River project by the Senator from Maine. I thought it very well to explain what the purpose of the project was.

Furthermore, the Senator could have called on the Corps of Engineers at any time, and secured all the details on the subject.

When the Senator speaks of this bill as containing "pork barrel" legislation, I wonder if he realizes that the "pork barrel" legislation he is speaking of actually had its origin, so far as the State of Mississippi is concerned, in a Republican Congress, when a Republican was President? That was in the year 1927, when a great flood occurred in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, and throughout that area. At that time a Republican President was so moved to compassion by the sufferings of the people in my State, which had never gone Republican, that he proposed, and that session of the Congress saw fit to pass, a law providing for flood control and for protection of our State from floodwaters. If this is a "pork barrel" piece of legislation, I must say that it could be regarded as a completely gratuitous "pork barrel" piece of legislation, inasmuch as the original legislation was passed by a Republican Congress, while a Republican President was in office, to help and protect a section of the country that has certainly never gone Republican.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, such legislation began long before 1927. When I was a boy, in the days when Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft were Presidents, I remember reading in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of rivers and harbors appropriations, which is a system we have had with us for at least half a century. In fact, I think it developed most fully during the period of the 1880's, when the Republicans were taking in so much revenue from the tariff that they did not know what to do with it, and proceeded to spend it on rivers and harbors, rather than to reduce the tariff. So I think that is where the slush really started.

Mr. BREWSTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, and particularly the consent of the Senator from Illinois, to insert a brief statement at the spot where the Senator from Illinois spoke of the origin of the Rivers and Harbors Act, in order that the RECORD may be correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, what I wish to do is to make a brief statement and have it inserted at the point I referred to in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has been recognized and may speak in his own time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wanted to obtain permission to have my statement inserted at the point in the RECORD where the Senator from Illinois made his comment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I want to carry a little further the education of this good son of Maine regarding the legislative situation. It is my recollection that he stated that the Rivers and Harbors Act originated around 1880, under the impetus of what I thought he indicated were some ungodly tariffs. Unfortunately, the record, as supplied to me, indicates that the first Rivers and Harbors Act was enacted on May 20, 1826, a long time before the Republican Party had begun to benefit this country, or to do it harm.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Did it not, however, reach its full glory in the period of the 1880's, when there were Treasury surpluses created because of the Republican high-tariff policies, which surpluses the Republican Party then spent on rivers and harbors rather than to reduce the tariff?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that the very great prosperity the country enjoyed for a long time under Republican administration did enable it to carry out very large projects of development, the benefits of which we are still reaping throughout this land, and without which we would have been utterly unable to make America the marvel of production it is today.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would not the Senator from Maine also say, however, that the high tariff imposed by the Republican Party created large revenues which the Republican Party then spent on rivers and harbors appropriations, rather than reduce the tariff?

Mr. BREWSTER. Well, I shall hesitate to accept the statement of the Senator from Illinois on this matter in view of the fact that his earlier statement was so utterly incorrect. His earlier statement that the omnibus rivers and harbors act originated in 1880 is just about 50 years out of the way. The first rivers and harbors omnibus act was in 1826, at the time when the so-called Democratic Party was administering our affairs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What were the appropriations in that year?

Mr. BREWSTER. In 1826?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not have the amount before me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the Senator from Maine is such an authority on the question I should think he could give me the figures.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not care to make statements the correctness of which I do not know. That is why I am rather careful in what I say.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would the Senator furnish for the RECORD the appropriations in the 1820's and also the appropriations in the 1880's?

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall be very happy to do so——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. For the edification and the education of the Senator from Illinois, since evidently the State of Maine did not do full justice by its precocious child.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. Every year after that, from 1826 on, the rivers and harbors bills were passed in increasing amounts, reaching, I trust, their full flower under Republican administrations, to which I hope we may soon happily return.

Mr. LONG and Mr. PEPPER rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield first to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. In order to keep the record straight, I think it should be said that the year 1928 was the year when the first National Flood Control Act was passed. I referred to that previously, and gave the Republican administration credit for it.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am very grateful to the Senator from Louisiana for that very generous statement. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I merely wanted to ask the able Senator from Maine if he did not think it is historically interesting that the philosophy of the Republican Party was so ideally suited to the needs of the country two-thirds of a century ago.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it was a century and a quarter ago; but I would like to make it clear that our interest continues as great as ever, and we shall hope that as rapidly as we can get the prosperity of our country back the progress may continue in ever-increasing measure. But I do think the record should be straight as to how this matter was brought about, and what the precedents are respecting it.

Mr. President, I have just been given a slip showing that 14 additional States were admitted to the Union between 1826 and 1880, which, I assume, came about as the result of this wise and far-seeing policy in the original Rivers and Harbors Act.

Mr. LONG. I am sure the Senator realizes that if there were no river and harbor legislation enacted, and no money were provided for flood control, many places in my State would have to be evacuated, in order to save the lives of half a million people, as well as their property. The legislation has certainly had the effect of protecting the lives and property of many of our people, and has helped to maintain our levees.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not saying that each and every project is pork. There are many worthy projects in the bill. I am merely proposing that for the coming year we reduce the appropriations to $450,000,000, which would enable all the existing work to be continued, the maintenance and operation work to be carried on, and provide $75,000,000 for new projects, the remainder of $300,000,000 to be put over to a period of depression, if we should have a depression, when the work could be done to advantage. It does not matter so much whether a number of these projects are carried out this year or 3 or 4 years from now.

Mr. LONG. The Senator's argument has been directed to the point that the income of the Government is declining. If that be so, we might be facing a recession, and in that event we would need such projects now to increase employment in order to stimulate production and income.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And therefore should we have deficit spending, spend more than we take in, and not balance the budget?

Mr. LONG. Certainly we should not discontinue necessary public projects, projects which we believe are essential.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have previously said that we should continue existing projects but cut down on new projects. If we spend at the rate of three quarters of a billion dollars on such projects we are directly adding to the deficit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator brought up the matter, and I feel I should be permitted to make a statement about it, and then ask the Senator a question. As I recall, the junior Senator from Illinois appeared before the Appropriations Committee on the Calumet-Sag project in Illinois and asked for an appropriation of $2,000,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is approximately correct; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that project there had already been spent $895,000. It is an $82,000,000 project. When the Senator came before the committee a month or 6 weeks ago he was then in favor of this $82,000,000 project in his State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, but only for appropriations; over a long period of time, and in conjunction with all the other needs of the country, and in conjunction with the fiscal situation of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. Well, the Senator from Illinois knew just as much about the situation of the country 6 weeks ago as he does today, and then he was advocating an $82,000,000 project.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Over long periods of time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator never said a word about a long period of time before our committee, and the record will so show. Now the Senator is complaining because two Senators from Maine came before the committee and asked for inclusion of a $33,000 project in their State, which the committee found was necessary and which the committee allowed. The Senator said the name of the project was one he had never heard, though he was born in Maine.

I should like to know where the Rosiclare project is in the Senator's State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In Hardin County, in southeastern Illinois, on the Ohio River, where there are feldspar and mica mines. Roisiclare is a town of about 2,400 population.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Senator wanted for that little town in southeastern Illinois the sum of $300,000. But the Senator objects very seriously to a project which was sworn to by a number of witnesses, including the two Senators from Maine.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that I did not appear on behalf of those projects.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator merely mentioned them in passing?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not object to those projects, naturally, but I did not appear in behalf of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator appeared before our committee, and I am always glad to have him or any other Senator appear before the committee. Seventy Senators appeared before the committee in connection with the bill. We were glad to have them. The Senator is welcome at any time to appear before the committee in behalf of any project in his State or in any other State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Or to appear against any project. I am surprised that the Senator did not appear before the committee and oppose the project in Maine, where it was proper for him to do so. He should have made the objection before the committee which he is now making on the floor of the Senate. The Senator had not studied these things. He did not know about the river in Maine. He knows very little about the project in his own State, confessedly, although he asked for $300,000, for a little village in the southeastern part of his State, on the Ohio River. By the way, that area is subject to floods from the Ohio River. I cannot say how much consideration the committee gave to the Senator's statements, but we tried to give them all the authority and force the Senator was willing to give them. He appeared in behalf of projects in his own State. We thought he ought to know about them. If he protested against any project when he appeared before the committee I do not recall. I ask the other members of the Committee on Appropriations who are on the floor and who heard the distinguished Senator from Illinois testify, whether they heard him protest about Rosiclare.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No I did not. For the sake of the record——

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it a lady or a gentleman we are talking about?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did not protest the Rosiclare project. Let the record be made clear. I did not protest the Rosiclare project. But may I ask if the Senator concludes that because of appearing before the committee one is estopped from urging on the ground of general public policy the need for a reduction in the total appropriation? Is the bill framed in such a way that if every State gets a slice out of it a Senator is therefore prevented from defending the general interest? Does the Senator make that claim?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator makes a statement like that I feel really hurt.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I am inquiring.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are not giving out slices to people. We are hearing evidence. The Senator, I believe, is a practicing lawyer. I think I heard that he was.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No I am not, sir. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know. The Senator is not a lawyer at all?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not a lawyer at all. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not know whether the Senator should beg my pardon or congratulate me.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can take it either way, just as he likes. Let me show the Senator the volume of the hearings before the committee. It contains 1,698 pages of evidence.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, I have a volume of the hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. We took all that evidence in the committee. The committee went into the matter most meticulously, most carefully. We undertake to solve these questions on the basis of what is best for our common country, not what is best for individual States. We are not trying to help sojourners in Maine or sojourners in Illinois. What we are trying to do is to build up our common country and maintain it as a prosperous, upstanding country, the most upstanding country in the world. We did not undertake to hurt any individual, or to help any individual. We passed on these projects on the basis of proof before the committee. I am sorry the Senator was not satisfied with what he got for his State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Just a minute——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says that he has changed his mind.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Just a minute—I said nothing about not being satisfied with what my State got under the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator never said a word about cutting these appropriations for Illinois when he was before our committee. We did not hear anything about a 5-percent cut, or any other cut.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, have I the floor, or has the Senator from Tennessee the floor?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield the floor, because I think that would be more valuable to our side of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. He may yield only for a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I repeat to the Senator from Tennessee that I am not objecting to this bill because the Calumet-Sag project was turned down. I certainly am not objecting to that. But I think it is proper to inquire what the financial situation of the United States is. I can see that we are headed for a deficit of between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000—or possibly more—for the fiscal year 1950. In view of that prospect we should reduce expenditures; and this is about the best place we can find to reduce expenditures. Virtually every project, taken by itself, can be defended. Virtually every project does some good. The question is whether it is worth the price we must pay at this time. That is all I have been trying to contend.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. When any Senator tries to point out these facts, a large number of "friendly" Senators jump on him and ask, "Where is the fat?" When we reach specific items, the hornets begin to buzz around him, and he is told, "You have no right to object to the large general appropriation because your own State got a large share of it." If that is an argument, 90 Senators could not oppose the bill because I think 45 of the 48 States got appropriations. I do not believe that New Mexico has many appropriations for rivers and harbors, but about 45 out of 48 States have the benefit of such appropriations. Does that mean that all 90 Senators from those 45 States must vote for an appropriation of three-quarters of a billion dollars? Must they vote for the over-all appropriation because their States are getting slices? If that be true, the general interest goes down the drain pipe.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will allow this question to come to a vote——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I shall be delighted to have him vote on the other side. The Senator has not studied these questions as our committee has done. He does not know anything about them. He is making political capital of this issue. In this instance he is doing just what he has done in other cases before the committee. He is undertaking to benefit himself politically in his home State. I would not say that if the Senator had not undertaken to jump on our committee and charge us with slicing the provender for the various States of the Union according to some plan, or according to no plan at all. I say that the Senator is wholly mistaken. He does not know anything about the subject. If he stays here long enough, he will learn that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate is not the kind of committee he thinks it is. Its members are honorable and courageous men. Leaving myself out of consideration, they are just as straightforward men as can be found in the world.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator should not except himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. I feel that I do not want to be included in the denunciation of the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield to the eloquent and subtle Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. First, I wish to apologize for putting the figure at $12,000,000 in speaking of the amount which was being allocated to the State of Illinois. It is $18,000,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Maine entered the Chamber after I had made that statement. I swore to my own hurt on that point. There is approximately $12,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and $6,600,000 for flood control. If the Senator will read the RECORD tomorrow morning, he will find that I corrected that point.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not question what the Senator said. I myself fell into the same error. I felt that any such underestimate of the Senator's advocacy was certainly unwarranted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I think the State of Illinois had far abler and more persuasive representation before the Appropriations Committee than its junior Senator could ever provide.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am certainly in deep sympathy with much of what the Senator from Illinois has said about economy, and also his action in recent days on the subject. I think the question of the over-all approach——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Now I know that I am right, if the Senator from Maine approves of me. If I have ever doubted it, I trust that all doubts are removed.

Mr. BREWSTER. I trust that the Senator may always merit my approval. However, I have some concern.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not know whether the Senator from Illinois has indicated for the RECORD his understanding of the attempt of the Congress, over a long period of years, to remove this subject from the category of the criticisms which he has made, by requiring at least a justification from the engineers on a commercial basis. Is the Senator familiar with that policy?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is required in the case of all projects, I think without exception. I do not know of any case, in my experience, in which Congress has gone against the conclusion of the Army engineers as to whether or not a project was justified on the basis which I have indicated.

However, I readily agree that that is not conclusive, because on that basis I think there are four or five billion dollars worth of projects which possess that status of approval. So it is a question of priority.

I entirely agree with the Senator from Illinois that we must set some top limit. The difficulty I found with the position of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday was with respect to the idea that there was some magic determination of what was essential.

It is my understanding that in the initial preparation of the budget the President of the United States applied the so-called meat-ax method, allocating certain amounts which totaled approximately $40,000,000,000, and that he arbitrarily, with the benefit of whatever intuition or crystal-gazing skill he possessed, determined those limits and decided that every department was obliged to live within them. I think that is the only way it can be done. Furthermore, I think the Congress has an equal responsibility with the President in making that approach.

Whether we put $400,000,000 or $700,000,000 into this particular type of projects this year, I fully agree with the Senator from Illinois that this is a place where we could go up or down in accordance with our judgment as to the expected budget. I am not quite ready as yet to go to the extent the Senator does, until I see what is to happen in the case of the over-all appropriations. I have supported the proposal for a 5-percent reduction, which I felt was a proper approach. I am looking expectantly toward the discussion on the other side of the aisle, obviously led by the Senator from Illinois and stimulated by many other Senators, with respect to proposals to take $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 out of the budget. I shall be happy to associate myself with the efforts of that group.

I say this in order that the Senator from Illinois may feel that there is no lack of appreciation of his zeal, and because of the expectation that before the end of the session is reached we shall achieve such a reduction. If it is to be achieved in connection with these projects, we are certainly ready to take our share of the reduction, although our contribution, on the basis which the Senator has outlined, would be $100,000, while the contribution of his State would be approximately $7,000,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Am I to infer from that statement of the senior Senator from Maine that he favors the proposal to reduce the total appropriations from $750,000,000 to $450,000,000?

Mr. BREWSTER. I thought my language was sufficiently clear to indicate that I was not yet persuaded of its appropriateness at this particular spot, but that I expected to see something of this character achieved before the end of the session, and that I am entirely in sympathy with what the Senator from Illinois is trying to do.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield. I may say that I do not wish to monopolize the time, but I am very glad to yield for a question.

Mr. DOWNEY. Preliminary to the question, perhaps I may say to the Senator from Illinois that certainly this issue and the discussion he has precipitated are of immense importance to the Nation; and I think it becomes the duty of Congress soon to orient the pathway along which we wish to travel.

Let me ask this question of the distinguished Senator from Illinois. Does not he think that in all fairness to the Congress and to himself, he should make more precise and specific his statement of the two points he is making? The distinguished Senator seems to have fired both barrels of his shotgun at the same time. To the extent that he says this measure is "pork-barrel" legislation, I assume he intimates that under the bill, money is proposed to be granted improperly for political or corrupt reasons. If that is true, that is severe censure of the Congress or of the agencies requesting such appropriations. "Pork-barrel" legislation, understood to be unreasonable and improper legislation, could not be too heavily condemned, and the distinguished Senator from Illinois should proceed to present most specifically the facts he has in mind in that connection in regard to any particular project.

To the extent that the Senator is arguing that even though a flood-control project is reasonable and proper, its desirability must be weighed in the general fiscal scales, and thus studied and reviewed and compared with projects for other purposes, such as slum clearance, reclamation, school lunches, and so forth, I think the distinguished and admirable Senator from Illinois, whose statement accusing the Congress of pork-barrel and improper legislation will be broadcast over the United States in newspaper headlines by tomorrow, should make his implications much more specific.

If the distinguished Senator will bear with me for a moment, let me say that I practiced law for 30 years on the Sacramento River. I know that great and fearful flood stream well. The earliest records of settlement in the Sacramento Valley are filled with the frightful floods which often accompanied the annual spring run-off. I know how our people have courageously invested their time and more than $100,000,000 of their own money in building great levees to reclaim and provide flood protection for the fertile lands of the Sacramento Valley. I know that the Federal Government helped us because we needed help. But for every dollar of Federal money spent on flood-control works in the Sacramento Valley up to this time the State and local interests have invested three.

Let me say to the Senator—and I hope he will bear with me in this connection, because I have studied this particular question for 20 or 30 years of my life—that one of the important items in this civil-functions bill is the $3,500,000 to continue construction of a flood-control dam on the American River, approximately 25 miles above the city of Sacramento. The city of Sacramento is at the confluence of two great rivers, the Sacramento and the American.

We have the Sacramento well tamed; but the engineers tell us that judging by the history of past run-offs, if there is ever a confluence of peak floods in those two rivers, even with the immense flood-control facilities we now have, the city of Sacramento and a great area of land in its vicinity might be brought into desolation, at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Here is the question: A confluence of the peak of those floods might come 5 years from now or 20 years, 25 years, 50 years, or 100 years from now. No person is farseeing enough to be able to state when it is likely to occur. Here is a $45,000,000 or $50,000,000 reservoir, as proposed. Is it "pork barrel" legislation for us to say in a legislative enactment that we believe the Congress should advance the construction of this particular dam by the expenditure of $3,500,000 during the next fiscal year?

In fairness to the Senators from California who have advocated the flood-control projects in California, and about which we know, and for which we are morally responsible—does not the Senator from Illinois have the obligation to his fellow Senators and to the people of California to say, "I do not think we should have this appropriation for this or that flood-control project in California, in view of the needs for Europe or for military defense or for social security, or rather because I believe it is pork-barrel, corrupt, improper legislation which should be vigorously condemned"?

I am, of course, not familiar with all the projects in the present bill, but I am familiar with the California projects because I have sponsored most of them. I have talked with the people who live in the towns and cities and on the farms for which these projects will provide much-needed protection. I have explored many of these projects and know them first hand. In fairness to the Senators from every State, the distinguished chairman of the committee, and the other members of the committee, I think the Senator from Illinois should make his charges and his criticisms more specific. Does not the Senator from Illinois agree with me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I do not agree with the Senator from California, and I should like to point out, if I may, that unwittingly, I think, the Senator from California has put into my mouth words I did not utter. I have a copy of the speech I delivered, and I stuck very carefully to it. When I referred to the rivers and harbors bill, I said that the old rivers and harbors bill was "commonly, if irreverently, referred to by the people as the pork barrel." I did not refer to it as the pork barrel. I merely pointed out that it had been referred to as the pork barrel.

At the end of the speech, I said that, in my judgment, there was fat in the proposed appropriation, and that the fat should be fried out.

I shall be very glad to have the Senator from California look over the transcript of my speech.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Gladly.

Mr. DOWNEY. Do I correctly understand that the distinguished Senator from Illinois is saying, in effect, that he did not mean to imply or to infer that these appropriations are of an improper or political or pork barrel nature?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to say that I do not regard them as being of a corrupt nature. I do not regard them in any sense as being of a corrupt nature.

What I do think is that apparently the projects have historically been distributed among the various States, without any large or concerted plan; and they are so widely distributed that the Representatives and Senators coming from particular districts and States then feel tied to the bill as a whole, so that a coalition or alliance is built up on a series of local projects.

All I am trying to say is that in view of the budgetary deficit we face, should we not make stringent economies on this item? That is all I am trying to say. I do not see why the Senator from California should think that I have made the statements which he seems to believe I made.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. Let me say that if I have misunderstood the Senator from Illinois, I certainly wish to disclaim any desire to do so. I am most happy to have him declare that he is primarily discussing a question of fiscal policy.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. DOWNEY. Rather than a question of political corruption or favoritism in the making of appropriations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to make my position clear. I made no charges whatsoever of corruption. I did say that I thought the total amount to be appropriated is excessive, that there are amounts of fat or grants which could be reduced, and that we should try to reduce them.

I was immediately challenged to go into the question of specific appropriations, and thus we got into the question of the streams in Maine, as a byplay; and now the Senator from California is inquiring as to certain projects in California; and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has reminded me that my hands are not clean in this matter, for it is proposed that the State of Illinois shall receive certain money under this appropriation bill. Therefore the inference is made that I should keep quiet and should vote for this bill calling for the appropriation of $751,000,000.

Mr. TOBEY, Mr. LONG, and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so to whom?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator declines to yield to me.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I have just returned to the Senate Chamber from lunch, but it dawned on me that perhaps some of the Members of this body do not have sufficient perspicacity or understanding or ideals to think for a moment and allow their minds to come to the conclusion that there might be a Senator of the United States who can take a broad view of things, greater than his own individual interest, or the interest of his own State. I say if that is the situation, and I believe it is, I should like to ask Senators to join in singing the doxology and thanking God for it. It is rather a new era.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to read to the Senator his own testimony given before the committee on this very subject.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to have the Senator do that. What page?

Mr. McKELLAR. Page 1376 of the record of the testimony. I read from the following:

Senator DOUGLAS. These three projects are all portions of the Calumet-Sag project. There is an interstate highway which will cross this waterway project and connect Chicago with Detroit which will require the prompt relocation of railroad tracks and the building of a new railroad bridge in order to avoid later unnecessary costs of a substantial size.

What we are asking for initially is the amount of $300,000 to relocate the tracks of the Michigan Central Railroad.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That was a legal obligation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator continued:

But we would greatly prefer and recommend an appropriation of $2,000,000 for this track relocation and for the building of the new bridge which will be used by the Michigan Central Railroad.

We would also like—

I ask the Senator to listen to this—

We would also like, if your committee feels in a generous mood—

"If your committee feels in a generous mood"— an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 to widen the canal along part of its westerly extension.

We are requesting immediately funds for the relocation of the tracks of the Michigan Central Railroad.

The Chicago Regional Planning Association and the Chicago Association of Commerce are very strongly behind this project, as are also the labor organizations in the southern part of Chicago and the various agencies of the local and State governments.

The Congress, as you know, authorized this project to build up a great shipping center on Lake Calumet where bulk commodities could be transferred between Great Lakes and inland water transportation.

I think perhaps that is as much as I should say and that I shall now introduce Mr. Robert Kingery, who will make the main presentation for us.

Did not the Senator testify to that?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course he did. Now——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, do I have the floor, or does the Senator from Tennessee have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois yielded for a question only.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have asked the Senator, was that his testimony?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It certainly was.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Without sacrificing the floor, I may ask the Senator from Tennessee what conclusion does he draw from this testimony of mine?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be happy to answer. I draw the conclusion that when the Senator was before the committee he made no suggestion about lowering appropriations. He was asking for millions of dollars for his own State. He said not a word about economy. I have read his testimony, and there is not a word about economy, not a word about the depression, not a word about our country going to the bow-wows, so to speak, as the Senator now suggests. But, when the Senator wanted something of the committee, we see what he had to say.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very happy to have had the Senator turn me down.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am answering the Senator's question. The Senator asked me a question, and I am answering it. See how the Senator from Illinois began:

The CHAIRMAN. Senator DOUGLAS, we are ready to hear from you.

Senator DOUGLAS. Senator MCKELLAR and colleagues, I appreciate the privilege you have given me to appear on behalf of the Calumet-Sag project——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask the Senator what is wrong about that?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was merely being polite. He wanted something. He said not a word about any percentage cut. He said not a word about economy. He said nothing about anything except that he wanted a particular appropriation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, may I ask——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. The Senator asked me a question and now I am answering him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir; the Senator has not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor, but the Chair thinks the Senator from Tennessee is in order. He was given permission to answer a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As long as the Senator from Tennessee does not take me off my feet, he can talk.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can stand on his feet as long as he wants to. But I want to say that before the committee he was one man, while here, before the Senate, he is another man, making an entirely different proposition. Then, he wanted something; now, he wants to go back on the statements he made before the committee. He said nothing about the Nation being in a great crisis and the need to cut down appropriations. The Senator was asking the committee whether it was in a generous mood; and if so, whether it would not only give money to the State of Illinois and to his people but also give to the Michigan Central Railroad money with which to relocate its tracks.

Mr. DOUGLAS. They were compelled to move the tracks because of the public highway.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the Senator did not explain anything about that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, yes; that was explained.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was not explained here. I have the hearings. If I have made a mistake, I want the Senator to read it. I do not recall it. The testimony is that the Michigan Central needed its tracks relocated, and the Senator wanted money from the United States Government for the purpose of relocating them. If the Senator wants me to tell him, I think he does himself a great injustice when he comes before the committee asking for larger appropriations, extravagant appropriations, unusually extravagant appropriations for the State he represents, and appropriations for one of the railroad companies operating in the State of Illinois and in other States.

He came before the committee asking whether we were generous, and if we were, would we grant these enormous appropriations. The Senator now comes into the Senate abusing and reflecting upon the committee. It surprises me that the Senator would undertake to reflect upon the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in any such way. I hope he will get into a better humor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator through?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have answered the question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am somewhat at a loss to tell exactly what the Senator from Tennessee is concluding from the statement he has made. He apparently says that because I appeared before the committee to represent my constituency on a specific request for an appropriation, I am thereby estopped from criticizing the bill as a whole. If that principle is to be followed, it means there is no one here to defend the general interest, and we are always torn between the need for representing local interests and the need for representing the general interest. When I was appearing before the committee, I was trying to represent a local interest. The Senator says I should have immediately preached to him a sermon on economy. Must one talk about every subject under the sun on every occasion? There is a phrase in "Green Pastures," the Senator may remember, "The Lord expects you to figure out some things for yourself."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The Senator will suspend for a moment. The Chair asks that the Senate be in order, and that all conferences be suspended. The Chair thinks it would be an excellent show of good manners if those who are visitors on the floor of the Senate—and the Chair is not talking about Members either of the Senate or the House of Representatives—would find a place to sit down and not add to the confusion by talking. It would make an excellent impression on both the Senate and the galleries, if the visitors would exhibit such manners.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say, in truth, and in no sense in an attempt to appease or to mollify the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that we are very thankful to the committee for bringing these various items into balance. I have no complaint whatever regarding those which, to use the eloquent words of the former mayor of Jersey City, are "going out the window." But I wish, in view of the budgetary deficit, the committee had shown more self-restraint in determining the total figures. I wish they had not been so carried away by the specific projects as to come up with a figure of three-quarters of a billion dollars, which is $158,000,000 over the House figure. I should like to have seen some greater degree of restraint.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The President of the United States, in his budget estimate and in his message, recommended $21,000,000 more than has been reported by the committee. Does the Senator think the President of the United States should be reprimanded, as the Senator is undertaking to reprimand the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, for recommending a sum $21,000,000 greater than the Senate committee has reported? The Senator has not looked into the question, or, I am sure, he would not want to do that. The only answer to the Senator's position is that he does not know the facts; he has no knowledge at all of the facts. He should have read the testimony taken by the committee before he attacked the committee, as he is now inferentially attacking the President of the United States, for being grossly extravagant in recommending $21,000,000 more than reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I must protest against the Senator's putting words into my mouth which I have never uttered. I have never uttered a criticism of the President of the United States. On the contrary, I upheld his budget at the time it was submitted. It was drawn up on the basis of conditions existing in December, which were quite different from the conditions existing now. Since that time it has appeared that there would be a deficit of approximately $2,000,000,000, and with revenues falling off, the deficit is likely to be from $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. How am I hurting the Senator's feelings or making an attack upon him because I think the appropriations should be cut approximately $300,000,000? Why does the Senator take it personally?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has shown by his speech that he knows nothing of the facts concerning which the committee has recommended appropriations. In my judgment, the Senator is doing a very impolite and very discourteous thing to the members of the committee who have examined into the subject and have taken evidence on every project——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The Chair is of the opinion that the regular rules of the Senate should be observed. The Senator from Illinois is recognized. He can yield only for a question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think the Senator from Illinois has taken into consideration the seriousness of the budgetary situation. I realize conditions have changed somewhat, and it may be that he did not have a full opportunity to look into all the projects while the subcommittee on civil functions was studying the program. But I want to call the Senator's attention to a few projects upon which action has not yet been taken. I shall enumerate them and ask the Senator if he will be good enough to look into them. They are pending before the Subcommittee on Interior. They come under the general category of reclamation projects.

Davis Dam, Ariz.-Nev.: The total estimated construction cost is $111,438,000. The budget request is for $38,739,000.

Parker Dam power project, Arizona-California: The total estimated construction cost is $23,529,019. The budget request is $133,000.

Boulder Canyon project, Arizona-California: The total estimated construction cost is $173,903,900. The budget request is $7,500,000.

Central Valley project, California: The total estimated construction cost is $440,069,000. The budget request is $63,000,000.

Colorado-Big Thompson project, Colorado: The total estimated construction cost is $144,581,000. The budget request is $21,500,000.

I pause in reading these figures to say that these are power projects; they are not flood control, irrigation, or drainage. I am listing only the power projects.

The next is the Boise project, Idaho. The total estimated construction cost is $32,234,000. The budget request is $1,932,000.

Palisades project, Idaho: The total estimated construction cost is $57,398,500. The budget request is $205,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to make a correction. The Senator from Virginia has said that these projects are power projects. That is certainly not correct with respect to the Palisades project in Idaho. I think a number of the other projects are not power projects.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I requested a summary of only power projects, and this is the summary which I was given. I have not examined them. It may develop later in the hearing whether they are power projects. I asked only for power projects, and this summary was given me.

The next project is Fort Peck, Mont. The total estimated construction cost is $15,500,000. The budget request is $3,000,000.

Hungry Horse project, Montana: The total estimated construction cost for that project is $108,800,000. The budget request is $24,000,000.

Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas. The total estimated construction cost is $14,247,047. The budget request is $20,000.

Columbia Basin project, Washington: The total estimated construction cost is $784,836,000.

This is a very interesting one. The total construction cost is $784,836,000, and the budget request is $69,500,000.

Yakima project, Washington: The total estimated construction cost is $10,736,000. The budget request is $50,000.

These small items refer to the amount of money necessary to get the project under way.

The Roza division of the Yakima project. The total estimated construction cost is $22,662,000. The budget request is $449,955.

Kendrick project, Wyoming. The total estimated construction cost is $24,138,000. The budget request is $1,680,000.

Riverton project, Wyoming. Total estimated construction cost, $19,760,801. Budget request, $2,731,000.

Shoshone project, Wyoming. Total estimated construction cost, $16,791,705. Budget request, $140,000.

Here is another interesting item. We have not yet authorized the Missouri Valley Authority. I understand that when it was first contemplated it was stated it would cost $4,000,000,000. The estimate now is that it will cost $6,000,000,000. We do not know what the final estimate will be. But here is one item in the Missouri River Basin, the total estimated construction cost of which is $684,890,000, and the budget request is $74,075,000.

I say to my distinguished colleague from Illinois that those are some projects submitted to me as being power projects. They are in a bill upon which action has not yet been taken. The subcommittee has not yet completed its work. Would the distinguished Senator be good enough to direct his attention to some of those projects and give us the benefit of his advice as to what should be done when the report reaches the Senate?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I feel quite humbled by the responsibility which the distinguished Senator from Virginia has cast upon me of passing judgment upon these projects, the majority of which I know very little about. I would say, as an offhand, curbstone opinion, since the Senator has asked me, that it is obvious that these projects cannot be carried through in any one year, but it is quite possible that a very large proportion of them can be carried through over a long period of years.

If I may be permitted to answer further, I should like to say that a good many of these projects will result in revenue being obtained and in some cases they will not require a cash expenditure, but will instead be a capital investment which can be met by bonds the interest upon which and the amortization allowance on which can be met out of earnings.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is not that true of every project in the pending bill? Has it not been recommended to the Congress, before a single one of the projects in the pending bill was reported, that in the opinion of the engineers the ratio of cost benefits will liquidate the project in a period of years?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was not aware that the rivers and harbors appropriations would be directly liquidated. I was not aware that there would be specific revenues pledged to redeem them. What is understood is that it is assumed there will be indirect benefits.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am talking about power projects, and these I just read were power projects.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I think the Senator is mistaken when he says these are merely power projects. They are not; they are projects for multiple dams which will provide flood control and irrigation, as well as power. Furthermore, construction of many of the dams will eliminate the need for vast sums being spent for flood control on the lower Mississippi. One of the great mistakes that has been made by Congress has been the attempt to dam up the Mississippi River to protect the people on the lower stretches of the river from floods. The place to stop the floods is in the uplands, where the water falls on the ground. Build the dams up there. That is what the dams are for. They will eliminate much of the argument about "pork barrel" projects.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield further?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have read a list of the projects which will produce power. Every time a dam is built it stops the flow of water. We can call it a flood-control dam if we please, because it dams up the water. That is a necessary result of building the dam. It may be that in the particular projects we are discussing some definite benefit can be shown from a flood standpoint. I have been studying this general program long enough to know that it is only down in the Deep South, for the most part, where there are terrific floods, where a dam on a river just for flood control can be justified. There must be power incidental or it will not pay out. Every project I have mentioned to the Senator is a power project.

Now the Senator says it may not cost much because it is to be developed over a period of time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It may not cost too much each year.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Very well, it may not cost too much each year. I merely call attention to the fact that the figures for the coming fiscal year add up to $308,659,955.

Mr. TOBEY and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. May I ask the Senator from Virginia if it is his understanding that when the great dams are built for flood control, those building them, as has been done in my State in recent years, install penstocks so that the dams will be available for a dual purpose when the proper time comes?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Install what?

Mr. TOBEY. Penstocks, to carry the water for generating power.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Army engineers insist on that as to all the dams, and they tell us it is about the only way they can justify the dams.

Mr. TOBEY. That was my thought. I did not get clearly from the Senator that that was the procedure as to the dams in the West.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Oh, yes; the dams in the West are primarily power dams, and that is why I picked those. I did not want to get into the realm of the use of water for reclamation alone, and the draining of the upper land. I merely wanted the Senate to understand that we were referring to the same kind of projects as there are in the upper lands, and ask the Senator from Illinois, since all these are in his area——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not many of them, but I am platonically interested in them.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If we can count on his continued interest in connection with the bill which has not yet come out of the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to see the bill before I expressed an opinion, but I would say that the danger is not so great as the Senator from Virginia would have us believe.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator from Illinois familiar with the fact that in connection with the same appropriation bill last year a minority report was made by the chairman and two members of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have heard of that, but I should like to have the Senator from Kansas, if he will, explain the nature of the minority report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can yield only for a question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment.

Mr. REED. The rule the Chair has mentioned has been violated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment. The Chair holds that the rule has been violated greatly, but to the extent that the Chair thinks it his duty, for the benefit of the Senate, to enforce the rule, he will have to say to the Senator from Illinois that he will have to hold that the Senator will lose the floor if he yields for anything more than a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I throw myself upon the good nature and good judgment of the Senator from Kansas to make a statement, secure in the faith that he will not take me off my feet.

Mr. REED. I shall do my very best to conform to the rules of the Senate.

Is the Senator from Illinois aware of the fact that the bill carries a larger amount of money, as reported to the Senate from the committee, than the similar bill reported last year did?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator aware of the fact that last year the Joint Economic Committee made this statement:

> Since Federal, State, and local expenditures constitute the greatest inflationary force in our economy, these expenditures should be curtailed wherever possible.

Then is the Senator aware that on page 3 of the minority report this further statement was made by this committee:

> For the same reason, large-scale expansion and acceleration of public works projects should be limited to such projects as are deemed urgently necessary to the public interest.

Was the Senator familiar with that?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I had not read the details of the report, but I was familiar with the general contents.

I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what recommendation the minority made last year. How much did the minority want to cut the budget then?

Mr. REED. Is the Senator from Illinois aware of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and I made a motion to recommit with instructions to the Committee on Appropriations to return the bill carrying an amount $200,000,000 smaller than that contained in the bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad indeed to have confirmation from the Senator from Kansas. The cut of $200,000,000 which the Senator advocated last year seems to be about in line with the cut of $300,000,000 which I advocate this year, because we start from a higher base.

Mr. REED. I entirely agree with the Senator from Illinois that this year the Treasury is not in as sound and good condition as it was last year. Business is declining and revenues are falling off, yet it is proposed to increase expenditures. The amount stated by the Senator from Illinois, $350,000,000, in round numbers, is fairly comparable with the $200,000,000 which I and the Senators associated with me thought the bill should be cut last year.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Kansas for coming to the support of the position which I have been trying imperfectly, perhaps, but no less sincerely, to defend.

Mr. REED. As a Senator with some seniority, I have had the feeling that the junior Senator from Illinois has been rather roughly handled.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have no complaint to make on that score. The Members of the Senate have been very kind to me. I appreciate their kindness. If on any occasion they are not kind, I can take care of myself in the rough and tumble and bear no malice afterward.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator tell me to what extent he has studied the committee hearings?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have given them some attention. I am not able to furnish the Senator with a complete job analysis of the number of hours I have spent going over them, but I shall be glad to do so later, possibly.

Mr. LONG. I assume that the Senator knows that there are 97 construction projects and 178 flood-control items in the bill. I ask the Senator if he has studied any of the engineering reports or the analyses or the economic justifications of these projects, and if so, with respect to how many has he actually studied the economic justifications and the engineering reports.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very frank to confess to the Senator that because of lack of time and because of pressure of other duties, I have not been able to go over each one of these 178 projects. That would be impossible. If the Senator will forgive me for asking a Yankee question, may I ask the Senator from Louisiana how many of these 178 projects he himself has studied in detail?

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to tell the Senator. I have studied those affecting my State, and have not found one that was not well justified. As a matter of fact, I have gone into the facts with some of the people in the localities affected, and have not found one project which was not thoroughly justified. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he does not know that before each of these projects is even authorized, let alone appropriated for, it is discussed at considerable length with the district engineer, and hearings are held respecting them by the Committees on Public Works in both the House and the Senate. The engineers must present economic data which the people of the communities affected furnish to prove the justification.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am aware of that fact, and have attended some of those hearings.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator know that not one of the projects which has been constructed has ever failed to prove to be economically justified on hindsight?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The question of economic justification is a dual one. There is one question as to how the project fits in with local needs, but then there is the larger question of how the sum total of all these projects fits in with the economy of the Nation. It is the latter issue to which I have been primarily trying to address myself. In view of an expected deficit of $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, I maintain that if we do not want such a deficit this is an admirable place to cut, or to postpone, many of these works until such a time as there may be a depression, if we should have a depression.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, does the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not believe the Senator would object if I mention the difference in attitude between himself and me in discussing the European recovery program. I do not believe the Senator would mind if I mention the fact that the Senator stated he might be willing to consider a cut by 10 percent in the European recovery program funds. I suggested that if we had to economize I would be willing to cut even more than that. I ask the Senator from Illinois how he reconciles the fact that he is willing to cut as much as 40 percent on items of flood control, which, to my people, are matters of life and death, whereas he would cut only 10 percent in the European recovery program, for economic purposes?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would say to the Senator from Louisiana that there is a very good hymn which was written by Cardinal Newman:

> Lead kindly light • • •
> I do not ask to see
> The distant scene—one step enough for me.

We do not have the European recovery program before us. When it comes before us, and when we consider the prices in effect at that time, I shall be ready to consider that matter with an open mind. It so happens that today we are debating the civil-functions bill, a bill which contains rivers and harbors items.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator made any study of the actual damage which would occur if the levees were to break at certain points where the greatest damage could occur in the Delta area of the country?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know it would be very considerable, I will say to the Senator. Is the Senator maintaining that it is necessary to spend $750,000,000 in order to protect the people of the lower Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. No. Only a small portion of that amount would actually go to the lower Mississippi.

I ask the Senator further if he knows that the actual Federal investment in flood control for that area to this time has been about $483,000,000, and that in excess of $500,000,000 more than the total investment, has already been saved by reason of prevention of floods in those areas, to which they had previously been subject, and that this investment, in effect, has already been paid back by reason of the prevention of damage effected by the flood-control works that have been constructed?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not acquainted with those figures but I am very glad to have the Senator give them.

I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana if the Intracoastal Waterway, Apalachee Bay, Fla., to the Mexican border (New Orleans District) for which the budget estimate this year is $3,500,000; if the Pearl River, La. and Miss., project for which the budget estimate for this year is $1,500,000; and if the waterway from Empire to the Gulf of Mexico, for which the budget estimate for this year is $588,000 are for the purposes of flood control?

Mr. LONG. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if he has ever looked at the engineering reports on those items to see their economic justification?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will be very glad to go over them with the Senator from Louisiana, but they are not primarily for flood control.

Mr. LONG. I may point out to the Senator from Illinois that the waterway from Empire to the Gulf of Mexico has the highest justification of any river and harbor item in the bill. Also the Intracoastal Waterway has exceeded, by way of economic benefit, many times what was expected of it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, it was not my intention to make any lengthy speech. In fact, I spoke about 5 minutes in my original speech and I have been kept on my feet for about 2 hours since then by questions.

I should now like to move, if I may, to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing the amendment which I have heretofore submitted, and on that question I should like to ask for a yea and nay vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that no point of order has been made against his motion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order; that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee makes the point of order that the amendment is not in order, as well as being legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I now move to suspend the rule, pursuant to the notice given to the Senate yesterday, for the purpose of offering the amendment I have submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Knowland
Brewster	Hayden	Long
Bridges	Hendrickson	Lucas
Cain	Hickenlooper	McCarthy
Connally	Hill	McClellan
Cordon	Holland	McFarland
Donnell	Humphrey	McKellar
Douglas	Ives	McMahon
Eastland	Jenner	Martin
Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Maybank
Ferguson	Johnson, Tex.	Millikin
Graham	Kefauver	Morse
Green	Kilgore	Mundt
Murray	Sparkman	Vandenberg
O'Mahoney	Taft	Wherry
Pepper	Taylor	Wiley
Reed	Thomas, Okla.	Williams
Robertson	Thomas, Utah	Withers
Russell	Thye	Young
Schoeppel	Tobey
Smith, Maine	Tydings

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to suspend paragraph 4 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, to enable him to offer a certain amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and myself, I send to the desk a motion to recommit the bill and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill (H. R. 3734) be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction equivalent to 10 percent of the total amounts appropriated therein: Provided, That any such reduction shall be based on the amount of appropriations contained in the bill as amended by the Senate at the time of its recommittal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to recommit takes precedence over the motion to suspend the rule. A motion to recommit with instructions is subject to amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to amend the motion to recommit by substituting a motion which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it by way of amendment of the instructions?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is an amendment to the motion to recommit made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can that be done under the rules of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to recommit with instructions is subject to amendment so far as the character of the instructions is concerned. The Chair understands that this is an amendment to the instructions contained in the motion made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois subject to amendment? As I understand, it is an amendment in the first degree.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is subject to amendment, unless it be considered as an amendment in the second degree. This particular amendment is in the nature of an amendment in the first degree; and an amendment to the amendment would be in order.

Mr. WHERRY. So if the amount asked for be reduced or increased in any amount, irrespective of the 40 percent, such an amendment would be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be in order to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois; but an amendment in greater degree would not be in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Illinois read. I am not familiar with its contents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill, H. R. 3734, the Civil Functions Appropriation Act, 1950, be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back to the Senate with amendments making reductions in the various items of appropriations so as to provide that the total amount of the appropriations contained in the bill shall not exceed $450,000,000. The said committee is hereby authorized to eliminate completely appropriations for certain projects and to reduce others by such amounts as it may deem proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. I decline to yield except for a question.

Mr. President, the attempt which is being made here is essentially the same as that which has been undertaken in respect to each appropriation bill which has been reached on the floor in the present session, except that the percentage of reduction in this case is made 10 percent instead of 5 percent, as in the case of the other motions.

The Senator from Michigan has in mind in this particular case that many of these projects have been started; others are projects which are about to be started; and some are in the process of completion. This relates, not to particular governmental functions, but to contract work, much of it being by way of equipment and material to be used for the particular jobs. As prices at the present time are on a downward trend, it appears that in making a cut in the appropriations carried by the pending measure, in order to have that cut in line with other reductions, it should be 10 percent instead of 5 percent.

The effort we are making in this connection is identical with the efforts which were made with respect to the corresponding bill at the last session of Congress; in other words, the bill for flood-control work and river and harbor projects, which was known as the appropriations bill for civil functions of the Department of the Army. It will be recalled that at the time when that bill was before the Congress last year it was contended that the total amount of appropriations called for by the bill was inimical to the interest of the national economy and an unwarranted and unnecessary drain on the Treasury at a critical moment in our fiscal operations.

The considerations which prompted that conclusion last year have been intensified in the past 12 months. While we saw the situation a year ago as pressing, we see it today as acute. Today there is no room whatsoever to doubt that unless a reduction can be accomplished in the Government expenditures which are represented in this bill, we will face in the next fiscal year a serious deficit which can be met only by the twin terrors of deficit financing or new taxes. I call them twin terrors advisedly, because they both hang over us as devastating threats to our national economy, which today is moving forward with hesitant and doubtful steps.

By its very nature, this appropriation is one which is particularly susceptible of reduction. This is by no means to say that those of us who favor a reduction protest the wisdom of civil-works projects generally, or of any necessary Federal expenditure, for that matter. But the test, particularly at this time, is one of necessity—economic necessity, first. In the case of the appropriations proposed by this bill, engineering necessity should come second.

Mr. President, as I have been saying, my position in this connection is not a protest against flood-control works or against river-and-harbor projects. I am as sympathetic as is any other Member of the Senate toward appropriations for flood-control and river-and-harbor projects, because the United States must be developed. But at certain times we cannot do everything that may be desirable; therefore at such times we must concentrate upon the projects which are the most essential and are most in the interest of the Nation as a whole.

No appropriation bill which will come before us has a greater degree of elasticity than does the present bill. These appropriations lack the mandatory nature of grants-in-aid, veterans' benefit payments, interest on the national debt, or even the bulwarks of our foreign policy and national security as contained in foreign-aid and defense-establishment appropriations. I know that there are those who will violently disagree with me in regard to the last-mentioned item. They will argue, "How can we contend that any foreign aid should be given unless all our domestic programs have been taken care of to the fullest extent?"

Mr. President, it is merely a matter of judgment whether we can keep the peace without making some appropriations in connection with foreign aid. As those bills come before us, I shall take specific stands upon them.

Furthermore, Congress is able to exercise a certain amount of discretion, limited only by rare instances of utmost urgency, in making appropriation allowances for civil-works projects.

River, harbor, and flood-control projects are admittedly works of importance in internal improvement. In varying degrees—and I stress that variance—they are esssential to the national welfare. But contrary to a school of thought which is prevalent throughout the Nation and even in these Halls, there is a limit beyond which the total take of Government from the national economy cannot go without seriously depressing the living standard of the people.

In connection with an effort to reduce by 5 percent another appropriation which was before us, I spoke of the meaning of the alternative to such an over-all reduction in Government spending. I used as an illustration the $4,000,000,000 tax increase which is the President's alternative to Government economy. I sought to show its application to the taxpayers earning less than $3,000 a year. Those taxpayers are the shop workers, the clerks, the small farmers. They make up about 70 percent of the taxpaying public.

I estimated that the burden of a $4,000,000,000 tax increase on those persons would amount to about $39 apiece—that is, $39 which would be taken out of their pockets, and for which they would have to forego a corresponding amount in their family budgets in terms of necessary recreation or shoes or clothing or food. That is their stake in this economy program.

The problem before us is essentially one of determining how much of the national income may be diverted to the use of the Government and still leave the people sufficient funds with which to feed, clothe, and house themselves decently and adequately. Let us not overlook that fact.

The history of civil-works appropriations since before the war is a vivid explanation of the manner in which this problem has enlarged itself year by year. I wish to recite that history now, and I hope its implications may be impressed upon every Member of Congress, and upon all the people of this Nation. I read the amount of annual appropriations for the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers since 1939, rounding off the figures to the closest million:

1940	280,000,000
1941	216,000,000
1942	201,000,000
1943	235,000,000
1944	89,000,000
1945	104,000,000
1946	256,000,000
1947	321,000,000
1948	416,000,000
1949	580,000,000

In the pending bill it is proposed to appropriate for the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers $723,000,000, or 393 percent more than was appropriated 11 years ago. The total amount for that purpose carried by the pending measure is $722,690,690. For the entire bill it is $751,440,690. But that includes the Panama Canal, the Signal Corps, the Soldiers' Homes, and a few other small items.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does the Senator's amendment instruct the committee to revise the bill and reduce the total by 10 percent, with authority to do it in any way they see fit?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator well knows the struggle we had in the committee over these items.

Mr. FERGUSON. I well know that.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator knows that, while he and I did not agree with the majority of the committee on every item that was included, we must recognize the fact that legislation of this character is of necessity something of a compromise, and that no one man's judgment is infallible, and no one State project has supreme priority. But I should like to ask the Senator this question: After the subcommittee had done the best job it could to equalize the projects, and the committee had approved the work of the subcommittee, is it not true that the amendments to the bill as reported to the floor amounted to more than a 10-percent increase over the House bill?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then I want to ask the Senator, why was it that he raised no protest when those amendments were being adopted one by one, when the projects could have been singled out and discussed, and if they were out of line, brought down; or else adopt a policy that, as we go through each item of the bill cut it a percentage point on the assumption that the committee had properly adjusted the separate items to the total the committee had in mind?

Mr. FERGUSON. I think that is a simple question to answer. It is very logical.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to have the answer.

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall give it now. The answer is that the Senator from Michigan had in mind that the subcommittee is better able to accomplish that particular thing than are Members on the floor, and it is a matter of choice as to who shall do it and where it shall be done.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But the Senator has just called attention to the fact that these are items which are relatively simple to cut and to understand, as compared with items which may involve human life and policy and what not. I wanted the Senator to explain to me why he contends that other Members of the Senate are discharging their full responsibility simply by asking that the bill be sent back to our committee to be revised.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to answer.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should be willing, if it is the wish of the Senate, on the ground that the budget will not stand this much, to make a horizontal cut and reduce every project by a given percentage. But I do not see the wisdom of sending the bill back to the same committee that has spent about 6 weeks on it, with many tedious sessions. I attempted to attend nearly all of them, which not every member of the subcommittee did. Why should the bill be returned to us, to go over the matter again, when the Senator knows it is largely a budgetary or monetary matter, and if the appropriation is too high, he could say "Cut it 5 percent, or 10 percent," or join with the distinguished Senator from Illinois and accept his amendment, and cut 40 percent straight across the board. Where are we getting by merely voting to recommit?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I shall answer that simply by saying that the committee is in a better position to make the particular cut on this particular bill, for the reason that when the matter is before the committee, it naturally must have the advice of the Army engineers, and it must get their advice before the bill is marked up in the subcommittee, after the taking of the testimony. The subcommittee has submitted to the Corps of Engineers three figures. The first figure was $564,542,270. The second figure was $741,377,220. The third figure was $841,037,220. They were told to take those three figures back to the Pentagon Building and allot that sum of money to certain projects, having in mind their analysis as to which was most important, giving consideration to such things as whether or not it was possible to complete the project, whether it was a new project, whether the budget had allowed anything for it, and various other things.

Mr. President, the first figure, $564,000,000, was the House figure. The second, $741,000,000, was the figure of the Bureau of the Budget. The third figure was $100,000,000 more than the Budget Director's. Then the committee sat down to try to do the job, upon the basis of those figures. So I say there is a precedent for what we are trying to do. This proposal would allow the Senate committee to take $75,000,000, or 10 percent from the total amount of the bill, which would be 10 percent of $751,440,690.

It could be done in a scientific manner, because the Corps of Engineers could be given that figure, the same as they were given the other three figures, and their advice requested. Though their advice is not absolutely binding on the committee, it would nevertheless be of great assistance in accomplishing the desired saving. We are boiling this down to what we believe we can afford to spend in the coming year. In the pending bill it is proposed to appropriate $723,000,000, 393 percent more than was appropriated 11 years ago.

Of course, the Senator from Michigan will readily concede that to reduce the appropriations as proposed does not constitute a complete solution to the problem. It is really only an acknowledgment of the ultimate problem. There remain the billions of dollars of costs in unfinished projects. There remain the billions of dollars of authorized projects, whose construction has not yet been undertaken. There remains consideration of essential projects not yet authorized, which will be found vital to internal improvements and national welfare.

This proposal goes only indirectly to the fact that there hangs over the Nation a bill of $3,250,000,000 with which to complete the projects which are now under way. There is left untouched the amount of $3,500,000,000 which represents the prospective cost of projects which have been authorized but not yet undertaken. It leaves completely unanswered the staggering fifty-seven-and-one-half-billion-dollar question, which is the grand total cost of existing comprehensive plans for conservation and use of the water resources of the United States.

But the annual frenzied dash for appropriations permits no critical consideration of these matters. The result is indiscriminate spending. At this moment it is reckless and dangerous spending.

As a contribution to the ultimate solution of the problem in this particular field, I hereby propose that by resolution the Congress undertake to review the whole field of rivers, harbors, and flood control for the purpose of arriving at some definite policy by which we may guide ourselves. Such a review would embrace pending projects, pending authorizations, and prospective authorizations. It might well include in its scope a survey of possibilities for the integration of flood control, power development, and reclamation programs into a well-defined and consistent national policy.

In the meantime I am left with the firm conviction that we can reevaluate the projects contained in the pending appropriation. As a reasonable, efficient, and positive formula I submit the guide which was suggested last year by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the junior Senator from Michigan. It proposes that definite distinction be made among the projects which are included in this appropriation on the basis of (1) urgency; (2) long-range importance; (3) completion with reasonable appropriations; and (4) projects where the State or municipality bears a portion of the expense.

Such a formula is designed to meet the tests of economic and engineering necessity which are paramount. Its faithful application will reasonably, efficiently, and positively bring about the reduction sought in the pending motion.

Mr. President, I think on mature deliberation, regarding the motion of the Senator from Illinois, it would appear that if the President of the United States and the Budget Director were permitted to reduce the budget 40 percent instead of 10 percent, it would allow them to single out particular items and to make the cuts so deep that many projects would be stopped, and there would be great loss, whereas to send the bill back to the committee, where the advice of engineers would be sought, an intelligent reduction could be made so that we would be able to say we were doing everything possible to live within the budget.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the motion to recommit the bill back to the committee with instructions to make a 10-percent reduction will prevail. I understand there is a proposal for a reduction of 40 percent instead of a reduction of 10 percent. The proper procedure would be to send the bill back with instructions to take off 10 percent.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. McCLELLAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I propose to speak very briefly in opposition to the motion which is pending before the Senate. The first point I wish to address to my good friend from Illinois. I want to say, good naturedly, that if the President of the United States, in his campaign of 1948, had made the representations to the people of the West which the Senator from Illinois has made to the Senate of the United States today, Mr. Truman would not have been elected President on November 2, 1948. All through the campaign the President tried to convince the people of the West that the election of a Republican administration would result in a scuttling of the great flood-control, soil-conservation, and power-development program.

I say, in all sincerity, that, in my judgment, the speech made by the Senator from Illinois on the floor of the Senate today, if he should have his way, would result in a scuttling of the very program which the President of the United States tried to give assurance to the voters of the West in the last campaign would be scuttled as the result of the election of a Republican administration. I disagreed with the President's statement in that regard, but he convinced many voters in the West that they should place their confidence in him in respect to his promises on reclamation, flood control, harbor development, and power projects.

Mr. President, the issue before us demonstrates once more the very poor system of budget making practiced by the Federal Government. We try to mix together operating expenses and administrative expenses of Government, on the one hand, with capital investment in needed wealth-creating projects, on the other hand. So long as we talk on the floor of the Senate in terms of economy, in connection with seeking to scuttle needed capital investments intended to construct and develop the projects so essential to creating the new wealth out of which we can get the new tax dollars to pay the administrative costs of the Government and our national debt, so long as we follow that course of action of penny-wise and pound-foolish economy we shall be guilty, in my judgment, of most inefficient business administration in handling the affairs of the Government.

The appropriation bill with which we are dealing should be kept separate and distinct from the so-called administrative costs of operating the Government. We are dealing in this civil functions appropriations bill with problems of capital investment. We are dealing with problems of flood control, soil conservation, reclamation, harbor improvements, and indirectly with power development which will return to the taxpayers many, many times the annual costs of the projects. The items of this civil-functions bill cannot be separated from the power development projects because flood control and reclamation are inseparably tied to power projects. Yet, Mr. President, we have, in all seriousness, proposed on the floor of the Senate today a reduction to an amount of approximately 40 percent of the sum needed for these capital investments this next year. There is a great need for increasing the appropriations for these items rather than for gutting them. We should carry out what I consider to be one of the responsibilities of a liberal course of government, namely, the responsibility of trying to bring greater human happiness in an ever-increasing degree to the human beings who would be detrimentally affected by the recommendations of the Senator from Illinois.

I would that the Senator from Illinois today owned a farm on the banks of the Willamette or Columbia River in my State. I would that he owned such a farm, and then took off the news ticker, as I did a few minutes ago this announcement in regard to what is happening to the raging waters of those two rivers this very moment as we sit here in the Senate:

A 90-mile chain of levees are holding today as the highest crest since last June's big flood rolled down the Columbia River Valley.

But it did not hold last year. The facts are undeniable that floods throughout the Nation are causing us a minimum of $41,000,000 of loss a year, and this loss has been going on for years.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] advances an argument which I say is specious and highly fallacious, that an investment of tax dollars on a capital-investment basis in the type of program for which this appropriation bill calls would involve waste. The Senator from Illinois failed to bring forth a bill of particulars showing wherein specifically, project by project, there would be any waste. He failed to comment on the fact that these projects will pay for themselves and will create great new wealth and save a tremendous waste of our precious natural resources.

Oh, Mr. President, it is easy to point out the total amount of money involved in this appropriation, and then, in terms of the total, say, "Here is a chance to cut." It is an interesting, persuasive device to come forward with a chart showing a break-down of the expenditure of the taxpayer's tax-dollar "pie." It is appealing to the eye to present a chart as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has done today in this debate showing how much goes to this, how much to that, and how much to something else. However he failed to translate his chart into human values. He failed to show the loss to human welfare in this country which would result from his proposed type of arbitrary budget cutting.

In this bill we are dealing with human values as much or more as is the case with any of the appropration bills which come before the Senate. I think more. This appropriation bill needs to be translated into the human factors which are involved as well as into the great economic assets which will be created by it. I say the Senator from Illinois has failed to do that throughout the course of his attack on the bill.

Mr. President, what is the human value of this bill? Ignoring for the moment the economic values of a wealth-creating type to be derived from this bill, what are the human values of a project anywhere in this country which brings the type of human happiness to people resulting from saving their homes from the danger of flood? How much is it worth to the Nation in human values to save hundreds and thousands of home owners from the dangers of devastating floods? How much is it worth to us in dollars to save acres upon acres of land from being washed into the sea? How much is it worth to us from the standpoint of public confidence in our Government to take the steps necessary to prevent these great losses from floods? The people are entitled to these appropriations and an early completion of these projects. We are always willing to spend millions for relief when great catastrophes have hit our people. We are humanitarian then. However now is the time to vote enough money for these projects to prevent human suffering that is bound to come to thousands of people if we do not follow the preventive course of action which is made possible by this appropriation bill. If liberalism involves the advancing of human values then this bill calls for liberal support in the Senate.

When I read on the news ticker, for example, that some 12,000 acres of rich bottom land in the Columbia Basin has been placed under high water in the last few hours, I would say to the Senator from Illinois, I wonder what the answers of the owners of those farms would be to him when they learn that he proposes to make a cut of some 40 percent in an appropriation bill which seeks to advance more rapidly the completion of flood control in the West. And I speak not only of the West. I am going to stand for flood-control projects and power-development projects wherever they are needed in this country, be it in Illinois, in Florida, in California, or in the great State of Oregon.

My next point is this. I have heard it said on the floor of the Senate, since I have been a member, that projects such as are being discussed here need to be put on the shelf, to be taken down in times of depression as an unemployment remedy. I do not know whether the Senator from Illinois knows it or not, but there is today sweeping over this country at an alarming rate a tremendous increase in unemployment, particularly in heavy industry. The unemployment ratio in the Pacific Northwest is already three times the national average. In most of the localities where these major projects will be built and developed, we already observe the beginning of a very serious unemployment problem, and many signs of a threatening recession and oncoming depression.

Must we wait for another 1932, or are we going to practice prevention? Are we going to recognize the importance now of investing the taxpayers' money on a domestic basis in capital investments which will offset and prevent the danger of an oncoming depression?

Mr. President, the third point I want to make is this. As I look at this interesting tax "pie" chart presented by the Senator from Illinois and the amount of money which goes to the Military Establishment—and I am willing to appropriate whatever dollars are necessary to keep our country secure, and I speak as a member of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate—I wish to say that we are guilty, in my judgment, of unnecessarily wasteful expenditures, nonproductive in nature, in connection with the Military Establishment. I think tremendous savings can be made in the Military Establishment budget without one whit decreasing the national security.

When it comes to a budget or an appropriation request such as this civil functions appropriation bill which involves an opportunity to create new wealth, I cannot go along with the Senator from Illinois in cutting it to any such extent as the Senator has proposed on the floor of the Senate this afternoon. This budget will be productive in nature, it will be self-liquidating in nature, it will create new wealth.

We ought to be spending not only the amount of this appropriation, but I think a very sound economic case can be made for enlarging this budget rather than decreasing it. The sooner and the faster we complete these projects, the sooner we will make the savings for the American taxpayers which will accrue to them as the result of the completion of the projects.

Mr. President, one word on the power projects which are indirectly involved in any system of flood control and reclamation. If we are to meet the population needs of this country, in my judgment, we are going to have to develop power resources to the maximum extent possible. If we are to meet the security needs of the country, we are going to have to develop to the maximum extent possible the potential power resources of the country. I would rather build great public works projects which have power features included in them than I would at this time build battleships, or surplus airplanes, or spend other millions in what I consider to be unnecessary defense expenditures. The one thing which I think Russia is watching more than any other, as far as our security is concerned, is the rate at which we are going forward with power development in this country.

I wish to say that power dams and power projects constitute not only the best economic expenditure from the standpoint of creating new wealth, but they constitute also the best possible expenditure of American dollars so far as security is concerned. However, a sound system of power dams is also bound up with the development of a sound system of flood-control dams.

The last point I wish to make, Mr. President, is that I think that the Senator from Illinois in proposing this drastic cut, completely overlooks the great need in this country for soil conservation and soil development, for bringing into production the great areas of land which will be brought into production under the bill.

I think we need to look ahead 20, 30, 40, and 50 years and recognize that the population trends of the world are creating a serious food problem. We hear so much these days about food surpluses in this country. The real problem of the world, so far as population is concerned, is to make certain that we will have the food even as short a time as 50 years from now to meet the food needs of the world. The reclamation and irrigation projects which are involved in this appropriation bill are vital to the future food supply of this Nation. They will create great wealth for the American people in the years to come.

When we invest the taxpayer's dollar in an appropriation bill such as this which carries along with it the bringing into cultivation of thousands upon thousands of acres of land now arid, now barren, we will be investing the taxpayer's money in one of the best future income-producing resources in which we can invest his dollar.

Mr. President, I believe we ought to be thinking ahead a quarter of a century from today, not looking backward. We ought to be thinking in the direction we are going economically in this country. Now is the time for leadership to build and expand, not to restrict, the development of our economy.

I can think of nothing that would be more detrimental to the meeting of the fiscal needs of the country than the recommendations made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] today. With the greatest of respect to him, and out of a very deep affection I hold toward him, I want to say that his course of action is not a liberal course of action measured in terms of human values and the advancing of human interests in America.

I want to say lastly that the course of action he has proposed on the floor of the Senate today is quite inconsistent with the great play for votes which the Democratic Party made preceding November 2, 1948. I do not ask that we vote against the Senator's proposal on any basis of partisanship. I only bring out the political inconsistency of the Senator's proposal with the representations of the Democratic Party in the last campaign, because I know I speak for millions of American people today who are going to ask the question: What has happened to the promises of the Democratic administration when an outstanding and able spokesman for that party stands up on the floor of the Senate of the United States and proposes a 40-percent cut in the great soil-conservation, reclamation, harbor development, and power-project development of this country? These are projects which the administration said in the campaign are essential in order to keep America economically secure and prosperous.

The answer to the question, Mr. President, is that the Senator's speech is totally inconsistent with the position taken by the leader of his party throughout the campaign.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I do not want to delay action by the Senate on the pending motion or the proposed amendment thereto. But I desire to make a few brief observations about the general issue.

First I want to express my approval of the general philosophy just stated by the very able Senator from Oregon with reference to the necessity and wisdom of this character of legislation.

Mr. President, because I have not supported every wild spending program, I am generally regarded as conservative and have been referred to sometimes as a reactionary. I do not mind the term. There must be reaction sometime; otherwise we would go pell-mell down the road to disaster. I do not mind the label. Sometimes I wear it gladly and wear it with honor, I think. But in the sense that the term "reactionary" is generally applied to those of us who try to have some concern about the fiscal policies of Government, in that same sense this proposal to reduce the appropriation for these worth-while purposes 40 percent is the most reactionary proposal I have ever heard on the floor of the United States Senate.

We use the terms "liberal" and "conservative." I associate myself with the remarks of the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. There are human values involved in this question. All human values do not stem from giving someone a pension or paying him unemployment compensation or providing some other kind of Federal assistance. We talk about "pork barrels." We have the barrel. Are we going to empty it? We have pork in it when we provide something that will build wealth and make jobs for the people so that they can earn an honest living. But if we waste away the soil of America, let the floods wash away the cities, destroy industries, and take human life throughout our principal valleys, we shall be taking the pork out of the barrel for the future. We shall wake up some day and find that we have a pork barrel without any pork in it.

Another term that has been used today is "fat." Who put the "fat" in the bill in the first place? The President sent to Congress a budget. No one wants to reflect on the President. The President put the "fat" in it in the first place, if there is "fat" in it. He put $21,000,000 more in the budget than the Senate committee left in the bill, but we do not want to criticize the President.

At the time the budget was prepared the situation so far as it concerns the merits of the project in this bill was not much different than it is now. The same reasons which prompted the President to approve the projects and ask for appropriations for them exist now that existed then. Where is the "fat," if there is "fat" in the bill? The President put it in there in the first place when he sent his budget message to Congress and asked Congress for appropriations.

Of course, we are all optimistic. We hope to see our economy remain sound. We all want prosperity. I assume that when the budget was prepared the hope was that our expenditures, as recommended in the budget for the next fiscal year, would not exceed the revenues which would be collected in taxes. I am sure that was the hope. That situation has changed somewhat. According to the best estimates, the present prospects are that if the Congress appropriates for the various agencies and services of Government the full amount of the budget recommendations, at the end of the next fiscal year there will be a deficit of possibly $3,000,000,000. In other words, if we spend on the basis of budget recommendations we shall spend approximately $3,000,000,000—and perhaps a greater amount—more than we shall collect in taxes in the next fiscal year.

Since that situation has developed, it is something which addresses itself not only to the Congress, but also to the President of the United States. So far I do not know of any message or recommendation from the President modifying the budget. I presume he is still hopeful. Perhaps he is justified in being hopeful. I am not criticizing him for that. But I am saying that it is the joint responsibility of the President and of the Congress under present conditions to look into the situation and try to make an intelligent approach in solving it. We should do whatever is necessary to make appropriations that will not exceed the anticipated revenues, as we can best estimate the situation. I think that is the joint responsibility of the Congress and the President. I have been hoping that the President would send to the Congress a message making some recommendation in this connection. I hope he will yet do so.

In the meantime, as these appropriation bills come before us, we are undertaking to make the approach by the method which is now being employed, an example of which is the question now before the Senate. Motions are being made to recommit appropriation bills to the Committee on Appropriations to reduce the amounts.

The first regular appropriation bill, being, as I recall, the bill for Labor and Federal Security Appropriations, was before us the other day. The Appropriations Committee had worked on the bill. The bill was brought to the floor, and amendments were offered on the floor. On a yea and nay vote the Senate voted to increase by several millions of dollars the amount which the Appropriations Committee had recommended.

Following the adoption of those amendments—and I am not saying that the increases were not for good causes and purposes—a motion was made to recommit the bill with instructions to reduce the amount. I voted to recommit the bill. I voted for recommittal for two reasons: First, because of the situation which has developed with reference to our fiscal affairs, and the certainty that if we continue to make appropriations up to the level of budget recommendations we shall appropriate more money this year than we shall realize in revenues, and therefore we shall have a deficit. We had to take some action to try further to reduce the appropriations which we were about to make. Notwithstanding the fact that I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, I voted in good faith to recommit the bill in the hope that we might make a reduction in it. I voted to recommit it for another reason, which I have just mentioned. If in our consideration of appropriation bills on the floor of the Senate we propose by amendments greatly to increase the amounts of the appropriations above what the Appropriations Committee recommends, there will be no earthly chance of keeping within the budget. We shall be piling up greater and greater deficits. Therefore I felt that we should recommit that bill.

The vote by which the motion to recommit was adopted was reconsidered, and upon reconsideration the bill was not recommitted. That bill has gone beyond our control. There was an opportunity to make a motion to recall it and reconsider the vote by which it was passed. Such a motion was not made. The bill is now beyond the control of the Senate. Therefore there will be no 5-percent reduction in it.

The next bill came before us yesterday. The first bill having been passed without a 5 percent reduction, and without being returned to the committee with instructions to reduce the appropriations, we passed another bill yesterday without a 5 percent reduction in it. I voted not to recommit that bill. The reason why I voted that way yesterday is that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has introduced Senate Joint Resolution 94, which has been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That joint resolution would establish a formula by which we could deal with all appropriations for the next fiscal year.

I am not committed to the formula provided by that particular joint resolution. I understand that other Senators are considering the best means of approach toward that objective. At this time I wish to state that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will consider the joint resolution of the Senator from Maryland. Statement was made yesterday on the floor of the Senate or a fear was expressed that if the joint resolution were referred to committee, it would never leave the committee.

I cannot say that the joint resolution will leave the committee. I cannot give that assurance. I do not know what the committee's final judgment will be in regard to the joint resolution. But I have called a meeting of the committee for Monday morning, for a preliminary discussion of the joint resolution. I now invite each Member of the Senate who is giving serious thought to, and taking serious interest in, the problem of reducing the expenses of our Government to give the committee the benefit of his counsel and suggestions. If Senators have a better proposal than this one, I invite them to submit it to the committee. If Senators have any contribution to make to the cause of economy in government and the necessary reduction of the appropriations for the next fiscal year below the amount of the budget estimates, so as to keep the expenditures within the anticipated revenues, I assure them that the committee will welcome any assistance they can give to it.

Inasmuch as the first appropriation bill was passed without making any cuts at all in the appropriations it carried, and since it has been proposed that we find a way, by resolution or otherwise, to make cuts in all appropriation bills, I shall vote against the proposed 5 percent cuts or against proposals to recommit the appropriation bills; and I shall hope that we can and may, with the aid and counsel and interest and attention to the problem of every Member of the Senate, devise some means or formula or process by which, before the end of this session of Congress arrives, the Congress will pass a joint resolution comparable to the one now on my desk, which was introduced yesterday by the distinguished and able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], or some other joint resolution which will bring the amount of the appropriations within the amount of the anticipated revenues for the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, on that basis I am willing to strive for economy.

However, Mr. President, when we consider the present attempts to make reductions in the appropriations carried by the pending bill, and when we consider the pending motion to recommit, we see exactly what happens when we try to deal with the over-all matter of providing for Government economy by means of proposing the adoption of an amendment to a particular appropriation bill. In such a case, some Senators will oppose a reduction in an appropriation for one particular purpose, and other Senators will oppose any reduction in an appropriation for another purpose, and so on.

Now that we have the proposal of the Senator from Michigan to recommit the bill and to have the total appropriations carried by it cut 10 percent, I say to him that I join him in his purpose and objective of reducing the amount of appropriations, even though the pending measure carries some appropriations that will mean something to my State, as well as to the Nation as a whole. It is true that some of the projects provided for by the pending bill happen to be located in Arkansas. Yet I say that in the face of the over-all need, if provision for every project in Arkansas should be eliminated from the bill, if necessary, I would vote for the others because the primary consideration is the prosperity and welfare of our country.

Mr. President, at the end of this session, when we take into account the over-all situation, if we find that the fiscal situation of our Government requires the making of a 10 percent cut in the appropriations carried by the bill now before us, I shall favor the making of such a 10 percent cut. If, on the other hand, we find at that time that a 20 percent cut in the appropriations carried by this bill is required in order to keep our fiscal affairs in order, our budget balanced, and a sound fiscal policy maintained, then I shall favor the making of a 20 percent cut in the appropriations for every project provided for by this bill—the projects in Arkansas and her neighboring States and those in Maine, which were discussed today, and those in other States.

However, Mr. President, simply because some columnist screams "pork barrel" and dishes out that old hash that has begun to smell, I do not wish the Senate to penalize one of the greatest and most constructive programs the United States has ever known. Let us keep America progressive, building, and developing, commensurate with her ability to do so.

In order to accomplish that purpose, I am willing to reduce the proposed expenditures immediately before us for consideration. I am willing to reduce the appropriations or expenditures or investments proposed by the pending measure in proportion to whatever over-all or total reductions in expenditures are necessary in order to balance our budget and to keep the United States on a sound fiscal basis.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Arkansas has referred to a program of authorizing and instructing the President to make such cuts in the over-all budget which the Congress may finally provide for, so as to bring the expenditures of the Government in line with its income.

I wish to remind the distinguished Senator from Arkansas of the fact that when the stock-market crash came in 1929, Virginia elected John Garland Pollard to be governor of Virginia. He took office in January 1930, when we were moving into the greatest depression we ever have had. The General Assembly of Virginia in that year, fearing that the conditions which might arise would result in unbalancing the budget of the State, passed a resolution authorizing the Governor to reduce all expenditures as much as 20 percent, if necessary, in order to balance the budget. The Governor of Virginia did reduce every item of expenditure—including the salaries of every State employee—20 percent, and he did balance the budget.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that I voted, as he did, to recommit the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill, after the amounts of the appropriation it carried had been increased to more than we thought we could afford to provide; but the Senate voted against us.

So I wish to associate myself with the statement the Senator from Arkansas made; and when we in the Senate finish our work on the appropriations bills and see what has been done after the bills are sent to conference and after the conference committees have reported and the conference reports have been adopted, I shall join him in supporting an appropriate move—whether in connection with the plan of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] or the plan of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] or some other plan—to effect a reduction in the over-all budget of the Government in an amount sufficient to obviate the necessity of imposing a heavy new tax burden on the American people.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, I shall conclude my remarks by again reminding and inviting all Members of the Senate to give to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments their suggestions or recommendations or any counsel which they feel will be helpful to us in trying to find the right and wise solution to the problem of avoiding a deficit or deficit spending in the next fiscal year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute motion offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] for the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I move that the substitute motion of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] be laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to lay on the table the substitute motion of the junior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Chair please state again the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] to lay on the table the substitute motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with certain instructions.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. If the motion carries, will that leave unimpaired the motion of the Senator from Michigan?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will leave unimpaired the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TAFT. Adoption of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska would only affect the status of the substitute motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]; would it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would affect only the status of the substitute motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to lay on the able the substitute motion of the Senator from Illinois to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] are absent by leave of the Senate on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH] are detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—59

So Mr. DOUGLAS' motion in the nature of a substitute was laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the original motion offered by the Senator from Michigan for himself and for the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

Mr. LUCAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] are absent by leave of the Senate on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

On this vote the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay" and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

If present and voting, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 48, as follows:

So the motion to recommit made by Mr. FERGUSON for himself and Mr. BRIDGES was rejected.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is the bill open to further amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to suspend the rule and make in order an amendment which he has proposed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I present a substitute motion, which I shall read:

I move that House bill 3734 be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction equivalent to 5 percent of the total amounts appropriated therein: Provided, That any such reductions shall be based on the amount of appropriations contained in the bill as amended by the Senate at the time of its recommittal.

Mr. President, these are the identical instructions contained in the motion of the Senator from Michigan, the only difference being that the reduction, instead of being a reduction of 10 percent provided in the motion which was rejected, is now suggested with the hope that the Senate will adopt a 5-percent reduction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit the bill to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. PEPPER. On behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] I wish to state that he is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "yea" on the Butler motion to lay on the table the Douglas motion.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who is absent because of illness in his family, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], who is absent on public business. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from Kentucky would vote "nay."

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who is absent by leave of the Senate on public business, is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE]. If present and voting the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay," and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea."

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay," and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], who is absent by leave of the Senate on public business, is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "nay," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If present, the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who is absent on public business, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea."

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] are absent on public business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] who is absent on official business is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] who is necessarily absent is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] who is absent by leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] who is necessarily absent is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] who is absent by leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea" and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is detained on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] who is absent because of illness is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER]. If present and voting the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea," and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

So Mr. WHERRY's motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to suspend the rule. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senate evidently not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask for a reconsideration of the action of the Senate in adopting the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] adding legislation to the bill. The Senator from Michigan gave notice in the Committee on Appropriations that he would raise a point of order and was on the floor, but did not hear the question put, and learned of it after the Chair had announced the result.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator asking unanimous consent for reconsideration of the vote?

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to explain my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote?

Mr. LUCAS. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma object?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I object.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to be heard on the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is now making a motion?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma was agreed to.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to state the question involved. The regular legislative committee laid out a plan and provided for a plan known as the levee plan for Oklahoma City. The cost to the Federal Government of that plan would have been $4,340,000. The local cost would have been $8,460,000. The total cost would have been $12,800,000.

The Senator from Oklahoma attempts to add to the bill authorization for an entirely new program, known as the canal program. Instead of the cost of $4,340,000 for the levee, approved by the legislative committee, the plan now calls for $10,460,000, or an increased cost to the Federal Government of $6,120,000.

The local cost under the plan would have been, as the legislative committee had recommended and the Congress had passed, $8,460,000, and the present plan, under the legislation in the pending bill, is $6,120,000. So we see that the project will cost less to the local agency and $6,120,000 more to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill. Here is a matter which will increase appropriations of the Federal Government by $6,120,000, for a project which the Congress of the United States has never authorized. Therefore it is clearly subject to a point of order, and the matter should be taken up before the proper legislative committee, where a full hearing could be had, and the legislative committee could determine whether or not the plan known as the "levee plan" or the one known as the canal plan is the proper one.

I ask for a yea and nay vote on the reconsideration of the vote on this amendment, which adds $6,120,000 to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this matter has been thoroughly considered. The amendment does not purport to carry any appropriation whatever in the pending bill. For 10 years the engineers made surveys, and gave consideration to a flood-control project for Oklahoma City, the capital of my State. The North Canadian River runs through the center of the city, although most of the large buildings are located north of the river.

Almost every year the North Canadian River has a flood, occasionally two or three times during the year. I hold in my hand a picture which appeared in this morning's Washington Post and last night's Evening Star, showing in a county adjacent to Oklahoma County the result of a flood within the last 48 hours. The flood was so severe it destroyed a 300-foot bridge.

I have a telegram, which reached me since the Senate convened today, from Kingfisher, the county seat of the county which adjoins Oklahoma County, showing that 35 blocks in the city of Kingfisher, a rather small town, are now under water, and the residents are begging for relief.

It is true that the survey made by the engineers proposing a plan for control of floods at Oklahoma City was submitted to the Congress, and I have here the House document which contains a summary of the engineers' findings and the report of the engineers which was approved by the Congress. It is House Document No. 572. It was submitted to the House on May 9, 1946.

The project for Oklahoma City was approved in the flood-control bill of 1946. Money was appropriated last year to begin construction. But because the floods have been so constantly recurring, citizens of Oklahoma City were advised by competent engineers that the levee plan, the plan recommended by the Corps of Engineers, would not be satisfactory. So the matter was resubmitted to the United States Corps of Engineers, and the Oklahoma City plan was agreed to.

The original plan called for a series of levees 13 miles in length going through Oklahoma City. This plan did not embody the straightening of the river or the widening of the river. It provided for levees to be thrown up along the river, passing through Oklahoma City. Senators can imagine what it would mean to a city to have mud banks thrown up along a river which flows through the city. It was not for the best interests of the city, and the citizens did not approve of that kind of flood control for the reason that they did not think it would be adequate.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. It is my understanding that hearings are now being held on the House side of an omnibus authorization bill which will include modifications of existing authorizations. Should not this matter properly be considered before that committee, and later by a Senate committee, and would it not be possible to include the item in the next appropriation bill? Would not that be the orderly method of procedure?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, that could be done, and if the effort I now make should fail we would take that course. But, Mr. President, this is a simple matter. I have in my hand the report of the engineers of recent date recommending the modification and the change. The only change proposed is to straighten the river as it flows through Oklahoma City and to widen the channel. Then it is proposed to take the earth that comes from the straightening and widening of the channel and throw it out on the bank, to raise the level of the bank somewhat above what it now is. The engineers say that can be done. The waters can then go through Oklahoma City, but floods will be prevented.

Mr. President, I have seen half of the city of Oklahoma City under water. Oklahoma City is built on bottom land. It is stated that at one time the river ran through the center of the city, where the major portion of its large buildings are located at the present time, and it is feared that if preventive action is not taken some time a flood will occur which will cut a channel through the center of the city and perhaps destroy some of the large buildings there.

Mr. President, as a matter of policy, this item could be presented to the proper committee, and dealt with by it. But it can also be acted upon in connection with the pending bill, and the House would receive notice of what was done here.

The only thing we are asking is a modification of the authorization made in 1946 to change the plan from a levee plan to a widening canal plan. It is a plan which is recommended by the engineers. They have said it will cost somewhat more, but it is also true that the city of Oklahoma City will put up $6,000,000 as its contribution to the total cost. Six million dollars will be raised by the city. The city does not have that much money in its treasury now. In order to get the project started immediately, or soon, it is necessary to vote a bond issue. The sooner Congress acts on the matter the sooner the city of Oklahoma City can authorize a bond issue. In the event the authorization is made by the Congress, there can be a bond issue made immediately.

The question is a simple one, Mr President. The question is whether the Senate will stand on a mere technicality, or whether it will permit the item to remain in the bill. If it is not permitted to remain in the bill it will be necessary for those who are interested to go before a House committee and present the matter there. According to the estimate, the project will cost $16,000,000. The Federal contribution will be $10,000,000 and the contribution by Oklahoma City will be $6,000,000. If the changed plan, which has recently been recommended, is agreed to by Congress construction can begin the moment the city votes for the issue of bonds. The longer the matter is delayed the worse the situation will become.

Mr. President, the southwestern portion of the country is now suffering from winds, tornadoes, and floods. A few days ago a heavy rainfall brought about a serious flood in northern Texas. The depth of the water in the flooded area was 10 inches. It was sufficient to inundate and destroy the water system of the city of Fort Worth, one of the great cities of Texas. Fifteen people were drowned as the result of that flood. No doubt the mortality rate will go still higher.

In the past 48 hours, there was a heavy rainfall which brought about a 12-inch depth of floodwater at Carnegie, west of Oklahoma City. Of course, we cannot take care of floods of that kind, I realize, but unless we make some effort to minimize the effects of such floods the results will be disastrous.

Mr. President, I submitted the amendment in regular order. It was presented to the Appropriations Committee. The committee, realizing that it could not include what was strictly a legislative provision in the appropriation bill, authorized me, as a member of the committee, to offer the amendment on the floor. There was no objection in committee to my offering it on the floor so far as I know. At least, I do not remember of any objection having been made to my offering the amendment on the floor. I have followed the procedure provided by the rules of the Senate. It is perfectly permissible for a Member of the Senate to offer legislation on an appropriation bill. The rules provide that an amendment which is legislation on an appropriation bill may be submitted, and that a motion may be made at the proper time to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the amendment. If the rules are suspended by the required number of votes, the amendment can be offered on the floor. If a Member of the Senate offers the amendment, and objection is made that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, then the motion to suspend the rule must be made.

This afternoon, from my place in the Senate I offered the amendment. It was adopted. Now the question is: Shall the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and force the matter to be brought before another committee and thereby be delayed, with the possibility that no bill whatever would be reported by the committee, or if favorably reported, that it might not be passed by Congress? That is the whole issue involved in the motion now pending before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERGUSON. In order that the situation may be accurately set forth in the RECORD, I wish to say that a motion was made in the Committee on Appropriations to give the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] permission to make the motion on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Michigan objected, and stated then that he would raise a point of order on the floor. The Senator from Michigan intended to raise the point of order if and when the amendment was offered. The amendment was offered, but the Senator from Michigan did not clearly hear what was being offered, and did not know what had been done until the Chair ruled that the amendment had been agreed to. The Senator from Michigan then inquired what had happened, and upon finding out, attempted to move immediately for reconsideration of the vote. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] had obtained the floor in the meantime, and would not yield for that purpose.

Mr. President, the matter is a very important one. It deals with the question whether legislation should be placed on appropriation bills. There are committees which can act on such a matter. This is a case in which the Senate should reconsider its vote. Action was taken while very few Senators were on the floor, and no objection was raised. The Senate should now vote upon the amendment in the regular way. If the cause is a worthy one, a bill can be framed in a few days embodying the proposal, and presented to the regular legislative committee, which has a right to hear the matter and determine it.

Mr. President, I therefore ask for a vote on my motion to reconsider, and I request the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. KILGORE. I announce, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. NEELY] who is unavoidably absent, that if he were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is on official business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] are absent by leave of the Senate on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are necessarily absent.

If the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is absent on official business.

So Mr. FERGUSON's motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment on page 9, line 7, was adopted. In explanation of my purpose in making this request, if it is granted I shall offer an amendment to modify the committee amendment by the insertion of language which will be appropriate under the circumstances.

The amendment relates to a flood control item on the Trinity River, which flows through the city of Fort Worth. The project has already been authorized. This amendment would not add a dollar to the expenditure out of the Federal Treasury. It would move up the utilization of the fund from 1951 and 1952 to allow work to begin at once rather than be delayed until that time.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand photographs of a flood which visited Fort Worth, on Trinity River, within the past few days. For instance, I now display a photograph of the submerged homes of people in the lower-income brackets, many of whom are veterans. I also hold in my hand another photograph, having a caption stating that 2,000 persons were rendered homeless.

As I have said, this authorization has already been approved. The money will be spent sooner or later. However, it is our request that the appropriation be moved up, so that the engineers can begin construction work at once.

The project was authorized for $1,388,000. The local people put up $215,000. There has already been appropriated, to date, $128,000, and there has been expended to date, $61,000, which is mainly for planning and the drawing of designs and preparatory work. The balance available for those purposes is $66,000. The amount required for the completion of the planning is $24,000.

We have requested and are now requesting an appropriation of $500,000 for the fiscal year 1950, which appropriation will come out of the amount authorized. The granting of our request will not add $1 to the Government's expenditures; but the existing situation is so dangerous, the need is so urgent, and the conditions are so emergent that we feel it is absolutely necessary that work be begun at the earliest possible moment.

The Army engineers have advised that they can begin actual construction almost immediately, if the Senate takes this action. Otherwise, Mr. President, we shall be subjected, by undue delay, to the hazards and dangers of other floods which may spread disaster in their path, taking a toll not only of wealth, but of human life.

So I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider its vote in agreeing to the amendment to which I desire to offer this amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to state how much he proposes to add to the appropriations carried by this bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. The immediate effect will be to add $500,000, but it will be out of the pledge the Government has made.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that; but how much is the Senator from Texas proposing to add to the appropriations in the budget for the fiscal year 1950?

Mr. CONNALLY. That will be $500,000.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, there is no one in this body that I love more than the Senator from Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Strike out "more" and insert "less."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Very well; strike out "more" and insert "less," so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, but not so far as the senior Senator from New Mexico is concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We wish to give Texas more, not less.

Mr. President, the appealing words of the Senator from Texas are almost sufficient to break any Senator's heart. But 3 or 4 days ago there was on the unanimous-consent calendar a bill which affects only a few human beings in my State of New Mexico, at Fort Sumner. There has been no difficulty whatsoever about the bill, for its purpose was good; it was based on a sound principle, and the bill had been reported by the proper committee. However, notwithstanding that the bill related to the welfare of certain human beings in my State, in connection with a little, two-by-four project at Fort Sumner, the Senator from Texas used the power and might of his one objection to prevent the passage of that bill.

I hope there will be no ill-feeling on the part of the Senator from Texas when I say that the Senator from New Mexico now objects to the request which has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard to the request made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I very greatly regret his action in this connection. The reason the Senator from Texas objected to the bill which was on the calendar the other day was that he had been objecting to it theretofore on the ground that no interstate compact had been made between New Mexico and Texas. I stated then that as soon as that compact was ratified, I would not make objection.

But in the meantime the interstate compact for which we have contended has been completed. The junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] and I have already conferred about it, today. A bill ratifying the compact has been reported, and is on the calendar; and when the bill now before us is out of the way, I was going to make a special effort, to have the compact taken up and ratified, and thus end the matter. I am entirely agreeable to that course.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, that is quite all right; but let me tell the Senator from Texas that I also, as well as the junior Senator from New Mexico, represent the State of New Mexico.

Mr. CONNALLY. He happens to be chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. He may happen to be chairman of the committee; nevertheless, with all due respect and deference to the junior Senator from New Mexico, let me state that I am interested in the Fort Sumner project; and I still object to the request which has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 9, in line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$415,084,300" and substitute therefor "$416,084,300."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will have to move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted, in order to be able to offer this amendment to it. It involves the same situation which was involved in connection with the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Chair, and I so move.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The Chair will state that the appropriation involved in the amendment is a lump-sum appropriation; and to modify or change the amount would require the adoption of a motion to reconsider the previous action of the Senate in agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Chair state once more the present situation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was stating that the amount involved in the amendment is a lump sum, not broken down in the bill itself; and in order to modify the amount, it will be necessary for the Senate to reconsider its previous action in agreeing to the committee amendment.

The Senator from Missouri has moved that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me ask a question, please: For what purpose does the Senator from Missouri desire to have the vote by which the amendment was adopted reconsidered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that inasmuch as one motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted has been rejected, it is not now in order to make another motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. DONNELL. Then, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, between lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

Table Rock Dam and Reservoir, White River Basin, Missouri: For commencement of the Table Rock Dam and Reservoir project, a unit of the general comprehensive plan for flood control and other purposes in the White River Basin, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1218), as modified by the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941 (55 Stat. 645), $1,000,000.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is very clear, upon its face.

In support of the amendment, I shall now read a letter from Lewis A. Pick, major general, Chief of Engineers, addressed to me. The letter is dated May 5, 1949:

Reference is made to your letter of 27 April 1949 in which you state you have received a communication from Mr. Louis W. Reps, managing director of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce, Springfield, Mo., relative to the possible addition of a million dollars to the appropriation bill so the construction of Table Rock Dam and Reservoir project might be started. You ask to be informed as to whether it would be advisable for the construction of that project to be started at this time.

The Table Rock Dam and Reservoir project is one unit of the general comprehensive plan for flood control and other purposes in the White River Basin as approved by Congress in the Flood Control Act of 28 June 1938 and modified by the Flood Control Act of 18 August 1941.

The dam site is located on the White River near Branson, Mo., about 22 miles upstream from the existing hydroelectric power plant of the Empire District Electric Company at Ozark Beach, Mo., and about 109 miles upstream from the Bull Shoals Reservoir project on the White River which is currently under construction.

The flood-control storage to be provided in the Table Rock Reservoir will greatly reduce flood damages at Branson and Hollister, Mo., and at other areas in the Lake Taneycomo region. In addition, the Table Rock project, when operated in conjunction with the Bull Shoals Reservoir, will provide a high degree of flood protection along the White River below the Bull Shoals Reservoir as well as assist in the reduction of flood heights on the Mississippi River.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senate is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. DONNELL. The letter continues:

The Table Rock project also will provide for the generation of a large amount of hydroelectric power at the Table Rock site as well as providing stream-flow regulation that will materially increase the production of power—

Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is attempting to get order, but within 5 minutes after order is restored, the situation is worse than ever.

Mr. DONNELL. I realize that, Mr. President. I thank the Chair for his kindness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If Senators are compelled to converse, let them, please, leave the Chamber. Senators who have the floor are entitled to the courtesy and the attention of the Senate. If Senators cannot give it to them, they should absent themselves.

Mr. DONNELL. I very much appreciate the courtesy, the persistence, and the kindness of the Chair. I was reading this sentence:

The Table Rock project also will provide for the generation of a large amount of hydroelectric power at the Table Rock site as well as providing stream flow regulation that will materially increase the production of power at the downstream Ozark Beach and Bull Shoals plants.

In view of the large flood-control and hydroelectric-power benefits that will be realized when the Table Rock project is completed and placed in operation, it is considered highly desirable that the authorized project be initiated at an early date. Accordingly, you may be assured that we are prepared to initiate that work promptly upon the appropriation by Congress of the necessary funds for that purpose.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS A. PICK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. President, it will be observed at the outset of General Pick's letter to me, which I have just read, that he refers to a communication from Mr. Lewis W. Reps, managing director of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce, Springfield, Mo. There are two observations in the letter which I think in frankness to the Senate and in fairness to myself I should read. The entire letter is available if anybody desires it. But I call attention to two particular sentences. One has reference to the Table Rock Reservoir, and is as follows:

Its construction will mean a sizable sum to the Empire District Electric Co. for the reason that Lake Taneycomo will be held at a constant level after Table Rock is completed.

I desire to make this comment: While I am confident the writer of this letter wrote it with the very best of intention, I assure the Senate and the public that I am not moved to offer the amendment because of any benefit to any one particular corporation or individual. I have nothing against the Empire District Electric Co. It is a great corporation. It is, as I understand, controlling and operating a great hydroelectric plant at Lake Taneycomo. But I am not offering the amendment in order to benefit the Empire District Electric Co. I am offering it because of the information received from Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, Chief of Engineers. In the same letter from Mr. Reps, there are two other statements which likewise I am sure were induced by the best of intentions, but which I think I should comment upon in justice certainly to myself and, I believe, to all parties concerned. He says:

The appropriations bill soon will come before the Senate. Would you feel inclined to ask that a million dollars be added so that actual construction could start on Table Rock.

I know that such action on your part would bring some criticism to you, but on the other hand it would bring far more praise. It is going to be done anyhow some day and if you would make this gesture, the credit would be yours. Let me know.

While I am not in any sense criticizing Mr. Reps, and I repeat I am confident that he acted in writing the letter with the utmost of good motives, I am not consciously moved, and I do not think I am unconsciously moved, by any desire to acquire praise or to avoid criticism in offering the amendment.

I may say that I have subsequently received from another gentleman, in whom I have great confidence, a letter which came recently to my office in which he likewise makes some mention that "you would receive far more commendation than criticism." He is referring to the inclusion of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, so that this work can be gotten under way.

Again, Mr. President, I want the RECORD to be clear that I have stated the contents of the letters and that I am not consciously, nor do I believe that I am unconsciously, moved by the question of criticism or praise.

Mr. AIKEN rose.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont asked appropriately, a little while ago, what was the reason for the earlier motion which I presented with respect to an amendment which the Chair ruled out of order. Subsequently, I take it, his same question would appropriately apply to the motion which I now make for the inclusion of the amendment on page 11 between lines 21 and 22.

Mr. President, the Table Rock reservoir project pertains to the White River district in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, particularly, but not entirely. I think it applies likewise, as indicated in the letter from General Pick, to the Mississippi River. It is my understanding that the benefits for flood control which would be realized from the Table Rock reservoir would accrue to three separate and distinct categories or areas. One would be the highly developed areas between Table Rock and the head of the Bull Shoals reservoir, which latter reservoir is in the State of Arkansas; second, areas along the White River, downstream from the Bull Shoals dam; and third, to the Mississippi River itself.

It is my understanding from the report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1948, part I, volume 1, page 1413, that the total estimated cost of the Table Rock Reservoir is $76,340,000, and that the total estimated cost of the Bull Shoals Reservoir is $76,300,000. It is my further understanding that, as appears in the report of the district engineer in House Document No. 917, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, both projects are essential to the development of the Upper White River Basin above the Bull Shoals project, which is down river farther than are Table Rock and the Table Rock Reservoir to which I refer.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I should be glad to yield to the Senator, but the Senator from Vermont was on his feet, and I shall yield first to him.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Missouri has answered one of my questions since I have been on my feet, but I have several more questions to which I should like to have answers.

What is the capacity of the reservoir for flood-control purposes?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I do not know whether I can answer that question with accuracy, without further examination of the figures. I read from a document, which I believe to be correct, which was furnished me by a gentleman in whom I have confidence:

As to the White River Valley downstream from the Bull Shoals Reservoir, House Document No. 917, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, proposed Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs act as one unit in controlling flood flows. That report indicates that Bull Shoals is the key reservoir in the White River plan of development and indicates that the flood-control storage in both Bull Shoals and Table Rock is required to give the desired control of run-off from the drainage area upstream from the Bull Shoals Dam. Downstream from the Bull Shoals Dam there are over 1,000,000 acres of agricultural land in the White River Valley which will be benefited. Included in this area are such cities as Batesville, Newport, Augusta, and Clarendon, Ark., and hundreds of miles of highways and railroads. Many thousands of people reside in the flood plane.

At an earlier point in this document, Mr. President, there is this reference to the extent of territory between Table Rock and the head of the downstream Bull Shoals Reservoir:

The White River between Table Rock and the head of the Bull Shoals Reservoir is occupied by Lake Taneycomo, a lake formed by a dam near Forsyth, Mo., which belongs to the Empire District Electric Co. This private project is a private power development and its lake level generally is below the top of the bank of the stream. Large sums of money have been invested in camps and recreational facilities around the lake. These facilities, as well as parts of the towns of Branson and Hollister, Mo., located on the banks of the lake only a short distance downstream from Table Rock Dam site, are subject to flood. The losses in these areas of concentrated population are high, and there is danger of losing human life. The most recent large flood occurred in 1945, when the tangible losses were hundreds of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of the human suffering which normally accompanies such catastrophes. These concentrated areas of population would be protected by the Table Rock Reservoir.

Referring directly, in statistics, to the question asked by the Senator from Vermont, in the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1948, part I, volume I, page 1413, I read this information:

Reservoir, Table Rock, River "—

The ditto marks refer to the White River. They are underneath the Bull Shoals item.

Distance above mouth, 528.5. Nearest town, Branson, Mo. Maximum height of dam and type, 268 feet, concrete gravity.
Reservoir capacity—

I hope these will be the figures which my friend desires—

Three million three hundred forty-eight acre-feet.
Power developed, 84,000 kilowatts.
Total estimated cost, $76,340,000.

If the Senator from Vermont will indulge me, I should like to insert at this point similar information for the Bull Shoals reservoir. It is as follows:

Reservoir, Bull Shoals, White River. Nearest distance above mouth, 418.6 miles.

The figures "528.5" which I read with reference to the Table Rock project likewise represent miles—

Nearest town, Amos, Ark.
Maximum height of dam and type, 283 feet, concrete gravity.
Reservoir capacity, 5,408,000 acre-feet.
Power developed, 120,000 kilowatts.
Total estimated cost, $76,360,000.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes. Can the Senator now tell us how the cost would be divided between flood control and power?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I do not think I can give that information. I have not studied it with that particular point in mind. I have looked into the matter with reference to the point made by General Pick as to the importance of early construction. The question of the desirability of the reservoir, I take it, has already been settled and decided by the Congress in its action in an earlier session some years ago. I would not be able, without taking considerable time, to develop the information which the Senator desires.

Mr. AIKEN. From rough figuring it would appear that half of the cost would be for the development of power and half for flood control. The cost of power would be approximately $440 a kilowatt, which seems to me to be an extremely high cost when considering a dam from which some private power company would receive practically all the benefits.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. With reference to the assumption of the Senator from Vermont as to the division, I am unable to say whether it is correct. I may state, however, that a report which I now hold in my hand, to the Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, House of Representatives Document No. 917, sets forth in very considerable detail information regarding this matter and recommends that the Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs on the upper White River, in Missouri and Arkansas, be constructed at Federal expense for the combined purposes of flood-control and power development. I observe that the estimate is much lower in this report than the estimate made later. The estimate in the old report is $24,500,000 for the former and $38,000,000 for the latter, or a total cost to the United States of $72,500,000 for the two reservoirs, with such modification of plans set forth as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, may be advisable.

Mr. AIKEN. I am simply, in my own mind, drawing comparisons of cost. If half the cost is charged to power, it would amount to approximately $440 per kilowatt, which would compare with $84 per kilowatt for the development of power on the St. Lawrence River, which has been regarded as so expensive that the Government cannot afford to undertake it. It seems to me we have to use care and to be sure we do not spend too much money in developing uneconomical power sites when somebody does not feel he can develop it for himself.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield, but let me say that this seems to me very similar to a case which was decided some years ago. This was back in 1940, and the project was carefully considered, I take it, and it was decided upon. I observe that the report of the Federal Power Commission is signed by Mr. Leland Olds, Chairman. I have not read all of it, but I might read just a sentence or two. I observe on page 4 of Document 917, being the letter of Mr. Leland Olds, Chairman. He says:

> Studies by the Commission's staff indicate that multiple-purpose reservoirs at the Table Rock and Bull Shoals sites, primarily for the control of floods, would have a substantial beneficial effect upon navigation; that they would be the most important elements in a comprehensive plan for the development of the water resources of the White River Basin; and that the power that could be produced at these projects could be absorbed by the expanding power markets of the region in a reasonable period of time. The possibility of constructing a multiple-purpose project at the Norfork site in the same basin does not affect this conclusion. The Commission's staff observes also that higher dams may be desirable at these sites, more fully to develop their potentialities. The reports of your department—> do not indicate whether it would be feasible to construct these dams to greater heights. Should it be possible to do so, the power benefits would appear to warrant the larger investment for the higher dams.

That is to say, the Department of the Chief of Engineers—

I observe a little further down the concluding sentence of the report, which is a rather lengthy sentence, reads:

> On the basis of the reports of your department—

That is, the department of the Chief of Engineers—> and studies by the Commission's staff—

That is, I take it, the staff of the Federal Power Commission—

> the Commission concludes that multiple-purpose projects at the Table Rock and Bull Shoals sites on the White River in Missouri and Arkansas, respectively, are essential units in a plan to develop comprehensively the water resources of the White River Basin; that the Bull Shoals project should be the first of the two constructed—

And I may interpolate that that is largely under way at this time, as I understand—> that the power market available could absorb the output from the Bull Shoals project very soon after completion; that the growing power market, together with the need for additional flood control, would soon justify the construction of the Table Rock project; that both projects are desirable and economically feasible; that their construction should be authorized; and that very careful consideration should be given to the above suggestion for possible increases in the heights of both the Table Rock and Bull Shoals Dams.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to inquire upon what assumption is the Senator from Vermont proceeding when he says that it is being constructed for a private power enterprise?

Mr. AIKEN. I got that information from the letter which the Senator from Missouri just read to the Senate, in which someone advised him that a certain private power company would be the principal beneficiary, so far as power was concerned; that it would add greatly to its supply.

Mr. DONNELL. If the Senator will let me interrupt him, I think the Senator from Vermont inadvertently misquoted the letter. I should like to read it.

Mr. AIKEN. I did not quote it at all.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator referred to it. It is from Mr. Reps, of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce, and reads in this way:

> Its construction will mean a sizable sum to the Empire District Electric Co. for the reason that Lake Taneycomo will be held at a constant level after Table Rock is completed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, a private power company has a dam at some other point in that general water area.

Mr. DONNELL. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And the construction of this dam might benefit that power company. But I dare say to the Senator from Vermont that any benefit which might flow to that private power company by the construction of this dam was not taken into account in determining the ratio of benefits to cost in authorizing the project. In other words, that is merely incidental to the construction. As I understand, there is no definite policy that at any of these projects, when constructed, the power goes to the private power company. The regular policy as to power, under the 1946 act, is that the power generated shall be turned over to the Department of the Interior at the bus bar, and that it shall then be wholesaled by that department, going to cooperatives first.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. If the Senator will permit me, I will yield to him in a moment. I wish to read some further language from the letter of Mr. Leland Olds, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, to the Chief of Engineers, dated May 29, 1940. This bears on one or two of the questions which have been raised. He says:

> If the recommendations of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors should be adopted—
> 1. A dam would be constructed at the Table Rock site at mile 528 on the White River in Missouri; and another at the Bull Shoals site at mile 420 on the White River in Arkansas, both to be used for flood control and for regulation of stream flow for the production of hydroelectric power. The Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs would have gross capacities of 1,685,000 acre-feet and 2,750,000 feet, respectively;
> 2. Power plants with a combined initial installed capacity of 185,000 kilowatts would be constructed at these dams with possible total energy output of 619,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually;
> 3. The cost to the Federal Government for the Table Rock project would amount to $34,500,000, and for the Bull Shoals project, to $38,000,000, a total of $72,500,000.

I pause again to call attention to the increases in cost compared with present conditions. The next bears on the proposition the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Arkansas were discussing:

> 11. The power plants would be constructed, operated, and maintained by the United States under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and the power would be disposed of—

I hope the Senator from Arkansas may hear this, too—> and the power would be disposed of at the switchboard under contracts approved by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, there is now in that area the Southwest Power Administration, which handles the distribution of much of the power that is being developed or generated there.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri indicated that the power was to be sold at the switch bar, which I assume would be the bus bar. It would be restricted to one customer, that is, the customer who has the line going to the present site at the present time.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am not an electrician, but I certainly can see no reason why the power could not be disposed of at the switchboard to any number of customers.

Mr. AIKEN. The total output resulting from these dams, I understand, includes the output from down river plants as well as the output at the dam, and in many cases the down river plants receive far more of the benefits from the construction of the dam than does the owner of the generating equipment at the dam itself.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for several questions?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I inquire whether this matter received a budget estimate?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I will have to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he would be kind enough to give us that information. I may say to the Senator from Michigan inquires whether or not this particular item received a budget estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The budget estimate was for planning, $125,000, and the committee allowed that amount.

Mr. FERGUSON. But there was no money in the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget for construction?

Mr. McKELLAR. There was no money in the budget estimate for construction.

Mr. DONNELL. That is my understanding, yes. I should like to be certain that I am correct on that point. The Senator from Tennessee or members of his staff undoubtedly can give us the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the fact.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wanted to make sure of that fact. That is also the understanding of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. The second question is: Was the matter presented to the subcommittee?

Mr. DONNELL. No; at least not by me. I do not know whether it was presented to the subcommittee by anyone else.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. If the money has not yet been appropriated for planning, how is the estimated cost of $76,000,000 arrived at?

Mr. DONNELL. I think, Mr. President—and again I shall have to refer to the representatives of the Appropriations Committee—I think there has been a substantial amount already appropriated for planning of the entire comprehensive project, of which this is only a part. The comprehensive plan includes not only the Bull Shoals and Table Rock Reservoirs but also the Griers Ferry in Arkansas, Lone Rock in Arkansas, Norfork in Arkansas, Bell Valley in Arkansas, Water Valley in Arkansas, and Clearwater in Missouri.

I cannot give the information the Senator asks because I do not have it, but in view of the fact that the Corps of Engineers wrote a letter such as this of May 5, which was forwarded to Springfield and has been returned and was received by me on May 19, which was yesterday, in which appears the words:

> It is considered highly desirable that the authorized project be initiated at an early date.

And in another sentence preceding this language:

> In view of the large flood control and hydroelectric power benefits that will be realized when the Table Rock project is completed and in operation—

And then in view of the fact that it concludes with the sentence:

> Accordingly you may be sure that we are prepared to initiate that work promptly upon the appropriation by Congress of the necessary funds for that purpose.

I would assume it to be not an unreasonable conclusion that they have made plans, or else they would not be able to give us such assurance. I assume also, if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who has kindly risen, will indulge me a moment, that by reason of the fact that further amounts were added in the budget estimate for plans, doubtless further plans have been made. I hope that is so; but obviously they do not interfere, in my judgment, based on the letter written by General Pick, with the actual entry upon construction at an early date.

I yield now to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have, as the Senator from Missouri knows, from long experience, the greatest sympathy with the production of electric power. I think very highly of the proposal the Senator has made. But the situation is that money was appropriated for the original plans years ago, but they were not completed. The Board of Engineers, when they came before the committee, testified that all they asked was $125,000 for planning purposes, to complete the plans which had been begun, before they could recommend a proper amount for construction. That was the way it came before the committee, and the committee accepted the budget estimate of $125,000, and it is in the bill now.

It seems to me the Senator is in rather a difficult position under those circumstances in seeking the additional amount for construction at this time. I have very great consideration for his project, so far as I am personally concerned, and I want to help the Senator if I can. But I believe that he should await the completion of the plans so that we may know exactly how much money will be required.

The project is a very large one and an important one. The whole amount asked for is $76,000,000. That is the reason why the engineers wanted this additional money for planning. I think the committee acted very wisely in granting money for additional planning.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I might add in that connection, that an attempt was made today by a representative of my office to reach General Pick, but he was not available at the moment, whereupon the representative of my office conferred over the telephone with Colonel Tyler, who, I am informed, is assistant for flood control. A part of a pencil note which I have in my hand reads as follows:

> One to one and one-half million dollars could be profitably used during fiscal year.

I observe that that language is in line with the customary language as it appears on page 14 of the 1948 report when it uses this language is referring to a certain sum:

> Can be profitably expended during the fiscal year 1950 for preparation of detailed plans and construction on projects, as follows:

I may add that among those projects as listed on that page is "Table Rock Reservoirs, $250,000."

Mr. President, I can well appreciate the force of the point made by the Senator from Tennessee, and my only answer to it is that it would appear to me that when General Pick wrote this letter on May 5 it was obviously his conclusion that they were sufficiently far advanced with their plans to go ahead, or else he would not have written the letter. That, I think, is enforced by the information received from Colonel Tyler today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The difficulty today about the situation is that when the engineer in charge of the matter came to that conclusion he should have gone before the Bureau of the Budget. He should have presented there the report of the Corps of Engineers and asked for a budget estimate. If such an estimate had come before the committee there would not, in my judgment, have been any trouble about it.

I suggest to the Senator that the thing for him to do is to see that the Corps of Engineers makes the recommendation to the Bureau of the Budget, and that a budget estimate is obtained.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I very much appreciate what the Senator has said. I can well see the force of it. He may be quite right in his statement. I think I should like my amendment voted upon this afternoon, but I appreciate the force of his suggestion.

I wish to place in the RECORD, if I may, before I yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], who has just risen, information which was sent to me by Mr. Rex Allaman, of Forsyth, Mo., in whom I have confidence.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I should like to make an observation. I appreciate very much the Senator's interest in the project, and I share his interest. It is a project which, while it is not located in my State physically, would result in great benefit to my State. I am just as anxious to see the project started and get under construction and completed as is the Senator from Missouri.

However, we are confronted with this situation: The project was not presented for a construction appropriation at this time, but only for planning money. The Bull Shoals Dam project which is below it, is under construction. More than $20,000,000 has already been appropriated for it. There is an additional $13,000,000-plus in this bill for the Bull Shoals Dam. We are moving along in that area in the general development program. I say to the Senator if we load this bill down with more than it can carry, and our conferees have to go into conference with the great difference there is already between the House bill and the Senate committee version, we are likely to jeopardize some of our projects. If the appropriation were made it could not be judiciously expended now, until the money has been spent in making the plans for which we are now appropriating.

I should like to support the Senator's amendment. I should like to see this project in the bill. There are other projects equally meritorious that I should like to see constructed. But we have to conduct this program with some measure of order and relativity, and make such progress as we can. The fiscal situation being what it is, I hope the Senator will not press his amendment. I think it might jeopardize other things in which the Senator and I are both interested.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am very greatly impressed with the views presented by the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Arkansas, as well as suggestions which have been made to me formally and informally while I have been on my feet. In a moment I am going to follow the suggestion which was made to me, to withdraw this amendment if I may have leave to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may withdraw his amendment without consent.

Mr. DONNELL. I ask leave that the document entitled "Benefits and Effects of Table Rock Reservoir," the author of which I do not know, but which has been furnished to me, as I have indicated, by Mr. Rex Allaman, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks. I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] that included in it is a very considerable amount of information on the subject of power.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENEFITS AND EFFECTS OF TABLE ROCK RESERVOIR

The authority for the construction of the Table Rock Reservoir for the primary purposes of flood control and the generation of hydroelectric power is contained in the Flood Control Act of 1941. This act modified the six-reservoir plan approved in the act of June 28, 1938. One of the modifications was to have the plan include "* * * projects for flood control and other purposes recommended by the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 917, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session * * *." This reference document includes the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers for the construction of Bull Shoals and Table Rock Reservoirs for the control of floods, the development of hydroelectric power, and for other beneficial uses.

A review of the major benefits and effects of the Table Rock Reservoir is given in subsequent paragraphs.

FLOOD CONTROL

The benefits for flood control which would be realized from Table Rock would accrue to highly developed areas between Table Rock and the head of the Bull Shoals Reservoir, to areas along the White River downstream from the Bull Shoals Dam, and to the Mississippi River.

The White River between Table Rock and the head of Bull Shoals Reservoir is occupied by Lake Taneycomo, a lake formed by a dam near Forsyth, Mo., which belongs to the Empire District Electric Co. This private project is a run-of-river power development and its lake level generally is below the top of bank of the stream. Large sums of money have been invested in camps and recreational facilities around the lake. These facilities, as well as parts of the towns of Branson and Hollister, Mo., located on the banks of the lake only a short distance downstream from Table Rock Dam site, are subject to flooding. Losses in these areas of concentrated population are high and there is the danger of loss of human life. The most recent large flood occurred in 1945 when the tangible losses were hundreds of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of the human suffering which normally accompanies such catastrophes. These concentrated areas of population would be protected by the Table Rock Reservoir.

As to the White River Valley downstream from the Bull Shoals Reservoir, House Document 917, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, proposes the Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs to act as one unit in controlling the flood flows. That report indicates that Bull Shoals is the key reservoir in any White River plan of development, but indicates that the flood-control storage in both Bull Shoals and Table Rock is required to give the desired control of run-off from the drainage area upstream from the Bull Shoals Dam. Downstream from the Bull Shoals Dam there are over 1,000,000 acres of agricultural land in the White River Valley which will be benefited. Included in this area are such cities as Batesville, Newport, Augusta, and Clarendon, Ark., and hundreds of miles of highways and railroads. Many thousands of people reside in the flood plain.

According to House Document 917, flood-control reservoirs have material and valuable effects on reducing flood heights in the lower Mississippi River in addition to their direct value locally. The reduction of major flood heights in the lower Mississippi River increases the factors of safety of the existing levee system. The lowering of flood heights in this lower reach of the Mississippi River is of value also in reducing frequency of use of authorized floodways and in reducing somewhat the frequency and depth of inundation of parts of the large unleveed areas.

In House Document 917 flood-control benefits were given as $326,600 annually for Table Rock Reservoir based on a flood-control storage of 485,000 acre-feet. The flood-control storage now proposed for Table Rock is 760,000 acre-feet. The original flood-control benefits were about $0.67 per acre-foot of flood-control storage. In view of increase in prices since 1939, the date of the report, it is reasonable to assume that this unit value has at least doubled. On the basis of the flood-control capacity now proposed and on the basis of a unit value of flood-control storage equal to $1.34 per acre-foot of storage, the flood-control benefits of Table Rock are now estimated to equal at least $1,000,000 annually.

POWER

From table 1 of the Federal Power Commission report "Power Market Survey Multiple-Purpose Projects in the Southwestern Region," dated December 1944, the installed capacity for Table Rock Reservoir is 84,000 kilowatts consisting of two units, and the dependable capacity of the plant would be 64,000 kilowatts. The firm energy is 332,000,000 kilowatt-hours with a total average annual energy amounting to 372,000,000 kilowatt-hours. On page 7 of section 1 of the report it is stated that the regulation provided by the large storage capacity at Table Rock will affect materially the amount and character of the power available at the existing Ozark Beach plant and at Bull Shoals and other proposed downstream developments. Due to lack of stream-flow regulation, the present installation of four 4,000-kilowatt units at Ozark Beach produces little or no continuous power. The energy output during an average year is estimated to be about 69,000,000 kilowatt-hours at the Ozark Beach plant. With the Table Rock Reservoir in operation it is estimated that in an average year the energy from the Ozark Beach plant will be increased to 95,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The report of the Federal Power Commission indicates that the dependable capacity of the Ozark Beach plant with Table Rock in operation would be increased from zero to 16,000 kilowatts. The Federal Power Commission indicates further that the installed capacity at Ozark Beach would be doubled ultimately and thus obtain far greater benefit. However, this potential benefit has not been considered in this presentation.

As to the increase in energy and capacity at the downstream Bull Shoals plant, the pamphlet issued by the Little Rock District, Corps of Engineers, September 1947, subject: "Bull Shoals Dam and Reservoir Project, Arkansas and Missouri," gives the total average annual output of the Bull Shoals plant as 575,000,000 kilowatt-hours, of which 394,000,000 is the prime annual output. This prime output is without the regulation of flow from the Table Rock project. Table 1 of the above-referenced report of the Federal Power Commission indicates a total prime energy output of 533,000,000 kilowatt-hours per year at Bull Shoals with Table Rock in operation. Hence, the regulated flow from Table Rock will result in an increase in prime energy of 139,000,000 kilowatt-hours per year at Bull Shoals. It is reasonable to assume that this increased prime energy could be disposed of on a 40-percent load factor, resulting in an increase of 40,000 kilowatts in dependable capacity for Bull Shoals.

In summation, the increase in power attributable to the Table Rock project is as follows:

	Increased prime capacity	Increased energy
	Kilowatts	Kilowatt-hours
Table Rock	64,000	372,000,000
Ozark Beach	16,000	26,000,000
Bull Shoals	40,000
Total	120,000	398,000,000

Appendix No. V of House Document 917 gives a unit value of $11.23 per kilowatt of dependable capacity after correcting for transmission losses. The report also gives a unit energy value of 1.8 mills per kilowatt-hour after correcting for transmission losses. The capacity value refers largely to the cost of construction of equivalent capacity in new steam plants. As construction costs have increased materially since 1939, the date of the report, the capacity value given therein is out of date. One of the latest published reports of the Federal Power Commission is the Power Market Survey, State of Texas, Part 1—Power Requirements, dated June 1947.

Table 66 of this report gives capacity values ranging from $16.70 to $19.20.

It therefore appears reasonable to assume that the increased capacity attributed to Table Rock would have a value of somewhere around $18 per kilowatt of prime capacity. Table 67 of the same report gives the unit energy value as ranging from 1.05 mills to 2.6 mills. It appears reasonable to assume that the energy would have a unit value of approximately 1.8 mills. Applying these unit values to the total increase in power as given above results in a total power benefit of $2,876,400 per year, of which $2,160,000 represents capacity value and $716,400 the energy value. According to table 42 of the Federal Power Commission report on the Multiple-Purpose Projects in the Southwestern Region, the increased power could be absorbed by 1955 or approximately by the time the Table Rock project could be completed if construction funds were made available at this time. It is known that the present power requirements in the Southwestern region materially exceed those forecast by the Federal Power Commission in its 1944 report.

COST AND BENEFITS

On page 1413 of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for Fiscal Year 1948 the total estimated cost of the Table Rock project is given as $76,340,000. A review of recent Corps of Engineers reports on large reservoir projects indicates a relation between annual charges and initial costs of 4.2 percent. Applying 4.2 percent to this revised estimated construction cost of Table Rock Reservoir indicates an annual charge of $3,206,300. The flood-control and power benefits as estimated above amount to $3,876,400. Therefore, the benefit to cost ratio is 1.21 to 1.

SEDIMENTATION

Of direct concern to local interests around Lake Taneycomo is the sedimentation which has filled over one-half of the capacity of that lake in about 35 years. An Advance Report on the Sedimentation Survey of Lake Taneycomo, Taney County, Mo., was published in September 1936 by the United States Department of Agriculture, Soil Conservation Service. Data in that report are based on measurements of sediment in the lake in 1935, at which time the reservoir was a little over 22 years old. These data show that the average loss of capacity had been 900 acre-feet per year. This is an appreciable loss of capacity in Lake Taneycomo which had a total original storage capacity of only about 44,000 acre-feet. The filling of the lake has become so severe that local interests prevailed on Congress to authorize an investigation of the area. A public hearing was held by the district engineer, Little Rock District, Corps of Engineers, in Branson, Mo., on May 13, 1948, relative to this investigation. The local interests were unanimous in their opinion that sedimentation of Lake Taneycomo has affected recreational use of the lake and has interfered with navigation. They expressed the fear that further filling of the lake will destroy the usefulness of developments on the lake. The construction of Table Rock Reservoir would reduce future sedimentation in Lake Taneycomo. At the same time there would be no problem of losing the capacity of Table Rock Reservoir by sedimentation. The dead storage capacity proposed for Table Rock is nearly 800,000 acre-feet. If it is assumed that this reservoir would lose capacity by the same amount as Lake Taneycomo (900 acre-feet per year), it would take over 800 years before the dead storage would be filled and before the capacities reserved for power draw-down or flood-control storage would be affected. With a total capacity of over 3,000,000 acre-feet proposed for Table Rock Reservoir, it is obvious that this rate of sedimentation will be no problem.

In House Document 917 an estimate was made of sediment expected in Table Rock Reservoir. The document states that "in order to provide for the most severe circumstances an average silt content of 0.05 percent has been assumed" at Table Rock. The percent relates to volume of flow of the stream. On this basis it was estimated that the loss of capacity at Table Rock would be 1,630 acre-feet per year. Even this larger rate of sedimentation would have no effect on the primary purposes of the Table Rock project for about 500 years.

The benefits which would result from the prevention of further sedimentation of Lake Taneycomo would be large; however, they have not been evaluated in determining the benefit to cost ratio of the Table Rock project.

RECREATION

House Document No. 917 (par. 116) states that the recreation and wildlife benefits to the Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs would be large. However, no monetary value was assigned for this benefit. House Document No. 917 states that "This area is noted for its clear streams and scenic beauty, and is perhaps the most outstanding inland recreational area between the Appalachian and Rocky Mountains. In mountainous areas large bodies of water are ordinarily outstanding as centers of attraction."

A public hearing was held in Harrison, Ark., on January 10, 1939, with reference to several reservoirs, including Table Rock. A transcript of this hearing accompanied the report published as House Document No. 917. Mr. Carl Kessler, field representative of Ozark Playgrounds Association, presented a statement at that hearing in which the recreational value of Table Rock Reservoir was stressed. Unofficial count of visitors to Lake Norfork indicates almost 100,000 man-days of fishing during 1948, and that total visitation to the project was about 250,000 persons. Table Rock, with a power pool area about twice that of Norfork and a greater length of shore line, would draw at least that many persons annually with a resultant benefit of tourist trade to this area.

The value of fishery in an impoundment is given in Fisheries and Wildlife Resources in the Tennessee Valley published in 1947 by the Forestry Relations Department, Tennessee Valley Authority. It is stated in that publication that on Norris Lake each acre of water generated $26 worth of business. If that value were applied to the full power pool area of Table Rock (43,000 acres), it would indicate that fishing would have a value of over a million dollars per year.

OTHER BENEFITS

There are other potential benefits which would accrue to the Table Rock Reservoir, some of which are intangible but nonetheless real. These other benefits are recognized in House Document No. 917, which serves as the general basis for remarks herein on these other benefits.

The Table Rock Reservoir is in a reach of White River which is not now considered a navigable water of the United States. The White River downstream from Branson is considered a navigable stream. Navigation in the lower White River is limited by shoals and bars. The Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs would produce a regulated flow of about 3,350 cubic feet per second. The minimum flow at the Bull Shoals Dam site under natural conditions was a little over 100 cubic feet per second. Although no allocation of capacity at Table Rock or Bull Shoals Reservoir has been made for the needs of navigation, the regulation of flow which the two reservoirs would insure can be expected to improve navigation in the White River. Also, such improvement would, to some degree, benefit navigation on the Mississippi River.

Regulation of flows also provides a potential irrigation benefit to lands along the White River. Much has been said, in news articles and in public hearings, relative to irrigation of crops other than rice. A plan was recently announced by the Mississippi River Commission to provide a supplemental water supply to the Grand Prairie region in Arkansas. Water would be pumped from the White River at DeValls Bluff, Ark. The future demand for water from White River may be much larger than now foreseen for irrigation of row crops as well as rice, in which case the regulation of the stream flow would be beneficial for this purpose.

The flood-control storage in Table Rock and Bull Shoals Reservoirs would have some measure of beneficial effects in stabilizing the stream alinement on White River. Also, the control of floods will lessen the danger of loss of human lives, improve health conditions, tend to improve the morale of communities, and encourages development of areas along White River from a farming and living standpoint.

PERTINENT DATA

The following pertinent data on Table Rock Reservoir as proposed by the Little Rock District in 1946 indicate the relocations and other features involved in its construction:

Pool elevation, feet above mean sea level:

Top of flood-control pool	931
Top of power pool	915

Features by States

Total	119,000

SUMMATION

In summary, it may be said that the Table Rock Reservoir is one of the eight reservoirs approved for construction in the White River Basin and is one of three authorized for generation of hydroelectric power as well as for flood control. A review of the project indicates that the present estimated construction cost is justified on the basis of evaluated benefits. However, a review of the benefits as set up by the Corps of Engineers reveals that many benefits would accrue to the project which have not been evaluated. These include items such as prevention of further sedimentation of Lake Taneycomo, recreation, and improvement of low-water flows. It is believed that if values were derived for these added benefits, the benefit to cost ratio of the entire project would be at least 2 to 1.

There is the further fact that although Bull Shoals Reservoir is the key project in any plan of reservoir development of the White River Basin, the Table Rock Reservoir is presented in reports of the Corps of Engineers as a companion project to the Bull Shoals Reservoir. As stated by the district engineer in House Document 917, "both projects are essential to the development of the upper White River Basin." The Bull Shoals project is now under construction. The Table Rock project should be placed under construction now in order that the desired control of floods and the production of needed hydroelectric power may be realized.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. May I ask who Mr. Allaman is?

Mr. DONNELL. He is a gentleman who lives at Forsyth, Mo. He is a man of high standing in the community. He came to see me with a group of gentlemen several weeks ago, with regard to this matter.

Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DONNELL. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that it is my expectation to follow this matter through along the line so courteously suggested by him and by the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 3734) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. FERGUSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks on the civil-functions bill an article entitled "The Battle That Squanders Billions," written by Hon. Leslie A. Miller, chairman of the National Resources Committee, Hoover Commission, and ex-Governor of Wyoming, and published in the Saturday Evening Post of May 14, 1949.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BATTLE THAT SQUANDERS BILLIONS

(By Leslie A. Miller, chairman, National Resources Committee, Hoover Commission; ex-Governor of Wyoming)

When former President Herbert Hoover asked me to serve on the National Resources Committee, one of the task forces of his Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, I went into the job with my eyes open. I knew it would be a sort of surgeon's job. And I suspected just enough about the swollen, pork-fed condition of our two principal prospective patients—the autocratic Army engineers and the Department of the Interior's spendthrift Bureau of Reclamation—to know they would scream loudly when we sank the surgeon's knife into some of their diseased tissues.

I said I went into the job with my eyes open. They are open a lot wider now. As close as we thought we were to the problem of how the taxpayers' money is being spent for irrigation, flood control, and power development, my seven committee colleagues and I were amazed and dismayed to learn how bad the situation really is—how billions are being squandered on duplicating, badly engineered projects.

John Q. Taxpayer doesn't realize it, but efforts are being made to place his name as cosigner on a note for $52,706,500,000—or, to break it down, about $1,500 in tax obligations for the average American family. That is the staggering amount estimated as the cost of water-resources development projects now in the construction and planning stages, and it does not include the $4,779,700,000 spent on projects already completed. All but a fraction of these projects originate with the Engineers or the Reclamation Bureau.

As a Westerner who has been in public service for a good part of my life, I yield to no reasonable man in my appreciation of water resources and what their proper development can mean to my part of the country and to the Nation as a whole. But $52,706,500,000 worth is a terrific water bill.

Along with my astonishment over the size of the bill that the Engineers and Reclamationists are running up for us, there also is a touch of disillusionment. It has not been inspiring to witness the manner in which the Army Corps of Engineers, a body of soldiers supposedly responsible to its commander in chief, the President, has engaged in undisguised political lobbying to defeat the President's wholly admirable efforts to reduce the high cost of government in this field.

Nor can I say much for the way some elements in Congress already have indicated they will try to temporize with our recommendations to strip the Corps of Engineers of its civil functions, a field in which the Army does not belong. I realize how longingly those Congressmen who make up the so-called rivers-and-harbors bloc look upon the lush projects which the Engineers seem to think it is their privilege to bestow. But, in this era of top-heavy government, costly foreign aid and staggering national-defense bills, it should be the solemn duty of every legislator to place preservation of the American economy above preservation of political pork.

The principal charges I must bring against the Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, as result of my investigations as chairman of the Hoover Commission's natural resources task force, are these:

1. The two agencies are so violently jealous of each other that extravagant and wholly senseless competition has sprung up. They will encroach on each other's territory and stake out rival claims simply to beat out each other in the race to construct expensive projects. Naturally, it is the taxpayer who suffers.

2. In their indecent zeal to extend their empires, both agencies are guilty of underestimating—apparently deliberately—the cost of the projects they propose to build. This underestimating has the effect of bamboozling Congress into easy acquiescence to proposed projects. Then, after the first batch of concrete is poured, the Engineers and Reclamationists always can come back with a request for a supplemental appropriation. For instance, if the whole $52,706,500,000 water-development program should be approved by Congress, the entire job when completed, on the basis of past performances in estimating by the Engineers and Bureau of Reclamation, probably would cost more than double that figure.

3. Both agencies stoop to deception in furtherance of their efforts to stake out claims on projects. The Engineers will use navigation and flood control as a guise for a hydroelectric project; the Reclamationists use irrigation as their alibi for hydroelectric development. While there may be much to say in favor of Government construction of hydroelectric projects, it is my impression that the United States still is not a socialistic country and that the production and sale of electricity remains a matter for private enterprise. I say this with full appreciation of the Tennessee Valley Authority experiment, which has served a useful purpose, but which, our task force concluded, should not serve as an excuse for setting up similar independent authorities throughout the Nation.

4. Both agencies are guilty of brazen and pernicious lobbying to achieve their ends.

Of course, I must plead guilty to a certain amount of bias in expressing my opinions. When I became Governor of Wyoming in 1933, I inherited a $1,000,000 overdraft that had been on our books for some 20 years. I got rid of it simply by not spending money on certain projects that would have been nice, but unnecessary. I never have believed in living above our means, and never shall.

Let me cite two cases which our task force uncovered as examples of wastefulness and bad planning on the part of both agencies. First, the case of the Reclamation Bureau and Boysen Dam: Out in the central part of my State of Wyoming is a rugged canyon through which the Big Horn River runs. To the head of this canyon some 30 or 40 years ago came an enterprising Minnesotan, one Asmus Boysen, who built a small power dam. It was strictly a private enterprise. Then came the Burlington Railroad, which built a track alongside his dam, and the State followed suit with a paralleling highway.

Boysen overlooked one thing: silt—the curse of all dam builders, even the mighty Engineers and Reclamationists. In a relatively short period of years, the silt had built up behind Boysen's dam so thoroughly that his power production was seriously impaired. He built a superstructure on his dam to raise the water higher. With that, the railroad went into court and charged that the dam was a menace to its roadbed. After a long and expensive suit, which almost broke Boysen, the courts held the dam was a nuisance and ordered it dynamited.

Now, a few years ago, when Reclamation plunged into the wild race to stake out projects in the Missouri Basin ahead of the rival Engineers, it hit upon the idea of again damming up the Big Horn at Boysen's old site. A reconnaissance survey fixed the cost at $8,200,000. Reclamation started building a mighty structure designed to aid flood control, supply irrigation water, and produce power; in my opinion the need, if any, for additional power in that area could be provided more consistently by enlarging the capacity of existing installations or of projects already under way. The structure was designed at least 10-percent larger than its purposes required, in order to cope with the siltation problem.

But the railroad and highway people were no more anxious to be flooded than they had been 30 years before. So Reclamation had to shoulder the cost of relocating the railroad and highway. To relocate the highway alone, I am informed, will cost $1,642,000. The cost of relocating the railroad will be staggering—$15,096,000 at the latest estimate. It calls for several miles of construction work through solid rock, including the blasting of a tunnel, well over a mile long, through armorlike diorite and granite.

At last count, Reclamation itself was admitting that the project would cost $29,726,000; only time will tell how much more it will run. The budget request for the 1950 fiscal year alone is $8,000,000. If I were the arbiter, I'd say let's wash out the eight to ten millions that Reclamation already has squandered and not pour another $20,000,000 or more into this ill-starred silt trap.

Now for an example of how the Army engineers, in their zeal for pouring concrete, persist bullheadedly in spending money for projects of doubtful necessity. At the city of Denver, Colo., an inconsequential stream known as Cherry Creek flows into the South Platte River. Cherry Creek ordinarily is placid, but occasionally it floods, causing relatively minor damage in portions of Denver. Some years ago, Kenwood Dam, a structure designed for a maximum flood discharge of 70,000 second-feet, was built as a PWA project to protect Denver against Cherry Creek floods. According to a committee of the Colorado section, American Society of Civil Engineers, the worst Cherry Creek flood ever measured in Denver occurred in 1885 and had a peak discharge of some 20,000 second-feet.

The Engineers have stepped in, however, and, by a decidedly roundabout means of figuring, have come up with the conclusion that a flood of 113,000 second-feet—a figure that is 5.65 times as great as the maximum flood of record—is theoretically possible.

So now the Engineers are engaged in a truly massive project on this trifling creek—a dam 14,300 feet long and 140 feet high, with a control structure 174 feet in height. Needless to say, it will eliminate the existing dam, which local engineers think is adequate. Cost: $15,700,000 for the dam alone; about $21,000,000 if storage and operating facilities for irrigation-water storage, now being eyed by the Bureau of Reclamation, are included. The Engineers went ahead with this project despite the forthright opposition of the Denver engineers, who declared that, by even the most generous figures, the project was not worth the cost. The local engineers significantly pointed out that if the Denver taxpayers, instead of Uncle Sam, were directly footing the bill they never would commit themselves to such a project. But, it would appear, nothing can stop the Army engineers.

The Cherry Creek incident brings up another significant point: Our task force, in conducting its research, learned that both engineers and reclamation habitually built dams and canals without sufficient or accurate hydrologic data to justify the projects. The limit of error or ignorance in present water developments is rarely less than 25 percent, and frequently is more. In other words Engineers and Reclamation do not always know, before spending their billions, whether there is going to be enough water for the operation of their projects. To build monumental dams and all the subsidiary installations or to dredge a navigation channel and then pray for rain is either sublime faith or wasteful folly.

The Corps of Engineers, one of the oldest of Government services, has become undoubtedly the most powerful lobbying and pressure group in the Government today. By various grants of authority from Congress, it has extended its power and influence into many fields of civilian service, including the plum-rich areas of river-and-harbor improvements and flood control.

Theoretically, the corps is responsible to the Secretary of the Army and, through him, to the President. In practice, it has worked out that the engineers deal directly with Congress itself, often arrogantly ignoring, as has been demonstrated in many instances, the expressed wishes of the Comander in Chief. It has become hard to tell now who is the master—Congress or the Corps of Engineers—for, though Congress provides the appropriations for these rich and often wasteful engineering projects, the corps provides the modus operandi and the excuse for the spending of billions on the projects that bring such joy to the home districts of the rivers-and-harbors-bloc Congressmen.

For instance, when the rivers-and-harbors appropriations bill for fiscal year 1949—the largest in history, incidentally—was up before Congress, Senator BRIDGES, then Appropriations Committee chairman, and Senator TAFT, then majority leader, each asserted publicly that $200,000,000 could be lopped off the proposals with no harm to the Nation's welfare. Did their influence prevail? Indeed not—the bill passed the Senate by a 3-to-1 vote.

The great public fallacy concerning the Engineers is an impression that the corps is a peacetime group of Army officers and soldiers gaining valuable experience for war while working on construction projects. That is a lot of brass-encased baloney. The truth of the matter is that only some 215 Army officers are assigned to this inland-water-development program. They are the "brass" who supervise the tasks of more than 40,000 civilian Government employees.

Among these civilians are highly educated, efficient engineers who ordinarily would be granted advancement to top posts which their achievements warranted. But the way the Engineers have the system organized, the Army "brass" holds all the top positions and takes all the credit for the accomplishments. So the notion that Army personnel is getting valuable training for war through the Corps of Engineers is plain silly. Furthermore, in wartime Army Engineers are not called upon to build dikes and dams for flood control and power production—their job with respect to such structures is to blast them out of existence.

To put it mildly, the Engineers seem to have gone hog-wild in lining up projects. There is a segment of the engineering mind which seems to gaze on a God-made landscape with a critical eye. A river must be dammed. A beautiful natural lake must be converted into a reservoir. A swamp which may be a major factor in maintaining water tables in adjacent areas must be drained. If it is "engineeringly feasible," something must be done forthwith, because God didn't do a proper job in the first place and the Engineers can improve on His handiwork.

In the past few years, the Corps of Engineers has started muscling in on the field of power-producing and irrigation dams, which properly is the responsibility of Reclamation. This has produced considerable agitation within the Reclamation Bureau. The engineers may bestow a project upon an area at low cost to the local citizens, while Reclamation is supposed to set up contracts whereby those who glean the benefits eventually repay the Government. Naturally, human nature being what it is, most communities begin favoring the cheaper projects offered by the engineers over the quasi-pay-as-you-go projects of Reclamation. Reclamation's only weapon, if it is to maintain its hallowed bureaucratic status as the do-gooding, easy-spending patron of the West is to think up and execute projects faster than the Engineers. So a ruinous and costly competition has developed, particularly in the Missouri Valley and the Central Valley of California.

Can I back up these accusations with figures? I'll let Lt. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, the recently retired Chief of Engineers, do it for me. In response to a request last fall from one of the rivers-and-harbors-bloc Senators, General Wheeler, then chief of the corps, prepared an analysis of what all the Federal agencies—Engineers, Reclamation, Department of Agriculture, and the Federal Power Commission—had spent and were planning to spend on water-resources development. By far the lion's share, of course, were Engineers and Reclamation projects. The figures as taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are:

1. Works already completed	$4,779,700,000
2. Projects under construction	4,595,000,000
3. Projects definitely planned	18,980,900,000
4. Projects planned for the long-range future	29,152,600,000
Total	57,506,200,000

Of this total, it is highly significant to note that by far the largest single amount—$24,086,900,000—is earmarked for Government development of hydroelectric power. This amount is twice the expenditure planned for flood control, and nearly three times as much as is planned for irrigation. If these Government agencies got the green light on all their plans for power development, the new facilities thus constructed would provide more than three times the amount of hydroelectric power that exists in all the United States today.

Now electric energy is fine—you don't even have to argue about the wonders electricity has worked for American homes, farms, and industry—and I am for more of it. But I doubt if even this great Nation needs as much as the Engineers and Reclamation would promote.

The Reclamation Bureau was established in Theodore Roosevelt's time to save Western farmers from ruinous drought. Though a younger agency than the Corps of Engineers, it has grown up fast. Its activities are principally in the 11 Western States. Because of the popular illusion that all reclamation projects are on the side of the angels, whenever anyone in Congress lifts a questioning voice about this Bureau's expenditures, 22 Western Senators—Republicans and Democrats working as brethren—and their colleagues in the House rise as a phalanx to beat down the opposition.

Originally, the Reclamation Bureau was supposed to be a self-sustaining project; now it is drawing appropriations from the Treasury that run up as high as $246,619,139 a year—not counting the supplementary appropriations which the Bureau regularly wheedles or blackjacks from Congress. The Bureau's budget request for the coming fiscal year, pending before Congress as this was written, was a record $373,328,500. Personnel-wise, the Bureau has grown from 2,853 employees in 1935 to 16,522 in 1948.

Naturally two such powerful and pork-dispensing organizations have drawn the support of potent lobbies. The National Reclamation Association is one of the more powerful lobbies doing yeoman service for the Bureau of Reclamation. The Engineers have a whole string of lobbies behind them, including the aggressive Mississippi Valley Association and the wealthy, influential National Rivers and Harbors Congress. This rivers-and-harbors lobby has achieved an almost incestuous relationship with the National Congress, as many of the Representatives and Senators who pass on the bills that the group lobbies for are members of the lobby itself, along with the contractors, chambers of commerce, and other special interests that make up the membership. It is an especially ironic note that the incumbent president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress is none other than United States Senator JOHN MCCLELLAN, of Arkansas, who also was a member of the Hoover Commission. As a member of the Commission, Senator MCCLELLAN fought to block certain recommendations of our task force that were anathema to the Corps of Engineers, darling of the Rivers and Harbors Congress.

As an example of how the Rivers and Harbors Congress operates, I have in my possession a signed letter from former Senator E. V. Robertson of my State. He relates how some years ago, when he was a member of the Commerce Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, he was invited to attend a convention of the congress at New Orleans. His invitation was accompanied by a $300 check for "expenses."

Regarding this as highly improper—"this was the only occasion during my 6 years in the Senate that I received any invitation accompanied by a check for expenses," the Senator wrote me—he threw the check back at the organization and declined the invitation. I should like to see the National Rivers and Harbors Congress publish a full list of those to whom it has paid such "expenses" during its 48 years of operation.

It would be arrogant and intolerant of me to say that no good has come of any projects of the Engineers and Reclamation Bureau. The early projects, before they began to dream in the grandiose, wholesale manner were particularly inspired and beneficial. But I do charge that the performance record now is shot through with examples of rotten planning and wasteful execution.

The most shameful example of piecemeal planning, wasteful competition, and political compromising on the part of both the Engineers and Reclamation is the Missouri Basin story. For years, the Missouri Basin, approximately one-sixth of the Nation's land area, scene of flood and drought disasters, and a prime example of the need for carefully planned conservation and development, has been the battleground for various bureaus and private pressure groups with axes to grind.

The Engineers finally had come up with the ambitious Pick plan, prepared by Lewis A. Pick, now a major general and the new Chief of Engineers. Reclamation produced its equally ambitious Sloan plan, fathered by W. G. Sloan. The trouble with the two plans was that in many respects they were bitterly contradictory of each other. The Engineers, downstream, would be dredging a channel to serve the needs of unnecessary river traffic; upstream, Reclamation would be building a storage dam for irrigation that would deprive the channel of water it required.

In 1944, President Roosevelt recommended a Missouri Valley Authority similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority. That did the trick. The President didn't get his MVA, but the bitter rivals, Engineers and Reclamation, were driven into each other's arms for self-preservation. "A shameless, loveless, shotgun wedding," James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, termed it.

Anyway, a Pick-Sloan plan was agreed upon—a conscienceless bit of political compromising. For example, whereas Sloan formerly objected to two proposed Engineers' dams—Garrison and Gavin in the Dakotas—as wholly unnecessary and wasteful, he now agreed to the two projects, which will cost some $211,000,000. Garrison already is under construction, and Gavin is planned for the future. The Pick-Sloan plan, which is under way, will cost the taxpayers some $6,300,000,000—an "estimate"—and it will not serve the needs of the Missouri Valley adequately, as it still is a crazy-quilt nonintegrated program.

I will go a step further and predict that unless firm steps are taken President Truman will have trouble in bringing about his proposed Columbia Valley Authority plan. Both Engineers and Reclamation have staked out claims on this area. I have seen the 14 volumes of plans that the Engineers have prepared for Columbia River development; the documents weigh 41 pounds and make a stack more than a foot and a half high. Unless the President can be effectively tough—and the Engineers have sabotaged the wishes of Presidents many times in the past—another Pick-Sloan deal may result for the Columbia Valley.

The Colorado-Big Thompson project is still another example of malodorous planning of an undertaking designed to consume millions of the taxpayers' dollars—this one on the part of Reclamation. Big Thompson is a colossal scheme to pump water from the western slope of the Rockies to the eastern slope by tunneling 13½ miles through the mighty Continental Divide, that granite backbone of the American continent. Reclamation went blithely ahead, estimated the project would cost $44,000,000, obtained congressional approval on that basis, and even made contracts with the eastern-slope farmers to deliver water for supplemental irrigation.

The project got under way; then it began expanding. Those usual difficulties and modifications that "were not anticipated" began cropping up. At last count, the $44,000,000 job had grown into a $144,581,000 project, of which $68,000,000 already had been expended. And the latest development is the discovery that Colorado-Big Thompson will not provide the amount of water Reclamation has guaranteed to deliver to the eastern slope after all, so a new study will be launched to discover other water sources and develop them. We'll be lucky if we get off for $200,000,000.

This building of great irrigation dams by Reclamation without determining whether water will be available is, unfortunately, common. To mention just one example, Kendrick project, in Wyoming, a $24,000,000 job, was built in 1934–35, and no surplus water was available for it until 1947. The Federal Government, according to a survey which has been made for me, has lost at least $9,000,000 on various projects through just this kind of unreliable estimating, and farmers have lost many millions more. As far back as 1936, the National Resources Committee reported that "abandoned farms * * * now stand as pathetic monuments to misplaced confidence in fragmentary data."

Hell's Canyon project on the Snake River along the Idaho-Oregon border is a ripe example of what happens when Engineers and Reclamation get to competing with each other. This is part of the Columbia Valley program, where both agencies are jockeying for position.

Each agency got up a set of plans for the project, and preparation of the rival plans alone cost the taxpapers some $143,000—most of which was spent by the Engineers—before a shovel even was turned.

While Hell's Canyon is by no means the worst example of money being wasted through duplicating plans—the Central Valley Basin project in California, for instance, offers more glaring examples—I mention it because of the conflicting results of the two surveys. The Engineers have come up with a proposal for a $372,000,000 multiple-purpose dam, 710 feet high, which would impound 3,280,000 acre-feet of water for power production. Reclamation proposes a 607-foot dam, which would impound 3,500,000 acre-feet of water, and its estimated cost is $433,660,000.

That somebody can't add—or doesn't want to—does not surprise me, however. I have a report prepared for me by the Izaak Walton League of America, analyzing what happened in 16 Reclamation Bureau projects. These 16 projects were underestimated by the staggering total of $443,143,400.

Another glaring example of cockeyed estimating is a Montana dam that originally was scheduled to cost some $48,000,000. The latest estimate is $108,800,000. This one is aptly named the Hungry Horse project, and it is located, equally aptly, on the Flathead River.

With this background of bungling and wastefulness thus uncovered, our task force made three principal recommendations designed to correct the particular evils which I have discussed. They were:

1. That the Corps of Engineers be stripped of its civil river-development functions; that a consolidated Water Development Service be established to take over these functions, plus all functions of the Bureau of Reclamation, plus other power-marketing and river-development functions administered by the Departments of Interior and State, the Federal Power Commission, and the Bonneville and Southwestern Power Administrations. In this connection, we recommended retention of TVA, but opposed establishment of additional valley authorities.

2. Abolition of the Department of Interior and creation of a new Department of Natural Resources to administer the consolidated Water Development Service and other affiliated Federal activities now loosely administered in various departments.

3. Establishment within the President's office of a Board of Coordination and Review to pass on every major water-development project from the time it is first proposed, in order to make certain that boondoggles, frills, and duplicating activities are chopped off before they sprout.

Even before our task-force report was made public, the fight was launched to keep the Army engineers firmly entrenched in the civilian contracting business. The Engineers' lobby got to work, and soon contractors, civic groups, and Congressmen were deluged by thousands of identically worded telegrams and resolutions, asking them to join the fight to save the Engineers. One of the ridiculous arguments advanced was that only the Army Corps of Engineers had the engineering know-how to carry out these projects. Bunk. As I pointed out earlier, there are only 215 Army engineer officers supervising the work of 40,000 civilians, and the civilians could carry on beautifully without the brass.

The situation became so bad that Mr. Hoover found it necessary to make a public denunciation of these propaganda efforts by the engineers. The Chief of Engineers thereupon disclaimed responsibility for the pressure campaign; nevertheless, the Hoover Commission has in its files transcripts of antireorganization speeches made throughout the country by district engineers.

The majority of the Hoover Commission itself backed the essence of our recommendation, with the exception that retention of the Interior Department as the agency to administer all water-development projects was favored. Three members of the commission, including the vice-chairman, Secretary of State Dean Acheson, filed a separate report backing our recommendation to create a Department of Natural Resources. And the expected dissenting report was turned in by two members—one of whom, of course, was Senator McClellan, president of the proengineers' lobby, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress—stoutly defending the Army engineers.

Even before the Hoover report was released, Senator McClellan announced he would fight to have the Army engineers exempted from reorganization. While he was overruled on the commission, Senator McClellan's opposition is likely to be most formidable, since he also is chairman of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which the Hoover report is referred for action.

No one realizes better than I that it is almost a Don Quixote gesture to tilt a lance at the solidly anchored windmill that is the Army engineers' lobby. But I feel that if the long-suffering taxpayers can be aroused through publication of this article, perhaps enough blows can unsettle that expensive windmill.

The most brazen example of autocracy on the part of the Army engineers is related in the portion of our task-force report dealing with the Kings River project in the basin of the Central Valley of California. Our committee is indebted to Arthur A. Maas, of Harvard University, who served as one of our consultants on water resources, for his thorough and documented case history of the Kings River project, wherein the Army engineers repeatedly—and successfully—defied two Presidents of the United States to achieve jurisdiction over a construction job which was not rightfully theirs.

The Central Valley basin, containing more than one-third of California's acreage, for years has been faced by an increasingly urgent water-development problem. Though the flood factor is present, the problem primarily is one of irrigation for the farmers of the area. Thus, the responsibility fell squarely within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation. Notwithstanding this, the Corps of Engineers in 1937 entered into competition with Reclamation to grab off a $20,000,000 project in the Kings River area.

President Roosevelt's attention was called to this senseless and costly conflict, and he took time from his more pressing duties to order that the conflicting surveys be cleared with the Water Resources Committee of his National Resources Planning Board and then sent to him before being submitted to Congress. Reclamation followed his instructions. The Engineers, who traditionally have felt they are responsible to Congress rather than to the President, sidetracked the Water Resources Committee and sent the report directly to the White House. Through some unexplained circumstance—believed to be a clerical error—Roosevelt's wishes were frustrated by the White House administrative machinery, which slipped up and forwarded the report to Congress.

Thus, in 1940, Congress received the two conflicting and nonintegrated reports.

Then began a 7-year struggle over the project. Roosevelt repeatedly and often curtly warned his Secretary of War that he wanted the Kings River project built by Interior. Just as repeatedly, the Corps of Engineers went to Congress and were able to balk the President's wishes. The point at stake was that, under the Reclamation system of repayment by the consumers for water supplied by the Government, the Federal Treasury would receive a greater return than under the Engineers' plan of relatively insignificant participation by the consumers.

All during the war, President Roosevelt had to take time out to battle with the Engineers. After Mr. Roosevelt died, President Truman took up the fight just as firmly. These efforts by two Commanders in Chief bothered the Engineers not one bit. Their will prevailed; Congress gave the Engineers authority and funds to build the Kings River project, and the Federal Treasury is going to suffer considerably as a result of this.

This same maneuver by the Engineers has been repeated on more than a dozen other projects. Furthermore, in 1941 the Engineers effectively spiked a direct order of President Roosevelt's to co-ordinate their projects with the Federal Bureau of the budget. When the President's budget bureau reported adversely on 76 out of 436 Corps of Engineers' projects, the Chief of Engineers merely submitted the seventy-six objectionable projects to Congress, over the President's head. Congress authorized 62 of them.

It's no wonder that both Presidents Hoover and Roosevelt used to exclaim privately that, if someone only could show them how to curb the Army engineers, they really could save some money for the United States.

The whole thing is as fantastically ridiculous as if General Eisenhower, on the eve of the Normandy invasion, were to have been overruled by his sergeant chauffeur, who might have wanted to spend the next week end in London instead of France.

But it's no laughing matter. I submit that when agencies such as the Army Corps of Engineers or any others can whip Presidents and Congress all around the stump, there's something vitally wrong with our system of democratic government.

That is why I am willing to risk the displeasure of the do-gooders, the flood-controllers and the water-developers by tackling the two sacred cows of flood control and reclamation. If we can strike a blow for sanity in spending, before our national water bill drowns our economy, the work of our Hoover commission task force will have been worth while.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating Memorial Day, 1949, as a day for a Nation-wide prayer for peace.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who is chairman of the Committee on Finance, will be unable to take up House bill 1211 on Monday next. I therefore ask unanimous consent that House bill 1211, the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1843, which is a bill to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill his enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING ADJACENT TO MILITARY AND NAVAL INSTALLATIONS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask the majority leader if it will be practicable for us to take up at this time the military housing bill, Senate bill 1184, which was introduced by the minority leader [Mr. WHERRY] for himself, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee [Mr. TYDINGS], and myself. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill involves merely the extension of title 6 of the Housing Act to the armed services. I do not believe that consideration of the bill would require much time.

Mr. LUCAS. I have no objection if there is no objection on the part of the minority.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who has spent much time on this bill. There is no controversy about it. It was unanimously reported from the committee. All it does is to extend the provisions of existing law to military housing upon bases. It requires a certification of permanency, which should be required; and when that is done, the provisions under which we now operate can be met. It is very necessary that this bill be enacted.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was approved by the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson. It was also approved by the Secretary for Air, Mr. Symington.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no printed copy of the bill at the desk. It was reported only today.

The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill just made the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1184. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1184) to encourage construction of rental housing on or in areas adjacent to Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force installations and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new title as follows:

"TITLE VIII—MILITARY HOUSING INSURANCE

"SEC. 801. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'mortgage' means a first mortgage on real estate, in fee simple, or on a leasehold (1) under a lease for not less than 99 years which is renewable; or (2) under a lease for a period of not less than 50 years to run from the date the mortgage was executed; and the term 'first mortgage' means such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on, or the unpaid purchase price of, real estate, under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby.

"(b) The term 'mortgagee' includes the original lender under a mortgage, and his successors and assigns approved by the Commissioner; and the term 'mortgagor' includes the original borrower under a mortgage, his successors and assigns.

"(c) The term 'maturity date' means the date on which the mortgage indebtedness would be extinguished if paid in accordance with periodic payments provided for in the mortgage.

"(d) The term 'rental housing' means housing, the occupancy of which is permitted by the owner thereof in consideration of the payment of agreed charges, whether or not by the termination of the agreement, such payment over a period of time will entitle the occupant to the ownership of the premises.

"(e) The term 'military' includes Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force.

"(f) The term 'State' includes the several States and Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and the Virgin Islands.

"SEC. 802. There is hereby created a Military Housing Insurance Fund which shall be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this title, and mortgages insured under this title shall be known and referred to as 'military housing insured mortgages'. For the purposes of this fund there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000,000. For immediate needs pending such appropriation, the Commissioner is directed to transfer the sum of $1,000,000 to such fund from the War Housing Insurance Fund created by section 602 of this act, such amount to be reimbursed to the War Housing Insurance Fund upon the availability of the appropriations authorized by this section. General expenses of operation of the Federal Housing Administration under this title may be charged to the Military Housing Insurance Fund.

"SEC. 803. (a) In order to assist in relieving the acute shortage of housing which now exists at or in areas adjacent to military installations because of uncertainty as to the permanency of such installations and to increase the supply of rental housing accommodations available to military and civilian personnel at such installations, the Commissioner is authorized, upon application of the mortgagee, to insure mortgages (including advances on such mortgages during construction) which are eligible for insurance as hereinafter provided, and, upon such terms as the Commissioner may prescribe, to make commitments for so insuring such mortgages prior to the date of their execution or disbursement thereon: Provided, That the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages insured under this title shall not exceed $500,000,000 except that with the approval of the President such aggregate amount may be increased to not to exceed $1,000,000,000: And provided further, That no mortgage shall be insured under this title after July 1, 1951, except (A) pursuant to a commitment to insure issued on or before such date, or (B) a mortgage given to refinance an existing mortgage insured under this title and which does not exceed the original principal amount and unexpired term of such existing mortgage.

"(b) To be eligible for insurance under this title a mortgage shall meet the following conditions:

"(1) The mortgaged property shall be held by a mortgagor approved by the Commissioner. The Commissioner may in his discretion, require such mortgagor to be regulated or restricted as to rents or sales, charges, capital structure, rate of return, and methods of operation. The Commissioner may make such contracts with, and acquire for not to exceed $100 stock or interest in, any such mortgagor, as the Commissioner may deem necessary to render effective such restriction or regulation. Such stock or interest shall be paid for out of the Military Housing Insurance Fund, and shall be redeemed by the mortgagor at par upon the termination of all obligations of the Commissioner under the insurance.

"(2) The mortgaged property shall be designed for rent for residential use by civilian or military personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Air Force (including Government contractors' employees) assigned to duty at the military installation at or in the area of which such property is constructed. Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, preference or priority of opportunity in the occupancy of the mortgaged property for such personnel and their immediate families shall be provided under such regulations and procedures as may be prescribed by the Commissioner. No mortgage shall be insured under this title unless the Secretary of Defense or his designee shall have certified to the Commissioner that the housing with respect to which the mortgage is made is necessary to provide adequate housing for such personnel, that such installation is deemed to be a permanent part of the Military Establishment, and that there is no present intention to substantially curtail activities at such installation.

"(3) The mortgage shall involve a principal obligation in an amount—

"(A) not to exceed $5,000,000; and

"(B) not to exceed 90 percent of the amount which the Commissioner estimates will be the replacement cost of the property or project when the proposed improvements are completed; and

"(C) not to exceed an average of $8,100 per family unit for such part of such property or project as may be attributable to dwelling use.

The mortgage shall provide for complete amortization by periodic payment within such terms as the Commissioner shall prescribe, and shall bear interest (exclusive of premium charges for insurance) at not to exceed 4 percent per annum of the amount of the principal obligation outstanding at any time. The Commissioner may consent to the release of a part or parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe and the mortgage may provide for such release.

"(c) The Commissioner is authorized to fix a premium charge for the insurance of mortgages under this title but in the case of any mortgage such charge shall not be less than an amount equivalent to one-half of 1 percent per annum nor more than an amount equivalent to 1½ percent per annum of the amount of the principal obligation of the mortgage outstanding at any time, without taking into account delinquent payments or prepayments. Such premium charges shall be payable by the mortgagee, either in cash, or in debentures issued by the Commissioner under this title at par plus accrued interest, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner: Provided, That the Commissioner may require the payment of one or more such premium charges at the time the mortgage is insured, at such discount rate as he may prescribe not in excess of the interest rate specified in the mortgage. If the Commissioner finds, upon the presentation of a mortgage for insurance and the tender of the initial premium charge and such other charges as the Commissioner may require that the mortgage complies with the provisions of this title, such mortgage may be accepted for insurance by indorsement or otherwise as the Commissioner may prescribe. In the event that the principal obligation of any mortgage accepted for insurance under this title is paid in full prior to the maturity date, the Commissioner is further authorized in his discretion to require the payment by the mortgagee of an adjusted premium charge in such amount as the Commissioner determines to be equitable but not in excess of the aggregate amount of the premium charges that the mortgagee would otherwise have been required to pay if the mortgage had continued to be insured under this title until such maturity date; and in the event that the principal obligation is paid in full as herein set forth, the Commissioner is authorized to refund to the mortgagee for the account of the mortgagor all, or such portion as he shall determine to be equitable, of the current unearned premium charges theretofore paid.

"(d) The failure of the mortgagor to make any payment due under or provided to be paid by the terms of a mortgage insured under this title shall be considered a default under such mortgage, and if such default continues for a period of 30 days, the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefits of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon assignment, transfer, and delivery to the Commissioner, within a period and in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of (1) all rights and interest arising under the mortgage so in default; (1) all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagors or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction; (3) all policies of title or other insurance or surety bonds or other guaranties and any and all claims thereunder; (4) any balance of the mortgage loan not advanced to the mortgagor; (5) any cash or property held by the mortgagee, or to which it is entitled, as deposits made for the account of the mortgagor and which have not been applied in reduction of the principal of the mortgage indebtedness; and (6) all records, documents, books, papers, and accounts relating to the mortgage transaction. Upon such assignment, transfer, and delivery, the obligation of the mortgagee to pay the premium charges for mortgage insurance shall cease, and the Commissioner shall, subject to the cash adjustment provided for in subsection (e) of this section, issue to the mortgagee debentures having a total face value equal to the value of the mortgage, and a certificate of claim as hereinafter provided. For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, by adding to the amount of the original principal obligation of the mortgage which was unpaid on the date of default, the amount the mortgagee may have paid for (A) taxes, special assessments, and water rates, which are liens prior to the mortgage; (B) insurance on the property; and (C) reasonable expenses for the completion and preservation of the property and any mortgage insurance premiums paid after default; less the sum of (i) an amount equivalent to 1 percent of the unpaid amount of such principal obligation on the date of default; (ii) any amount received on account of the mortgage after such date; and (iii) any net income received by the mortgagee from the property after such date: Provided, That the mortgagee in the event of a default under the mortgage may, at its option and in accordance with regulations of, and in a period to be determined by the Commissioner, proceed to foreclose on and obtain possession of or otherwise acquire such property from the mortgagor after default, and receive the benefits of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon (1) the prompt conveyance to the Commissioner of title to the property which meets the requirements of the rules and regulations of the Commissioner in force at the time the mortgage was insured, and which is evidenced in the manner prescribed by such rules and regulations; and (2) the assignment to him of all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction or foreclosure proceedings, except such claims that may have been released with the consent of the Commissioner. Upon such conveyance and assignment, the obligation of the mortgagee to pay the premium charges for insurance shall cease and the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefits of the insurance as provided in this subsection, except that in such event the 1 percent deduction, set out in (1) hereof, shall not apply.

"(e) Debentures issued under this title shall be in such form and denominations in multiples of $50, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall include such provisions for redemption, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be in coupon or registered form. Any difference between the value of the mortgage determined as herein provided and the aggregate face value of the debentures issued, not to exceed $50, shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the mortgagee from the Military Housing Insurance Fund. If, during the time the mortgage is insured and before the mortgagee has received the benefits of the insurance, the United States acquires, or commences eminent domain proceedings to acquire, all or a substantial part (as defined by the Commissioner) of the mortgaged property for the use of the National Military Establishment, the mortgagee may, at its election, within such time and in accordance with such regulations as the Commissioner may prescribe, receive the benefits of the insurance as provided in this subsection, notwithstanding the fact that the mortgage may not be in default.

"(f) Debentures issued under this title shall be executed in the name of the Military Housing Insurance fund as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner, by either his written or engraved signature, and shall be negotiable. All such debentures shall be dated as of the date of default as determined in accordance with subsection (d) of this section, and shall bear interest from such date at a rate determined by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the mortgage was accepted for insurance, but not to exceed 3 percent per annum, payable semiannually on the first day of January and the first day of July of each year, and shall mature 10 years after the date thereof. Such debentures shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by any Territory, dependency, or possession of the United States or by the District of Columbia, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. They shall be paid out of the Military Housing Insurance fund, which shall be primarily liable therefor, and they shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face of the debentures. In the event the Military Housing Insurance fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on any debentures so guaranteed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures.

"(g) The certificate of claim issued by the Commissioner to any mortgagee in connection with the insurance of mortgages under this title shall be for an amount determined in accordance with subsections (e) and (f) of section 604 of this act, except that any amount remaining after the payment of the full amount under the certificate of claim shall be retained by the Commissioner and credited to the Military Housing Insurance fund.

"(h) The provisions of section 207 (k) and section 207 (l) of this act shall be applicable to mortgages insured under this title and to property acquired by the Commissioner hereunder, except that as applied to such mortgages and property (1) all references in such sections to the 'Housing Fund' shall be construed to refer to the 'Military Housing Insurance Fund,' and (2) the reference in section 207 (k) to 'subsection (g)' shall be construed to refer to 'subsection (d)' of this section 803.

"(i) The Commissioner shall also have power to insure under this title or titles II or VI any mortgage executed in connection with the sale by him of any property acquired under this title without regard to any limit as to eligibility, time, or aggregate amount contained in this title or titles II or VI.

"(j) Any contract of insurance executed by the Commissioner under this title shall be conclusive evidence of the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the validity of any contract of insurance so executed shall be incontestable in the hands of an approved mortgagee from the date of the execution of such contract, except for fraud or misrepresentation on the part of such approved mortgagee.

"(k) In order to assure an adequate market for mortgages insured under this title, the powers of the Federal National Mortgage Association and of any other Federal corporation or other Federal agency hereafter established, to purchase, service, or sell any mortgages, or partial interests therein, may be utilized in connection with mortgages insured under this title.

"SEC. 804. (a) Moneys in the Military Housing Insurance Fund not needed for current operations under this title shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the Military Housing Insurance Fund, or invested in bonds or other obligations of, or in bonds or other obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, purchase in the open market debentures issued under the provisions of this title. Such purchases shall be made at a price which will provide an investment yield of not less than the yield obtainable from other investments authorized by this section. Debentures so purchased shall be canceled and not reissued.

"(b) Premium charges, adjusted premium charges, and appraisal and other fees, received on account of the insurance of any mortgage insured under this title, the receipts derived from any such mortgage or claim assigned to the Commissioner and from any property acquired by the Commissioner, and all earnings on the assets of the Military Housing Insurance Fund, shall be credited to the Military Housing Insurance Fund. The principal of and interest paid and to be paid on debentures issued in exchange for any mortgage or property insured under this title, cash adjustments, and expenses incurred in the handling of such mortgages or property and in the foreclosure and collection of mortgages and claims assigned to the Commissioner under this title, shall be charged to the Military Housing Insurance Fund.

"SEC. 805. Whenever the Secretary of the Army, Navy, or Air Force determines that it is desirable to lease real property within the meaning of the act of August 5, 1947 (61 Stat. 774) to effectuate the purposes of this title, the Secretary concerned is authorized to lease such property under the authority of said act upon such terms and conditions as in his opinion will best serve the national interest without regard to the limitations imposed by said act in respect to the term or duration of the lease, and the power vested in the Secretary of the Department concerned to revoke any lease made pursuant to said act in the event of a national emergency declared by the President shall not apply. Whenever the Secretary of the Army, Navy, or Air Force determines it to be in the interest of national defense, he is hereby authorized to sell, transfer, and convey at fair value (as determined by him), for use under this title, all or any right, title, and interest in any real property under his jurisdiction, notwithstanding any limitations or requirements of law with respect to the use or disposition of such property. The authority conferred by this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any other power or authority of the Secretary of the Army, Navy, or Air Force.

"SEC. 806. The second sentence of section 214 of the National Housing Act, as amended, relating to housing in the Territory of Alaska, shall not apply to mortgages insured under this title on property in said Territory.

"SEC. 807. Nothing in this title shall be construed to exempt any real property acquired and held by the Commissioner under this title from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

"SEC. 808. The Commissioner is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title."

SEC. 2. Sections 1 and 5 of the National Housing Act, as amended, are further amended by striking out the words "titles II, III, VI and VII" each time they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the words "titles II, III, VI, VII and VIII."

SEC. 3. Section 212 (a) of said act, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "effective date of this section," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "effective date of this section, or under title VIII."

SEC. 4. Section 301 (a) of said act, as amended, is further amended—

(1) by striking out of paragraph (1) the words "under title II, or title VI" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "under title II, title VI, or title VIII"; and

(2) by striking out the period and adding the following proviso at the end of paragraph (1) (E): "Provided, That such aggregate amount paid by the association shall not include any amount paid by it for a mortgage or mortgages which are insured under title VIII of this act; and."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 1 of the act of July 20, 1947 (61 Stat. 675) is hereby amended to read as follows: "The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, or their designees within their respective establishments, are authorized to sell and contract to sell, under such regulations and at such prices and for such periods of time, as the Secretary concerned may prescribe, to purchasers within, or in the immediate vicinity of, naval or military activities, such utilities and related services as are not otherwise available from local private or public sources."

(b) Section 2 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The utilities and related services authorized to be sold under this act are: (1) electric power, (2) steam, (3) compressed air, (4) water, (5) sewage and garbage disposal services, (6) gas (natural, manufactured, or mixed), (7) ice, (8) mechanical refrigeration, and (9) telephone service; and the proceeds received for any such utilities and related services sold pursuant to the authority of this act shall be credited to the appropriation or appropriations currently available for the supply of such services: Provided, That any utility or related service provided and sold under the authority of this act shall not be so provided unless it is determined that the utility or related service is not at the time of such sale or contract to sell available from a private or other public source, and that the furnishing thereof is in the interest of national defense."

(c) Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by deleting the words "The Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of War", and substituting therefor the words, "The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force."

(d) Section 5 of said act is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to encourage construction of rental housing on or in areas adjacent to Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force installations, and for other purposes."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Carolina for expediting the business of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if I may further expedite the business of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks which I intended to make on the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORTGAGE INSURANCE FOR MILITARY HOUSING

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, yesterday our Committee on Banking and Currency unanimously agreed to report out S. 1184, and early today I submitted that report.

Every Senator is aware of the serious housing conditions surrounding our military installations.

With the increase in the size of our armed forces to 10 times their prewar strength and the relative increase in the number of older, technically trained men in the services, men who are married and desire a family life, the housing provided by the Government has not kept pace with the need. As a consequence we have many in the services separated from their families and great numbers are living under the most deplorable conditions in trailer camps, tourist camps, shacks, single rooms, and so forth. The members of our committee were shocked, Mr. President, by the pictures and descriptions of the living quarters the men who are serving our country are forced to occupy.

It was pointed out to our committee by the Secretary of the Air Force that it takes years for a man to become a technically efficient engine mechanic or radar expert, and that after Government funds are used to train such a man to the point where he is perhaps worth a hundred thousand dollars to the armed services, he may fail to reenlist when his current enlistment is completed only because he cannot find adequate housing. As a result, the Military Establishment loses thousands and thousands of dollars in training. At some stations the reenlistment rate is as low as 7 percent and the reason most often assigned for not reenlisting is lack of housing facilities. In other places where there is adequate housing available, reenlistments run as high as 75 to 90 percent.

The Air Force in September 1948 made an analysis of its enlisted personnel which indicated that only 59 percent of all married enlisted personnel intended to reenlist. However, 79 percent indicated that they would reenlist if the Government were to provide family housing. Those failing to reenlist include some of the best trained and most able men.

The bill adds a new title, "Military Housing Insurance to the National Housing Act." It would, in general, be similar to the present provisions of title VI, the FHA program relating to rental housing, except for certain provisions designed to meet problems peculiar to mortgage insurance for military housing.

Because of the FHA requirements of acceptable risk, including standards as to neighborhood and market availability, have generally made it impossible for the Commissioner to insure mortgages adjacent to military installations, particularly in isolated localities where the closing or curtailment of the base is combined with the lack of a market for housing.

Under this bill, if the Secretary of Defense certifies the need, states that the installation is deemed to be permanent, and there is no present intention to curtail substantially activities at the installation, the Federal Housing Commissioner may accept such certification in lieu of acceptable risk, as required in title VI of the NHA.

The Housing Agency under this bill will insure mortgages up to 90 percent of the replacement cost, or an average of $8,100 per family unit. The interest rate would be the same as in section 608, 4 percent. Our committee considered insuring the mortgages in amounts greater than 90 percent but it was our unanimous judgment that to do so would only add to the Government's liability without materially assisting in the provision for housing. The committee felt that an equity of less than 10 percent of the cost of such housing does not adequately assure sufficient incentive to the efficient and economic development and operation of the property. Also with a reduction in the price of construction that is forecast 90 percent of the present cost will amount to more than 90 percent of the final cost. I discussed this with the Housing Administrator, Mr. Foley, Secretary of Defense Johnson and Secretary of the Air Force Symington and they all agree that 90 percent will be sufficient to encourage participation by builders in this housing program.

The bill authorizes the Housing Commissioner to insure eligible mortgages under this new title in aggregate principal amount of $500,000,000.

The bill also provides that the President could increase to one billion the amount to be insured if he saw fit.

The provision is made for the leasing of sites by the Military Establishment free from the right of revocation. It also provides that insurance benefits would be available in the case of deactivation or substantial curtailment of the Military Establishment, or if the site is condemned or acquired for military purposes.

The military would be authorized to lease property for housing under this title on such terms as they deemed in the public interest without regard to existing limitations with respect to lease duration or to right of revocation in event of national emergency. The bill also authorizes them to sell property if used in accordance with purposes of this bill.

"Fanny May" or the Federal National Mortgage Association Act is amended by this bill so as to permit it to purchase mortgages insured under this title, but it would not be subject to the existing provisions prohibiting them from purchasing more than 50 percent of the amount of the mortgages which are otherwise eligible for purchase by Fanny May.

Section 5 permits the military to sell utilities and other related services without time limit to purchasers within the vicinity of the military area if such services are not otherwise available. Lack of utilities has been a major detriment to construction around military areas and, of course, it is also an important factor in the cost of such housing.

S. 1184 will not, Mr. President, and is not intended to meet the total need for housing at our various installations. The bill, however, is intended to encourage private enterprise to construct and operate as much of the housing as is possible and profitable for them to undertake.

Where housing is constructed as a result of the passage of this bill it would be at no cost to the Government. The premiums paid on the mortgage insurance provided for in this bill is expected to meet any losses that may result from deactivation or curtailment of a military installation.

Mr. President, because the building season is already upon us, because the housing need is so desperate in these military areas, and because housing can be gotten under way as soon as this bill becomes law, I am confident that the Senate will want to pass this bill immediately.

Mr. LUCAS. I also thank the distinguished minority leader for cooperating with the Senator from South Carolina and the majority leader in expediting the business of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I am always willing to cooperate with the distinguished majority leader whenever I can.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope the Senator will continue in that very cooperative mood.

CAPT. JAMES GALLAGHER

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to make a few appropriate remarks with reference to a very distinguished Minnesotan who is being honored as of this date for his service to his country and for outstanding service, in particular, to the National Defense Establishment of the United States. I refer to Capt. James Gallagher, pilot of Air Force B–50 Lucky Lady II on the first nonstop round-the-world flight. He has been flying with the same bombing group since March 1944.

The city of Melrose, Minn., is his home town. Along with the official representative of the State of Minnesota, the city of Melrose is paying high tribute and honor to its distinguished member of the Air Forces for his valiant service, not only in war but also in peacetime, underlying the defense of our Nation.

I should like to place in the RECORD an editorial from the St. Cloud Daily Times, of St. Cloud, Minn., of May 16, 1949, which calls attention to the ceremonies being conducted this afternoon and this evening in Captain Gallagher's home town.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROADS LEAD TO MELROSE

All roads will lead to Melrose Friday of this week when that community, together with thousands of visitors from all over the State, will say "Welcome home" to Jimmy Gallagher.

The Army plane pilot who was the first to fly nonstop around the world will find his home town ready to extend to him every honor within its power. And the honors will be in abundance, too.

Actually St. Cloud will get a preview of the celebration on Thursday. Captain Gallagher and his crew mates, escorted by Army planes, will fly over Melrose Thursday, and then land at the Minneapolis airport, since no field nearby is large enough to accommodate the huge ship. From Minneapolis the automobile procession will head for Melrose, passing through St. Cloud where a parade escort has been arranged. St. Cloud will give a warm greeting to this modern Magellan, who will go down in the history books as one of the greatest pilots of his day.

But on Friday, the festivities in Melrose will really move at top speed. The town, ablaze with decorations, will feature a parade early in the afternoon, an outdoor program, and a dinner Friday evening. It will be one of the greatest festival days in central Minnesota since another neighbor lad, Charles Lindbergh by name, took his tiny plane across the Atlantic to Paris.

Two great aerial feats by two great pilots—both central Minnesota boys: Lindbergh from Little Falls, 30 miles north of St. Cloud; Gallagher from Melrose, 30 miles west of St. Cloud.

A committee of Melrose men is working on final preparations for the notable event. Robert Meyer, himself a Navy fighter pilot, is one of the Gallagher committee, along with John Lang, Ted Kennedy, Walter Carlson, and, of course, many others. They are doing an outstanding job, and are getting the cooperation of thousands of folks from all over Minnesota.

Two big dates then this week—the first welcome to Captain Jimmy, Thursday, as he passes through St. Cloud en route to Melrose. Then the big homecoming festival at Melrose Friday. These will be notable occasions for us all.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to take a few moments of the time of the Senate to make a statement in regard to Captain Gallagher.

On March 2, 1949, Captain Gallagher and crew brought their plane to the ground at Carswell Air Force Base, Fort Worth, Tex., after 94 hours and 1 minute aloft on a history-making 23,452-mile flight around the world.

Captain Gallagher was born September 17, 1920, at Melrose, Minn., where he attended public school. He attended the Minneapolis Business College a year and a half before coming to Washington, D. C., in February 1941 for a civilian assignment in the office of the Surgeon General. In May 1942 he enlisted as an aviation cadet and was called to Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., in October of that year for preflight training.

He received primary training at Lakeland, Fla., basic training at Macon, Ga., and advanced training at Valdosta, Ga., before being commissioned a second lieutenant July 28, 1943. He received B–17 transition training at Hendricks Field, Sebring, Fla.; following which he was transferred to Great Bend, Kans., in October 1943 to enter the original B–29 program. He went to India in March 1944, with the Four Hundred and Forty-fourth Bomb Group, and flew as a B–29 copilot in 15 missions against enemy targets in Japan, Singapore, and Manchuria. He participated in the first B–29 raid on the Japanese homeland June 15, 1944, when the Air Force attacked Yawata, Japan's steel center.

In May 1945, Captain Gallagher moved with the group to the Marianas, where he took part in 20 more missions against Japan. He returned to the United States in October 1945, with the Four Hundred and Forty-fourth Bomb Group, and was stationed at Merced, Calif., until May 1946, when the group was transferred to its present station at Davis-Monthan AFB, Tucson, Ariz., and subsequently redesignated the Forty-third Bomb Group.

As assistant group operations officer for the Forty-third, Captain Gallagher organized the standardization board prescribing instructor training for his base. Besides serving as an airplane commander, he also has been group intelligence officer. He has flown B–50's regularly since January 1, 1949. His awards include the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal with three clusters, six battle stars, and three unit citations.

Mr. President, those of us who come from the State of Minnesota are honored by having Capt. James Gallagher as one of our fellow citizens. We pay tribute to his great service, and we join his wife and daughter and his mother and his father in celebrating his splendid service to his country.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, and withdrawing a nomination, which nominating message was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Calendar.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Admiral Alan G. Kirk, United States Navy, retired, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Capus M. Waynick, of North Carolina, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Nicaragua.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George R. Merrell, of Missouri, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Ethiopia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William C. Foster, of New York, to be deputy United States special representative in Europe, with the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gordon Dean, of California, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1950.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry DeWolf Smyth, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1950.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Without objection, the President will be immediately notified of the confirmations.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is desired to have a call of the calendar on Monday, and therefore it would seem better to have an adjournment taken at this time, so as to permit a morning hour on Monday, for the Senate has been taking recesses from day to day for some time.

Therefore, I move that the Senate now stand adjourned until Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 23, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 20, 1949

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, come to us in our needs, in our failures, and in our disappointments. As we wait upon Thee, we pray that quiet thoughts, the quiet duty of each new day may steal upon us.

O give us the power of high decision, the hunger that longs for fullness of life, and inspire us with those wise silences that sustain us in our aspirations. Teach us that when words leave our lips they are no longer our own, for no man lives unto himself. For hesitation, give us insight; for prejudice, give us open minds; from spiritual bondage, give us a blessed relief. For the sake of Thy dear Son our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1535. An act to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, with respect to housing accommodations in hotels; and

S. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating Memorial Day, 1949, as a day for a Nation-wide prayer for peace.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3997. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. REED, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. FERGUSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two newspaper articles.

Mr. WELCH of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Buffalo Common Council and an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News by Thomas L. Stokes.

Mr. DAVENPORT (at the request of Mr. BUCHANAN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two newspaper articles.

Mr. GOSSETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some excerpts.

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement he made before a Senate committee.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he expects to make in Committee of the Whole today and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MCCULLOCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mr. RIVERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement he made on the golf debacle in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KERR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a tribute paid to Hon. George Gordon Battle by James A. Farley.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 326 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PAY, ALLOWANCES, AND PHYSICAL DISABILITY RETIREMENT FOR MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4591) to provide pay, allowances, and physical disability retirement for members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Public Health Service, the reserve components thereof, the National Guard, and the Air National Guard, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4591, with Mr. RABAUT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 35 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Before the gentleman begins, if he will permit me, I should like to announce that I have designated the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] to handle the time on this side. He sat through all the hearings and is very familiar with the bill.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Armed Services fully appreciates the fact that it has here a very long, complicated, and technical bill. We are firmly of the opinion that if the bill is understood it will receive the support of the committee. I sincerely hope you will bear with us while we attempt to go over the bill to be as helpful as we can.

Those of us who have been familiar with the military services pay for some time have realized that it has grown into a crazy-quilt patchwork. Over a period of years there have been attempts to patch up one little difficulty and inequality after another, until we have reached the point that it does not make a consistent whole, and there are many compensations which cannot be justified.

We are also conscious of the fact that we are reaching a very critical stage in our armed forces, both enlisted and commissioned. Just to point out one of the difficulties we now have, the pay scales of the armed services have not been revised since 1908. In that year there was a general revision of the military pay scales. Since that time there has been piecework on military pay scales, so we have reached this period of time realizing that there has been a 400-percent increase in pay over 1908 for the lowest grade enlisted man, the highest grade enlisted man has received approximately 117-percent increase in the same period of time, the lowest grades of commissioned officers have received an increase of about 27 percent, and the general officers have received a pay increase of only 10 percent. This we can all compare with the increase in pay in all other services, including the civilian branches of the Federal service.

This patchwork has resulted in the present situation, in which a lieutenant colonel with 30 years of service draws pay identical with that of a brigadier general, and a major with 30 years of service draws only $69 a month less than a brigardier general.

What is the situation with reference to the composition of our armed forces? The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on yesterday made a very important point, and I thought he made it very strongly. However, I want to repeat some of it now because there are a good many members here now who were not here at the time the gentleman from New York spoke.

Since 1946 we have had resignations among the graduates of the Naval Academy to the extent of 643. Contrasting that with the years from 1937 to 1940, we had only 63 resignations from the Naval Academy graduates.

The matter is progressing and we feel if it continues at the rate that it has during the years 1945, 1946, and 1947, the last three graduating classes, we will reach the point of 44 percent of resignations with less than 5 years of service.

From the years 1937 through 1940, only two commanders resigned; but during the years 1946, 1947, and 1948, 28 resigned. Compared to the same two periods, we have 1 lieutenant commander as against 145 in the most recent graduations. In the other ranks above ensign the contrast is even sharper. Nine lieutenants as against 486 in the latter period; 29 lieutenants, junior grade, as against 363. Of the 3,894 naval officers who were integrated in the regular services since July 1947, 594, or 15 percent, have already resigned. I think it is clear we are not now holding the men that we have educated and found qualified for military service. They simply will not stay in the service under present conditions. Again, we are not attracting into the services the people we want. At the present time only 37 percent of the 17,000 Regular Air Force officers are college graduates. Last year there were 2,628 aviation cadets who entered upon pilot training. Of these, 1½ percent were college graduates, while 71 percent had less than 2 years of college. In contrast, of the 5,214 aviation cadets who entered training during the latter part of 1940, 36.3 percent were college graduates, and but 7 percent had less than 2 years of college. So, we are neither attracting them, nor are we holding them. It became evident to the departments quite some time ago that something had to be done about the matter. Former Secretary of National Defense, James Forrestal, appointed a civilian commission to study the question. This commission was composed of Mr. Charles Hook, chairman of the board, Armco Steel Corp., chairman; Father John J. Cavanaugh, president, Notre Dame University; Mr. Keith S. McHugh, vice president, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; and Mr. Lawrence H. Whiting, president, American Furniture Mart Building Co. and Whiting & Co.

These gentlemen constituted the Commission. They spent more than a year in studying the pay schedules and pay system of our armed forces. They embarked upon the idea that we should adopt a career compensation plan for our armed forces on the theory that all pay should be compensation for responsibility and service rendered. Throughout this bill we base all the pay scales upon the responsibility assumed and the services rendered.

In connection with the studies of the commission, they compared the military pay scales—and when I say that I mean the total over-all compensation, the pay and allowances together. Those were compared with comparable positions in industry generally. The charts are available, and a study of them for a very short period of time will indicate that the proposal we bring you now would bring military pay scales, plus allowances, somewhat in line with industrial pay scales, for enlisted men as well as for officers. You will find in all brackets of enlisted men and the lower ranking officers, the entrance pay is probably just a little bit more than it is in industry, but after you reach the rank of about major, the military pay scale begins to taper off, and by the time you get to your Chief of Staff your compensation is probably less than half of what the top man in industry, heading a comparable organization as to personnel and money, gets.

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. Please let me finish my statement. This is very complicated. I am aware that there has been some talk as to what is done in this bill with reference to the recruit. The bill continues the recruit's pay at what it is at the present time. I might remind some of you GI's that hereafter the man who goes in is not going to be known as a private. He is going to be known as a recruit. We continue his pay at $75 per month. He will be a recruit for a period of approximately 4 months. The theory of the bill is compensation for responsibility and service. He not only gets $75, as you know, he gets board and room and clothes and what not. The Hook Commission found that the total pay, when considering the found of enlisted men, amounts to $183 per month, whereas the average entrance pay in industry generally over the United States is $178 per month. Remember, the vast majority of them are 18-year-old boys with high-school educations, and some without.

They are compensated under this bill to the extent of approximately $183 a month, although I believe the Hook Commission figure is low, because the upkeep of a private soldier runs more than that, according to the figures I have received throughout the year. But he is going to stay there only 4 months. If he has no aptitude to be a soldier, of course, he will be eliminated. If he does have, he will pass into the grade of private, and then in about 7 months he becomes a private first class, and then he is on his way to his career.

Other than in the position of recruit, who is learning to be a soldier, sailor, marine, or air man, the percentage of increase, after the man has indicated that he is becoming a career member of the service, his pay increase is approximately the same as that given to the officers. It runs about 50 percent.

I believe that a careful study of the bill will show that it is equitable and just as between officers and enlisted men.

There are many other things in this bill. As I have indicated, we have a patchwork system at the present time. For a long period of years promotions in the armed services were stagnated, as many men were taken in after the first World War in one group. As time came on there was a hump in the service, and no one could be promoted above that hump. At various times we got into a system of longevity pay, so that we reached the point where men who were not assuming the responsibility or rendering the service of higher officers were drawing the identical pay of higher officers. In this bill we eliminate that.

Incidentally, for the enlisted man, I want to say we go down to the fourth pay grade in granting quarters allowances. We increase his quarters allowance from $37.50 to $67.50, but after he has 7 years of service and is in the fourth grade, he is now recognized as a career man, one who is beginning to establish his family, and who is entitled to quarters allowances. But in this patchwork we have gone to such things as sea pay and foreign duty pay. It has always occurred to me to be rather ridiculous that we had to pay a sailor to go to sea. But that is exactly what we are doing under the existing law. An enlisted man gets 20 percent of his base pay and an officer gets 10 percent extra. We are paying the same percentages for foreign duty pay. Here we are, the greatest Nation in the international picture, with our troops bound to be out of the continental limits of the United States, and still, under existing law, paying 20 percent and 10 percent additional. In this bill we do away with that system. By that one provision we are saving the Government $77,000,000 a year.

Another thing: At the beginning of the First World War it was recognized that flight duty was extrahazardous, and submarine diving was extrahazardous, and hazard pay of 50 percent of base pay was established. It is in existence today. Under that a second lieutenant, flying a jet plane, gets $100 a month, or $1,200 a year. A major general riding in a transport plane gets $4,400 a year.

There have been many attempts made to adjust this system because it is totally improper; it is incorrect; it is unjust; it results in the one who does the least flying getting the most flying pay. For the first time, the Hook Commission has suggested something that will equalize this and finally, I hope, eliminate it.

The second lieutenant draws a little more flight pay than at present, and increases continue up to the grade of colonel, who gets $220. When a man gets to be a general his flight pay goes back to that of a second lieutenant—he goes back to $100 a month. On these items in this bill alone we are saving over $13,000,000. At the present time we are paying special-duty pay because a man is aide to a general or has some type of medal or badge for marksmanship; we are now paying $10,625,000 in such special-duty pay, and we eliminate that in this bill.

During the war we were drafting fathers, and you could not take the breadwinner away from the family and do nothing to take care of his dependents. We adopted the family-allowance system. At that time everybody understood that it was a temporary measure. The basis of that system was that when we took a family man, and he made an allotment of $28 a month to his family, the Government gave $50 to his wife, $30 for the first child, and $20 for each additional child. So when you got to the fellow who had five or six children you had one of the highest-paid privates, probably, the world has ever known. That is the situation today.

Under this bill we propose to do what we think is just, and I believe you will agree with me in terminating this family-allowance pay. We are going to terminate it 6 months after the effective date of the act. That gives the individual an opportunity to rearrange his affairs while he is drawing the family allowance in order to get along after it is terminated. We also provide that if his total compensation, including his pay and family allowances, is less than it is at the effective date of this act, he has the right, the absolute right, to be discharged from the service. Only those enlisting prior to July 1, 1946, have the legal right to continue to draw family allowances through the current enlistment. All others have known that the allowances would terminate 6 months after the end of the war. This bill continues allowances for 6 months. All enlisted men, except the lowest ranks, will draw pay comparable to their present pay and family allowance.

By this one provision, during the fiscal year 1950, we are going to save $191,000,000. It is costing us $314,000,000 to carry this family allowance. This family allowance being in effect for 6 months after the effective date of the act means that we will not save during 1950 the full $314,000,000, but will save $191,000,000; it is still going to cost us $123,000,000. So when you come to fiscal year 1951, in addition to these charges that we eliminate here, which amount to $254,00,000 that we are paying today for these special things not based upon responsibility and service but on a system that has grown up over the years, we are saving in this bill for fiscal 1950 $254,000,000, and in 1951 we will save the full $123,000,000 of family allowances which is going to be paid during the half of 1950.

Then, what is the situation? If you take the law as it exists today, you are going to be spending $254,000,000 in 1950 for which you are getting absolutely no service. If you adopt this bill, then you are going to rearrange your pay scales with proper differential between each grade and adequate compensation in each and every grade of pay right down the line of officers and enlisted men; you are going to pay for the service and responsibility which are rendered in connection with it. You are going to have a healthy system of military compensation in the United States and one that should be able to take care of our necessities for a period of many years.

At the present time, the law is if any officer of the armed services who is disabled in line of duty, and that means practically anything that is not the result of his own misconduct, to the point where he is not capable of performing full military duty, he is entitled to retirement at 75 percent of his base pay for life. He cannot be reexamined. There is no provision for it. Whether he improves his physical condition or not, he continues to draw 75 percent of his active duty pay for life.

At the time we had between 16,000 and 20,000 officers in the regular service we probably could afford such fine treatment for a small body of men, but when we get our officer corps into the hundreds of thousands it is evident you cannot continue to pay those men at the rate of 75 percent of their base pay, notwithstanding the degree of their disability. This is a matter which must be revised, and unless we can pass this bill it is going to continue as it is, and constitute a very serious drain on the economy of our country.

Under this bill he must be disabled percentagewise, the same as the GI has always been. To secure retirement he would have to have in excess of 30 percent disability computed on the Veterans' Administration rating tables in effect at the time of retirement. Of course, he has the option of taking his years of service multiplied by 2½ percent.

The severance pay is a lump sum paid upon the man's leaving the service and under this bill it is computed in the same manner as severance pay is computed for those officers who fail of selection and are therefore eliminated from the service.

In this item alone, let me remind you, we have 32,000 temporary officers, non-Regular officers, in the Army and Air Force who are certified by the Veterans' Administration for payment. It is costing us now for the pay of those men who were retired during the last war a total of $150,000,000 a year. If we continue this large officer corps with 75 percent retirement for all of them in the future, we do not know how many millions it may amount to; but we do know that it is staggering and something that the economy of this Nation cannot afford.

In this bill for the first time we put the Regulars, the Reserve officers, and enlisted men on exactly the same footing and the same status as to retirement. For the first time there has been retirement for the enlisted man prior to 20 years of service. Under this bill the National Guard, the Reserve, the enlisted men and the officers are on the same plane, with always the right of election between the Veterans' Administration benefits or the retirement provisions here, whichever is the greater.

Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal more in this bill and there are in it some very difficult and complicated questions. We do feel, however, that we have reported a bill that is deserving of the support of the membership of the House. We began hearings on this bill on the 21st day of February and continued through the 8th day of May. Practically every day the committee remained in session considering the provisions of this bill. Some of us had experience with pay bills before. This is my third go at it, and if I see it coming, it is the last time I am going to undertake a bill for the revision of a pay.

We have brought to bear on it the recommendations of the Hook Commission, the knowledge of the members of the committee with experience, as well as our technical staff who have engaged in extensive research, and have questioned the services at length. We think we have here a bill which produces adequate compensation, proper differentials, and one which is saving the Government of the United States, because it is going to cost you almost as much in 1952 to continue your present pay system for which you are receiving nothing as it will cost you in 1952 to accept this modern, revised, and properly coordinated bill, and here you will be paying for what the Government gets, and if you do not adopt this bill you will continue to pay for the number of children that a man has, or whether a soldier is at sea or whether a general is flying at $4,400 a year.

You have here a bill under which you are going to get value for what you pay, and if you continue the same system that you have now you are going to be paying money for nothing and you are going to continue to lose the type of men that we want to attract and the kind of men that we want to keep. You have here a business that in this fiscal year is going to cost you over fifteen billion, and the top man in that set-up is going to draw almost as much as the individual Member of Congress. That is the situation in which you now have your pay scales, and you are going to continue the situation until General Clay draws about the same pay as the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives. This is a matter that is long overdue, and I hope that it will receive your careful consideration. If it does, I feel confident it will pass.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. I think the gentleman should make it plain that the officers now have a reduction salary under the present system by virtue of the fact that all of them are required to pay income taxes, beginning the first of the year.

Mr. KILDAY. That is true, but I do not want to take the position that that is a valid argument for this bill. I want to be frank about it. Up until the 1st of January of this year there was a $1,500 exemption for all servicemen, and the take-home pay has been reduced that much. They are already withholding the tax, and during this fiscal year the tax will amount to $200,000,000 more than was received from the armed services in the previous fiscal year. But, I do not want to take the position that that is a valid argument in support of it. It is a matter to be taken into consideration, but everybody is paying taxes, and I think that we do not want to put it on that basis.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman has heard the comment relating to the resignations from the two Academies. Would the gentleman comment on the fact that it is the duty of that man accepting appointment to an Academy to remain in the service?

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, I agree that a man who accepts Academy education ought to serve. Certainly, it is my effort to always get a man who is going to stay in the service.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. In connection with the question raised by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, in the graduating class of 1945 from the Naval Academy there were 1,009 men. Under the agreement they have to serve 3 years. So, last June 378, or 37½ percent of the class that graduated in 1945 tendered their resignations. On the 1st of June 1949 there will be a graduating class of 785. There are now on the desk of the Secretary 224 applications for retirement, or 28.5 percent.

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentleman will yield further, I commend my former chairman, inasmuch as for 6 years I was a member of his committee, and I admire him, but would he indicate to the Members the desirability and the duty resting upon them to check thoroughly into the background of their applicants to make certain that they will continue in the service when appointed?

Mr. VINSON. I cannot go into that field today, but the gentleman has followed me for 6 years and I hope he will follow me today.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I commend the gentleman on the fine statement he has given us on this bill. I note that he enumerates a number of savings the bill will bring about. Can he give us the difference between the savings that will be occasioned and the cost that will be placed on the taxpayers if this bill is passed?

Mr. KILDAY. I am glad the gentleman reminded me of that. It was going to be my principal point.

At the beginning of this year, when the President was preparing his budget, the Hook Commission was about ready to report but had not yet reported. In the budget sent to Congress in January of this year the President included the sum of $400,000,000, but he provided for such pay increases as might be granted in pay revision legislation during this session of Congress. Within the total $42,000,000,000 budget $400,000,000 is earmarked for this bill. We did not take all the $400,000,000. We took only $360,000,000 of it, so that there is now in the budget $40,000,000 more for this bill than the bill calls for in fiscal 1950.

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman will yield further, I think the committee deserves the commendation of the Congress for saving $40,000,000. That is what has been saved by making the effective date October. If the Committee on Appropriations would bring in a bill appropriating $40,000,000 under the budget, they would pont to it with lasting pride. So I think it is in order for this committee to point with pride to its bringing in a bill that saves $40,000,000 under the President's budget estimate.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Further along that line, will the gentleman tell the House the difference between the cost if the provisions of this bill are put into effect and the cost under the present law, not what you save under the estimate but what you actually save?

Mr. KILDAY. The $360,000,000 is correct. It amounts to about 7½ to 8 percent net increase over the present appropriation for the fiscal year 1950 for pay of the services. We do not want to minimize it at all. The additional cost is $360,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. That is, after the savings it will actually cost $360,000,000?

Mr. KILDAY. After the savings it will actually cost $360,000,000. However, as the years go by, we are really going to get our profit on it, because there is $123,000,000 going out on the question of family allowances alone, and you are going to continue the savings on flight pay and all that sort of thing. We figure that by the time we get to 1952 or 1953 we will be down to about the same figure as the savings.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. First, may I say the gentleman has made a very fine statement on the bill. However, there are three or four points I should like to have cleared up. I notice in his remarks yesterday on the rule he said this bill revises the physical disability retirement system. I note there are some 32,000 officers now certified to the Veterans' Administration, and they are now drawing 75 percent. If this bill passes, will the investigations be retroactive on these 32,000?

Mr. KILDAY. The bill does not so provide. They will not lose anything. If they gain anything, they will have to qualify under the formulas prescribed for physical disability retirement in this bill on the basis of years of service or percentage of disability.

Mr. CARROLL. I am not so sure that perhaps it should not be retroactive. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. KILDAY. We gave that very careful consideration. The Hook Commission spent a great deal of time on it. We both came to the conclusion that what has been done has been done and that it was the result of laws as they existed at the time. There are some who take the position that we cannot legally have them reexamined. I am not positive in my own mind as to that, but some of the advisers of the Hook Commission were of that opinion and at least one member of our subcommittee was of that opinion.

Mr. CARROLL. At least you are laying a proper foundation for the procedure in the future.

Mr. KILDAY. Yes; for the future.

Mr. CARROLL. One further question, if the gentleman will not mind. In the section on family allowances, yesterday the gentleman made the statement that a man with four or five children, who is a private driving a truck, draws as much as $200 a month. The gentleman said, "That is unconscionable and we will have to put a stop to it." Does this mean this bill has provisions in it which are going to take away some of the family allowances of the enlisted men who are in the service, and take away the protection for their families?

Mr. KILDAY. This bill repeals the family allowance law which is temporary legislation which was provided during the war, but not any of the provisions of the military service pay law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CARROLL. It is not quite clear. It still is not quite clear to me. Does this apply to the enlisted men in the service now who have children? If this bill passes, will it cut down the allowance for his wife and children?

Mr. KILDAY. If the man enlisted prior to July 1946, he cannot be affected by it, because he has a contract under the Recruitment Act, which existed at that time. If he enlisted after July 1946, 6 months after the effective date of this act, the family allowance will terminate as to those people. However, if at that time he is receiving less total compensation, including his family allowance, pay, subsistence, and what-not, than he was receiving on the effective date of the act, he has an absolute right to be discharged. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. CARROLL. May I put the question in a little simpler way. Under the provisions of this bill, does a man in the service receive any less pay for his family?

Mr. KILDAY. He could 6 months after effective date. He has the right to be discharged.

Mr. CARROLL. I see.

Mr. KILDAY. That affects primarily the man in the very lowest ratings, because if you will look at page 2222 of the hearings you will find testimony by some enlisted men on whom we got the details as to what they are now getting and what they would get under the bill. One of these men, I think, is a Sergeant Murphy. He will suffer a net loss of $22 a month, but he much prefers that to a temporary law which may be terminated at any time. He is a career soldier and he wants to know where he will stand, not only this year, but in the years to come, because he intends to stay there. Some of them draw a little bit more. But when you get down to the lowest grade of men, who are carrying the least responsibility and rendering the least service and are drawing the most money, I said that was unconscionable, when you compare them with other men who are rendering so much more service and getting so much less pay.

Mr. CARROLL. One further question, and that will be all. I appreciate the gentleman's very helpful explanation.

Under the increases here given for the enlisted men to the generals, has this formula incorporated in the bill been recommended by the Hook Commission?

Mr. KILDAY. It is, in essence. There are one or two places where we deviate a little, but substantially it is the exact formula of the Hook Commission. There were some limited-duty officers of the Navy who were taken care of on increased pay brackets, but it is of not much consequence.

Mr. CARROLL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. When was the Hook Commission appointed?

Mr. KILDAY. I cannot give you the exact date. I am sorry.

Mr. SHORT. It was appointed about 18 months ago.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It did its work about 18 months ago?

Mr. SHORT. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. When was the report made?

Mr. KILDAY. The report was made shortly after the first of the year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then, in any event, the recommendations of the Hock Commission are based upon the economic outlook as it appeared prior to January of this year?

Mr. SHORT. No; they testified before our committee this year, at this session.

Mr. KILDAY. These hearings started in February. But I get the gentleman's point.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Well, the point is, if the commission was appointed a year and a half ago, and on the basis of studies of the economic situation a year ago, reported in December, and if, according to the President's Board of Economic Advisers, there is a little disinflation going on, the question then becomes pertinent as to whether or not we should now fix a pay scale based upon the economic outlook as it was a year ago and write into statutory law that kind of a pay scale.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentlemen would be correct if the theory of this bill was to compensate for the increased cost of living. That is not the theory of this bill. The theory of the bill is that this Nation ought to pay people, whose services it is using, on the basis of the responsibility which they assume and the service which they render. That is the whole theory of the bill. It is my personal feeling that the pay scales have been too low and that they should be increased, because they are not adequate compensation. But the whole theory of the bill is not to cover the increased cost of living, but just and adequate pay, based upon services rendered and responsibility assumed. That is the theory on which we are paid, I believe.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I recognize there is much in what the gentleman says, but I think some consideration should be given to the point I raised.

Now the gentleman pointed out many inequities in the present law which will be smoothed out by this bill. The gentleman referred to the disability pay for officers, that they have been getting 75 percent of base pay when disability has been found. At the time the Benny Meyers case was consuming the interest of the country, I went into that matter at some length and made a study of some outstanding cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There were two cases in particular which I went into in some detail for the Appropriations Committee. I found that in both of those cases, where there was a division of opinion in the Medical Board which made the rating, there was considerable reason for thinking that the rating should not have been made. Nevertheless, when the rating was established, the pay ran back to the time when the officer held his highest rating, whether it was temporary or permanent. Seventy-five percent of that was accorded to him as the pay that he was earning at the highest point. In comparison with that, if a GI files a claim at the Veterans' Administration, his disability dates from the date of the filing of the claim. It seemed to me a great injustice.

Mr. KILDAY. That is only one of the injustices that was corrected.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is that corrected in this bill?

Mr. KILDAY. Yes, sir. If a private is shot on the battlefield, under existing law, if he sustains a disability rating of 10 percent, he will draw $13 a month. If a lieutenant who was leading him got the same identical injury of 10 percent disability, he draws 75 percent of his pay for life, and you cannot ever reexamine him to determine whether it should be up or down. A private is subject to examination at any time. We make them all alike in this bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But it does not correct the base pay?

Mr. KILDAY. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But from now on the 75 percent of base pay will be determined as of the date he was disabled?

Mr. KILDAY. I think in the first place the gentleman has two things confused. Upon final retirement, under existing law, he would be entitled to be retired on 75 percent of the highest rating satisfactorily held. But he would only draw that pay from the date of retirement. At the present time it is not retroactive. He would draw it on the basis of the highest rank satisfactorily held.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It bothered me a great deal to find some retired colonel drawing pay from the date of retirement, and the GI would draw it only from the date of filing his claim.

Mr. KILDAY. You are not going to have these long periods of hospitalization any longer. Let me get this over to you. Under the present law you cannot reexamine a man once he is retired. Under this bill he is going to be subject to examination for a period of 5 years, not longer than 18 months apart. Then his case is going to be reevaluated. So that now there will be no danger of the question of hospitalization for 6 or 8 months while they are making this final determination. It is subject to review over a period of 5 years, and that long-time lapse is going out under this proposal.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I think the gentleman has made the best statement I have heard on this bill, but there are two or three points about which I wish to ask the gentleman. I think the gentleman has almost persuaded me. The gentleman spoke as though he were not satisfied with the longevity pay that makes a major draw practically the same salary as a brigadier general; but, looking casually, I do not find in the bill where you do anything about that.

Mr. KILDAY. Oh, yes; we do, because we abolish longevity as such.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Do you abolish longevity entirely?

Mr. KILDAY. As such. All pay is fixed in the tables contained in the first two or three pages of the bill according to rank and years of service.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Then this abolishes longevity pay.

Mr. KILDAY. Yes, this abolishes longevity pay; there will no longer be a situation where you get 5-percent increase in pay for each 3 years' service.

Mr. LECOMPTE. The question has been asked and the gentleman has answered it, but I am not quite satisfied in my own mind: What is the difference between the entire pay roll of the armed services at the present time and what it will be under this bill if it is enacted? Will there be more or less retirement pay, and so forth?

Mr. KILDAY. That is going to be developed in a good deal of detail by the gentleman who will follow me. It is going to cost $300,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950.

Mr. LECOMPTE. What will it be in 1951?

Mr. KILDAY. Four hundred and seven million dollars would be the total, although there will be some savings that cannot be completely calculated at this time. I wish the gentleman from Iowa would let the gentleman from Massachusetts develop this matter, because he has gone into it exhaustively.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would defer his questions for a while.

Mr. GAVIN. This is a question I should like to ask at this particular point.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Very well; I yield briefly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas if it was not the theory of the Hook Commission to develop a schedule of pay rates that were comparable to those in civil life to make the service attractive for men to remain in?

Mr. KILDAY. That is the theory of the bill; it is called a career-compensation plan for the armed services, and the rates are based directly upon a comparison with industry for the same type of work and responsibility.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, in the opinion of the Armed Services Committee which unanimously endorsed it, constitutes a significant step in the development of a sound, practical, and necessary program for the compensation of the members of our military organization. It is imperative that this Nation maintain a strong Military Establishment. The essence of its strength lies, obviously, in capable, efficient, and adequate manpower. Probably no factor is as important in obtaining and holding capable men and women in the armed forces as a fair and modern compensation plan.

Essentially, the Military Establishment of the United States is a democratic institution in a democratic country. The Government, as an employer seeking to recruit men for its military services, must in peacetime compete with private employers and with its own civilian branches. It is, therefore, of the highest importance that it provide a pay scale and benefits which will attract capable men and women and which will induce them to serve their country in a satisfying and honorable career.

Former Secretary Forrestal recognized the importance of designing, as part of an up-to-date and complete personnel program a pattern of compensation which would achieve this purpose. In December 1947, therefore, he called upon four outstanding civilians already mentioned to furnish him with "a comprehensive study and with recommendations covering every significant phase of a sound system of compensation for persons at all levels." After a year's study, the Commission suggested a complete adjustment in the present pay structure which provided an upward revision for most grades, with special emphasis on the need for proper rewards for the leaders and administrators of the armed forces. The Commission, headed by Mr. Hook, submitted an integrated series of 33 recommendations covering pay, allowances, retirement, and death benefits, keyed to the stated objective of attracting and holding qualified military personnel and offering them opportunities for pay and advancement comparable to those available in civilian life.

The civilian Commission stated that the keystone of such a system was pay for responsibility, with appropriate incentive for promotion to the positions of greater responsibility. It, therefore, developed a pattern emphasizing basic pay and minimizing the variety of special pays and allowances which tend to distort that principle, at present, and which results frequently in higher compensation for officers and men filling positions of lesser responsibility.

The Commission discovered inequities in many phases of the present pay system, and in the course of its study established the fundamental principle of pay for responsibility. On this basis it developed wage and salary rates by surveying industrial job rates in selected large businesses covering positions involving duties and responsibilities similar to those undertaken by important noncombat arms and divisions of the military services such as administration, finance, transportation and construction. Our committee was privileged to hear the members of the civilian advisory Commission explain the concepts and principles which guided them in their work and the manner in which they proceeded. We are deeply impressed both with the soundness of their ideas and the thoroughness with which they pursued each aspect of the pay and benefit problems. It is difficult to realize, without intense personal study that in addition to the pay provided for grade and length of service, members of the armed services are compensated today under several hundred different statutes providing over 50 separate special pays and about a score of special allowances. The series of benefits payable on account of retirement for age, service disability and companion benefits paid by the Veterans' Administration must be added to this pyramid of pay problems.

The Commission's study represents the first thoroughgoing examination of the military compensation problem since 1908. Although occasional adjustments and blanket pay increases have been made in the four decades since the 1908 study, the principles then evolved are in current use today. It is evident that, no matter how expert and far reaching that basic examination might have been, the principles evolved could not be expected to keep pace with the modern concepts and innovations.

The present pay scale is neither adequate in the amount for the great majority of men in the uniformed services nor properly adjusted by grade. It is not comparable either in terms of total compensation or in terms of the differentials required for relative responsibility. The bill before us today proposes pay scales which provide proper compensation for each grade in accordance with appropriate responsibility and comparability with industry. It corrects the inequities of the present pay system by offering greater increases for promotion as contrasted with the length of service increases and by removing the overlaps in pay which in large measures negate the principle of equal pay for equal work.

Our subcommittee which devoted almost 3 months of intensive work to these proposals, which as I have stated were developed by a civilian commission during a year of concentrated study, unanimously approved all features of this bill. This alone is high tribute to a measure which is as complicated and as comprehensive as this one. I do not have to remind you also that it is a proposal which directly affects everyone in the armed services where it matters most—in the pocketbook—and in a sense affects all of us as taxpayers. The former Secretary of Defense, Mr. Forrestal, approved the recommendations in general and the present Secretary, Mr. Johnson, stated that he regarded the bill as one of the most vitally important legislative matters now pending before the Congress, from the standpoint of our national security. He declared that the outcome of this legislation may well determine whether we are to keep the armed forces at maximum efficiency and urged its enactment as soon as possible. The President has several times pointed out the need for a revision of the pay structure and has generally approved this program. His budget plans included a sum of $400,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950 for this purpose. From all these sources, endorsement of a serious study of the pay problem might well have been expected. We were, however, more than gratified to find that both the officers and men who are directly concerned have indicated their approval of these recommendations. Representatives of Regular and Reserve officers appeared before our committee and stated unhesitatingly that this program would solve many of their financial problems and provide the necessary uplift in morale. Enlisted men who spoke frankly to us in the committee room also regarded this as a great and important step in implementing the career program which the services have recently developed.

There has been much said on the floor of the House relative to what the cost of this bill will be, and it is my assignment to give that information to the Members of the House. These are important figures. It is the esssence of the whole bill from the standpoint of cost not only to the taxpayers but of interest to the nearly 2,000,000 men in the Regular and Reserve armed services of the country today.

The total increase in the basic pay, under the provisions of this bill for the fiscal year 1950 will be $403,000,000. The quarters allowances which have been substantially increased under the provisions of this bill for enlisted men, especially, will increase the cost by $115,000,000. The subsistence allowance carried in this bill over and above the cost of the present law will be $4,000,000. The total cost of the basic pay, allowances, and subsistence for the men in the active service for the fiscal year 1950 will be approximately $527,000,000.

In addition to that we must provide for the expenses of the Reserve components of our military organization, and that will mean an increase over and above the present cost of $39,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950. We must provide also for an increase in allowances for retired officers in the year 1950 the sum of $34,000,000; the increased cost therefore will be approximately $600,000,000 over and above what it now costs in the fiscal year 1950.

Now, this is important what I am going to say. What will the net cost to the taxpayers be, when you consider the savings set up within the provisions of this bill? Let us take, for instance, the hazard pay and the sea pay where we save $68,000,000 below what it costs today. In the family allowances, below what it will cost today, we will save $170,000,000 in the fiscal year 1950. The repeal of many, many statutes governing the question of pay will save further $8,000,000. Those savings alone, in those three items that I have enumerated here, in the fiscal year 1950 will be approximately $246,000,000. Deduct that from the total gross cost, it leaves you a net cost in the fiscal year 1950 over and above the cost today $354,000,000.

But that is not all. As a result of the repeal of the exemption on the income tax, the men in the military services on the basis of the compensation they will receive under the provisions of this bill in the fiscal year 1950 will pay into the Federal Treasury a total of $182,000,000. Deduct that from the net cost of the $354,000,000, and it brings the net cost to the taxpayers for the fiscal year 1950 down to $172,000,000. That is what it means to the taxpayers of the country, and these are official figures I got from those in the armed services who have made a special study of every phase of this matter.

Much has been said about what the enlisted man gets from the provisions of this bill. I have been able to get a cross section of their feeling, also as a result of interrogation of many men in all enlisted categories of the military service as to their feelings in regard to the necessity for the enactment of legislation of this kind. We also had a number of enlisted men testify before the committee. They all strongly favored the provisions of this bill.

In a period of 3 years we have lost 4,300 officers out of the Regular Military Establishment, the Army, Navy, and Air Force; 4,300 Regular officers have resigned their commissions. Of the 4,300, 3,000 were naval officers and most of them were educated in the Naval Academy.

We must do something to clear up a situation of that kind.

We find also, as a result of further studies we made and from the reports received from the Navy bulletins, that in recent years only 34 percent of the enlisted men have reenlisted when their enlistments expired. Before the war we always depended on about 75 percent of the enlisted men to reenlist. If the number fell below 75 percent, the commanding officer was hauled over the coals and asked to give an accounting as to why it did fall below that figure. However, only 34 percent of the men we have trained in the enlisted grades have in fact actually reenlisted within the past year.

Under the provisions of this bill we are doing what we can to help the enlisted men. A very important point to keep in mind is what we are doing for them in addition to incentive pay increases and that is in respect to quarters allowances. Of the total amount we are providing in increase quarters allowances of $145,000,000, the enlisted men get $142,000,000. Of that amount, the officers only $3,268,000. The enlisted men receive for quarters allowances under the present law $40,829,000. Under the provisions of this bill the enlisted men will get $183,000,000, an increase of $142,000,000 in quarters allowances over and above what they receive today.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will have to deal with in this session of the Congress, and I do hope you will give it the most earnest consideration and pass this bill along to enactment.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I would like to compliment the gentleman and the gentleman from Texas, who preceded him, on the splendid explanation that has been made of this bill. Of course, it is obvious that a bill of this kind and size presents many questions to which the average Member of Congress who has not served on this committee requires an answer. I would like to get an answer to this sort of situation. I have in mind a brigadier general who rendered distinguished service in the Army for a period of 30 years. He was brought home on a stretcher from England and was hospitalized for a long period of time suffering a disability from which he has not yet recovered. He is retired. I understand that his retirement permits him to receive 75 percent of his then base pay, which is about three-hundred-and-sixty-odd dollars a month. This distinguished man—and there are many of them—is compelled to live on an income of three-hundred-and-sixty-odd dollars a month, because he was not able to accumulate anything during his years of service, or at least accumulate anything to any great extent, because he was devoting himself patriotically to the service of his country. Do I understand that under the provisions of this bill the base pay of a brigadier general is increased, with reference to those who have served 30 years or more, to about $330 per month?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It will be $1,005 for a brigadier general having over 30 years of service.

Mr. KEEFE. Does this brigadier general, to whom I am referring, and whom I have in mind, have the option to qualify for retirement under this new law, so that his retirement would be based upon 75 percent of the new base scale provided in this law; and if he does have that option, what does he have to do under this law to qualify?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. He will qualify if he puts in his application.

Mr. VINSON. All he has to do is to read the law and pay attention to it. He does not have to do a thing to qualify. In the case that you have cited, he will get $650 retirement per month.

Mr. KEEFE. Of course the gentleman's answer does not quite meet the issue.

Mr. VINSON. All he has to do is to write a letter to the Department and notify the Department. This law does not require him to do any more. Under this provision of the bill, as I have stated, he gets $652 a month retirement.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask this question? On page 18, in which you particularly refer to the case of brigadier generals or others who have presently been retired, you say:

As to those presently retired for physical disability, the title provides that they may elect to qualify under the new rules for the new pay scales, or they may retain their present retirement benefits.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Whichever is the greater.

Mr. KEEFE (continuing to read):

If they elect to so qualify, there will be no penalty for failure to do so; but they must be eligible in all respects. Thus, those now drawing physical disability retirement or retired pay must have been retired with a physical disability which, under current Veterans' Administration standards, was 30 percent or more.

The man to whom I referred was retired with 100-percent disability. Thus far he would qualify, would he not, without penalty?

Reading further, you say in the report:

They must have received the injury or disease as the proximate result of the direct performance of active duty, or in the alternative must have completed at least 8 years of active service, as defined in the title.

In view of the proposed pay scales it is obvious that no persons now drawing physical disability retirement pay will benefit by requalifying, unless they have at least 60-percent disability or a sufficient number of years of service to benefit by the new scales.

Now, if this man elects to qualify, such as the individual to whom I have just referred, and he does qualify with 30 years of service and does qualify with more than 60-percent disability, he would have to be reexamined, would he not, in order to requalify, or do they accept disability as found when he was retired?

Mr. VINSON. He does not have to be reexamined.

Mr. KEEFE. Now, if he does accept the new pay scale and the new retirement, he loses the tax exemption, does he not?

Mr. VINSON. Not if he is 100 percent disabled.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, suppose he has an 80-percent disability.

Mr. VINSON. If he has 75 percent disability he does not lose it.

Mr. KEEFE. When would he lose it?

Mr. VINSON. When he takes the years of service instead of the physical disability. That is the difference between them.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes. I would like to get an answer to this proposition.

Mr. KILDAY. He is free in his election to take the percentage disability or years of service multiplied by 2½ percent. If he is 75 percent disabled, that would give him 75 percent of his base salary retirement.

Mr. KEEFE. That would give him the total retirement based upon 30 years, regardless of disability?

Mr. KILDAY. That is right, but if he accepts years of service, in order to increase the retired pay which he receives, then it is not going to be subject to the general exemption of disability.

Mr. KEEFE. That is exactly the question I wanted answered. The gentleman has indicated it. Let me repeat it to see if I have it straight. Such an individual could qualify for increased retirement in one of two ways: If he has 30 years of service, he would be entitled to 75 percent of the new scale, which would increase his present disability. If he has 100 percent disability, regardless of the years of service, he would be entitled to get 75 percent?

Mr. KILDAY. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. As he is presently retired he has a tax-exemption for the amount of his annuity?

Mr. KILDAY. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. But under the new situation, under what circumstances would he lose that tax exemption?

Mr. KILDAY. He would lose it if he elected to accept a larger retirement, based upon his years of service. That is one of the important provisions of this bill. This is what we are going to cut out, such as happened right after the last war, when a lot of officers thought they would be retired and they rushed into the hospital and got their retirement then.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, let us get this question straightened out, because it answers a lot of questions that people are asking me. If I get it clear in mind then, if this man elects to accept his retirement based on 30 years of service, he pays taxes?

Mr. KILDAY. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. But if he elects to go by the exemption at the time he makes his application for the new pay, he would have to demonstrate that he has 100 percent disability?

Mr. KILDAY. Seventy-five percent. If he were entitled to both 30 years of service and had a 75 percent disability, then he has the same on his retirement in either instance, but if he accepts it on the basis of his physical disability, it is tax-exempt. But this tax exemption is not peculiar to the armed services. That is the general law that applies to all general disability annuities, under a decision made by the Internal Revenue Bureau. The military services constitute a very small percentage of the total number enjoying tax exemptions on physical disability annuities.

Mr. KEEFE. I want to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for giving of his time to clear up this particular situation.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In further answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that is one of the reasons this bill is being proposed, because we find by an examination of the chart showing the scale of wages over the period 1908 to 1948 that salaries of brigadier generals were increased only 14 percent in a period of 40 years. There is no wonder that men must depend upon a pension.

Mr. KEEFE. I will say to the gentleman, of course, that I picked that particular case as outstanding, because it is one of the most atrocious situations that has come to my attention and is one of the reasons why I should like to see that situation corrected.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We find the same situation all the way down the line, particularly in the line of the officer personnel. In that period of 40 years in the case of a captain, the increase in the basic pay is only 28 percent; the major's increase in pay is only 13 percent; the lieutenant colonel, 29; the colonel, 30; the brigadier general, 14; and the major general, 11 percent increase in basic pay over a period of 40 years.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I may have misunderstood the gentleman from Massachusetts, but it is my understanding that in 1908 an Army private got $15 a month, whereas he now gets $75 a month.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is basic pay.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But the major general got $4,500 or thereabouts in 1908. He certainly must get more than a 13 percent increase now.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Here are the basic pays in a table established by a very careful study by this expert commission that shows the percentage increase in the different grades: In the grade of the enlisted man, what we might call the buck private, in 40 years, or from 1908 to 1948, the increase was 400 percent, and then in the next succeeding grades of enlisted men the increases have been 344 percent, 328 percent, 218 percent, 154 percent, 159 percent, and in the case of the highest-grade enlisted man the increase over that period of time has been 116 percent.

Then coming down to the officer personnel: The increase for the second lieutenant has been 57 percent; the first lieutenant, 38 percent.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. What is the pay of the second lieutenant at the present time?

Mr. VINSON. One hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Dependent on the years of service. Under 3 years, $180 a month with $42 subsistence and $75 for quarters.

Mr. VINSON. The second lieutenant is $175 per month.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is less than 5 years. The second lieutenant is $180; and it is $210 with subsistence and quarters over 5 years.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one additional minute.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The question was just asked as to whether or not the Committee on the Armed Services would be agreeable to an amendment which would make the pay of retired officers subject to the new schedules and subject to review, provided they were given 6 months to make their adjustments for modifications of contract, similar to the 6 months proposed to allow privates in the Army to make their adjustments when dependency allotments are cut off.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman have reference to those who have already retired?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman know that we have worked it out? And does he know what the sum and substance of this would amount to?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have some understanding of it.

Mr. VINSON. I am inclined to think you would bog yourself down and you would find actually that the cost would stagger you to such an extent you would be ashamed of ever having suggested it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was raising the question as to whether there should not be similarity of treatment between the enlisted men and the officers.

Mr. VINSON. We have gone all over that, and we know it would be a disastrous thing to do.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT].

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Massachusetts have given you as many minute details as it is possible to give on this proposed legislation. I will not pursue the discussion along those lines. I hope in these few minutes to contribute to the construction of the philosophy behind this legislation.

Before entering into that discussion, however, may I pause a moment to pay tribute to the chairman of the subcommittee which conducted these hearings. I have served for many years on the old Naval Affairs Committee and on the Armed Services Committee and I do not believe I have ever served under any chairman who has given more consideration and more time to legislation than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY]. He had able assistance from gentlemen on the minority side, and I believe they are to be complimented, together with the gentlemen on the majority side, for their full attendance.

We should not overlook the contribution made by a staff member of our committee, Mr. Russell Blandford. I think in the contribution which he has made we have the very basis of what we are talking about today. He is an able staff assistant who draws compensation for the duties he performs. We could very easily have obtained another staff assistant at a much lower salary, but we would not have received the type of performance which we have received from him.

It is wise at this time, in my opinion, to go back and see the genesis of this legislation and to try to understand, perhaps in general terms, the thinking behind these figures which have been proposed in the pending legislation. Of course, we have heard a great deal of criticism from some quarters about the brass getting all the money and the poor private not getting any. Those of us in politics recognize the fact that there are more privates than there are generals, so perhaps the popular thing to do is to cry bitterly on account of alleged lack of consideration of the private.

Let us consider exactly how this legislation was brought before this body; let us consider it in light of good business, in the light of economy, in the light of the logical operation of a business and let us remember, too, that the biggest business in this Government today, and it is big business, is our armed services. Almost half the national budget, $15,000,000,000 plus, is devoted to the operation of our armed forces. An investment of over $75,000,000,000 is presented to us.

Are we going down on the corner to get shoe clerks to run that business? Are we going over to another corner to get truck drivers to conduct it? Of course not. We get only what we pay for.

Mr. Chairman, more than a year ago that great American, that great Secretary of Defense, Jim Forrestal, who is perhaps one of the great Americans of all time, in his wisdom, selected a group of men, headed by Mr. Charles Hook, chairman of the board, Armco Steel Corp.; Mr. Keith S. McHugh, vice president, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; Mr. Lawrence H. Whiting, president, American Furniture Mart Building Co., and Whiting & Co.; and Father John J. Cavanaugh, president, Notre Dame University, not second-flight people, not second rate people, but the very highest type individuals. These men gathered together and began to study the over-all picture of the armed services, much in the same way that you as businessmen would take inventory and take a look-see into your business to determine just what was needed, what readjustments were necessary for the future, if you were going to stay in business. They then went out and examined the operations of some 100 corporations in this country, involving approximately 2,000,000 work jobs.

In Father Cavanaugh's field he examined and made a survey of the graduates of the universities of this country to determine exactly what progress these graduates had made when they went into the business world. Then they approached this over-all subject on the basis of pay for performance. They approached it on the basis that the armed service was a business, inviting into it the young men of this country; inviting them to come into a business to which they could look forward to a career and security. They compared the salaries and the emoluments received by these individuals who went into civilian life to their opposite number in the military forces, and they came to the conclusion that these figures which they have submitted and the basis on which they have submitted them would offer to the individual in the armed services an equal opportunity for advancement as though he went into private enterprise. They did this with one eye on the taxpayer and the other eye on the efficiency of operation and maintenance of this business establishment.

Those of you who will take the trouble to read the hearings will read throughout the expression of protection to the taxpayers. You will read in the interrogation by members of the committee how questions as to how much it will save the Government and how much it will cost. So, after 1 year of this private study by the Hook Commission and some 3 months searching study and inquiry by the members of the Subcommittee on the Armed Services we have now come to the floor with a bill which has the unanimous consent and approval of the Committee on the Armed Services. I think you gentlemen will admit that any time you get a group or a committee of this House to unanimously endorse a proposition, it certainly has merit.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I appreciate the very splendid statement that the gentleman is now making. But, I have asked the question of a good many Members of this House: "Are you going to vote for this legislation?" I have received the answer, "No, I am not." Then I further pressed the inquiry, "Why are you not going to vote for this legislation?" Well, the answer was, "I do not know enough about it, and it is going to cost too much money." Now will the gentleman direct himself to that inquiry and to that question as to the cost of this thing as affecting the taxpayer, to whom he has just referred in his statement?

Mr. HÉBERT. I am very happy the gentleman made that point, and I want to indicate to the gentleman the lack of attendance at this moment on the floor of this House.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman that I have tried as far as one man can to keep the Members over here so that they could hear this argument.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. In view of the remarks made by the gentleman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Wisconsin has asked the question, in which he says all Members are interested, about the ultimate cost to the taxpayer, I thought I expressed that very clearly. If the gentleman who has the floor now wants me to restate it, I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. HÉBERT. I appreciate the gentleman's effort, but may I answer his question in my own way?

Mr. KEEFE. I listened carefully to what the gentleman from Massachusetts had to say, but unfortunately when he was making his explanation there was not a handful of Members on the floor. I am asking the question again so that perhaps somebody may get the explanation here on the floor and understand it.

Mr. HÉBERT. May I answer the gentleman from Wisconsin? It is a very proper question. In the ultimate, the over-all picture, it will not only save money but practically make money for the Government. In general round figures, in fiscal 1950 it is estimated that the actual cost will be $360,000,000.

Mr. KEEFE. I think it is important to get that straight. I understand this matter does not become effective until October 1.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. So that part of fiscal 1950 will already be passed before this law becomes effective. Therefore, when you are referring to the cost of $360,000,000 in fiscal 1950, that is for only a part or fiscal 1950. Is not that true?

Mr. HÉBERT. That is true. If the gentleman will allow me to continue on that thought, it will cost $360,000,000 in fiscal 1950, and there is an estimated cost of $406,000,000 for fiscal 1951. That is the projected immediate cost. However, that does not reflect the ultimate savings to the Government because, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has so well pointed out, on family allowances alone $191,000,000 will be saved, and on special pay $77,000,000 will be saved.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I believe you have already taken credit for the $190,000,000 when you figure the $406,000,000 net cost. I believe that is in the report.

Mr. HÉBERT. No; we take it by starting on October 1.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Am I not correct on that, may I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY]?

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct. The net figure is $360,000,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year 1950, and $407,000,000 would be the figure for the whole fiscal year.

Mr. KEEFE. That is net.

Mr. KILDAY. That is net. We have taken the credit.

Mr. HÉBERT. Let us carry it further. As the years accumulate, as we go along through the years, we also recapture amounts which are not disallowed any longer on income tax. Further, we make an attractive offer to the young men coming into the service, and particularly those men who have been educated in our military institutions, to continue in the service. We recapture the money the Government spent for their education and which we otherwise lose now by not offering a sufficient attraction to them to remain in the service. In other words, we are in the same position as a businessman who tells his bank, "Lend me $360,000,000 to reevaluate my business and reorganize, and in time to come I will not only pay you back or recapture that money, but also save and make more money." That is good business. It is about time the Government start showing some inclination to adopt good business methods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield one additional minute to the gentleman in order to get in the RECORD at this point what the cost of this will be. The total cost in the fiscal year 1950 for basic pay, quarters, subsistence, and so on, is $527,000,000. That is for active service. Reserves would be $39,000,000 more, and retired $34,000,000, making the total gross cost in the fiscal year 1950, $600,000,000. Savings and tax recoveries will amount to $246,000,000 for savings and $182,000,000 on tax recoveries, making the net cost for the fiscal year $172,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is obvious from the headlines in the papers and from the radio broadcasts that the administration spenders, now that they are facing a deficit, are attempting to carry water on both shoulders. Those who have been the most active in squandering the taxpayers' money are now belatedly shouting for economy. They are trying to catch up with the Republican economy parade.

Words are fine, but what the people want is action on the part of Congress in reducing expenditures. This is the soundest form of tax reduction. And it is painless.

It is apparent that the threatened deficit of approximately $4,000,000,000 has given the spenders the jitters. At this late hour it will require something more on their part than beating their breasts and claiming that they are the friend of the taxpayer. But it is salutary to see some of the Democrats break from the influence of the great spender in the White House—the man who has set his goal toward an astronomical spending record and four billions in new taxes on top of that.

And it is stimulating to those of us who believe and who have practiced economy in Government to see the change of heart on the part of those in another branch of the National Legislature.

We hope that this new-born economy proposal in another legislative branch, and which follows the Republican formula, will catch fire and spread to the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

THE EFFICIENCY, ECONOMY, FUTURE BUSINESS MANAGEMENT, AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE HUNDREDS OF BILLIONS OF DOLLARS WHICH WILL BE APPROPRIATED FOR THE ARMED SERVICES WILL REST IN THE HANDS OF YOUNG CAREER OFFICERS NOW IN THEIR LATE TWENTIES AND EARLY THIRTIES

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, several days ago I was discussing in a rather general way the wisdom and ultimate economy that would accrue to the Nation's Treasury by revising the pay schedule, service benefits, and other compensation particularly applicable to the members of the armed service forces.

Until that time I had not made effort to study H. R. 4591, the career compensation bill, upon which extensive hearings were held by the subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, chaired by the author of the bill, our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable PAUL J. KILDAY.

I carried a copy of H. R. 4591 home with me that I might acquaint myself fully with respect to the provisions of that bill.

Mr. Chairman, I must say that upon reading the bill I was happy to discover that while it is commonly called a pay bill that it proves more a bill to provide compensation for those who seek to make a career in the armed services of our country, and that, Mr. Chairman, is exactly as it should be.

Its sections, titles, parts, provisions, and amendments, however, are so involved that I determined I would have to get more basic and detailed information with respect to its many, many provisions before I could even hope to gain an intelligent understanding of its maze of highly complicated, although seemingly integrated, provisions.

Upon my return to my office, I proceeded to acquire more information with respect to the long-antiquated, outmoded, and practiced pay customs which gave rise to the need for the bill.

Mr. Chairman, might I here submit observation that outside of the tax laws of the United States, no piece of legislation ever came to my notice that was more complicated and difficult of understanding than are the schedules of remuneration upon which the pay roll of the armed services of this country are currently computed. To cure the maladjustments and provide economic, equitable pay standards certainly will prove a stupendous task for Mr. KILDAY'S committee.

Mr. Chairman, it is my belief that few committees of this House have ever been called upon to struggle with a more urgent, difficult, and complicated piece of legislation than is comprehended in this legislation.

I think it regrettable that so few of our people, and particularly the visitors in the gallery, have so little understanding knowledge and appreciation of the enormous amount of labor that goes on—hour after hour, day upon day, and week after week—in the various committees of this House. This untiring effort all looks to the construction and perfection of legislation, which, when it comes to the floor and before the Committee of the Whole House, seemingly requires but several hours of deliberation and debate in order to be adopted or rejected by either an affirmative or a negative vote.

Mr. KILDAY'S subcommittee of the armed services is at this very hour performing a herculean task in preparing for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House a just, equitable, fair rate of compensation—for all those who wear the uniform of our country.

Mr. Chairman, when I say fair, I mean a rate of compensation fair to all who will receive the pay, as well as fair to the taxpayers of this Nation who will be called upon to provide the tax money with which to meet the pay roll.

It is because of the foregoing that I am not addressing myself to any detail, paragraph, or section of H. R. 2553. Rather I am addressing myself to the principle of arriving at equitable and just compensation for work performed by those in our armed services.

Mr. Chairman, there is but one objective in maintaining a peacetime Military Establishment in these United States and that reason is—to preserve the peace and security of our people—and of this Nation.

Unfortunately, conditions of the world today are such that our national budget is fearfully overburdened with expenditures necessary to support the military arm of Government. This is evidenced by the fact that the direct appropriations for the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and other agencies in the newly created National Defense Establishment will approach, if not exceed, the vast sum of $15,000,000,000 in this coming fiscal year. Of a certainty, we in this Congress must assure ourselves that there will be no "feather bedding," no duplication of efforts—no unnecessary persons on the pay rolls—and that every last individual employed will give full value in the service which he performs—for the compensation which he will receive.

But more important still is the consideration that should be given to all upward revisions contained in any pay bill upon which this Congress might legislate. We must insure that in the long haul the taxpayers will be protected by the retention in service of men eminently qualified and able to effect every economy with respect to the expenditure of the enormous sums which will be spent in the coming years.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, we must insure ourselves that the new rates of compensation which we now fix, will in years to come, find top-flight officials now being trained who will regard it their bounden duty to effect every possible manner of economy in the expenditure of the hundreds of billions of dollars which it now appears those who follow us in Congress will have to appropriate in the next decade or more.

Warfare today is not fought with men and horses, sabers, pistols, and cannons.

It is not fought by iron men and wooden ships.

Modern warfare invokes and utilizes all knowable things in the universe of science and skill.

Just as United States Steel, General Motors, the American Telephone & Telegraph, du Pont, and other prime corporations too numerous to mention employ the most experienced executives and business administrators as well as the greatest scientists and others, so must the armed services of these United States employ individuals of the greatest managerial skills to address their every talent to the efficient and economic conduct of what is by far the greatest business enterprise in these United States—the armed services of this Nation.

Certainly there is no corporation in the entire world which expends the vast sum of money annually disbursed by our armed service forces.

Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is a single corporation in these United States whose annual disbursements even equals any one of the three of the armed services.

On the other hand, there are thousands of private business executives administering corporate interests with investments of but a few million dollars whose annual compensation is many times greater than that paid to the highest military or civilian officers in any of our fighting forces.

This despite the fact that in the case of the United States Air Force, we have a business administration with an invested capital of more than $15,000,000,000 and with over-all disbursements of what in this fiscal year is upwards of $5,000,000,000.

For this reason I strongly feel that this Congress in its wisdom must legislate a schedule of pay for officers as well as enlisted men, that will not alone today attract but retain to our armed services the leadership which the Nation's security requires and of the competency which our national economy dictates.

Mr. Chairman, any schedule of compensation to be effective must provide a rate of pay that will successfully compete with the prevailing rates of civilian pay ranges not alone for the lower grades of enlisted personnel but for the highest grades of the commissioned officers.

Now let me elaborate on this point. Let us assume that under the Selective Service Act we induct a young man into the Army, the Navy, or the Air Force of these United States.

As an inductee he must be trained in order to serve efficiently at his assigned duties. Let us say that in one of the services one inductee becomes a painter, that in another one he becomes a radio technician, and still in the other service he becomes a specialist on internal-combustion engines.

The training of these young men annually consumes millions of the tax dollars which we in Congress make available for national defense. Now let us speak of an inductee who becomes, let us say, a good painter at Federal expense.

Let us now assume that after being highly trained he comes to the end of the period for which he was inducted. He then carefully weighs the benefits of reenlistment.

Now it is only natural that he figures that if he goes into private industry that he would expect to continue to earn his living employing the skill that he acquired while in service, and the pay of a house painter in civil life ranges from $12 to $15 per day, while in the Army as a corporal he would receive but $90 per month.

Of a certainty there is no way whereby this Congress can enact a law that will compel the individual to continue to serve in the military of the United States and so it follows just as surely as night follows day that young men, trained at Government expense will, if pay and other inducements in the military services are not sufficiently attractive, quit the service and resume gainful occupation in private life and industry.

Reenlistment records clearly evidence the fact that that is exactly what is happening. They also evidence the fact that it occurs primarily because of the greater remuneration, the shorter hours, and the further liberties and freedoms which are available to him in private life.

As it is with the enlisted men, so it is with the young commissioned officers who are being brought into service today.

Now let us consider good officer personnel. They are young men. They went to college. They are skilled in engineering, in mathematics and physics, and other branches of higher learning. Upon completion of their education, they are offered an opportunity to join the armed services of the United States, and they turn it down.

Mr. Chairman, let me here cite and bring into evidence a recent incident of which I know first-hand. It involves five young men. All attended the same eastern university. All five graduated the same day. All five were honor men in a large class of several hundred, in the school of commerce where they specialized in business management and administration.

Four of these well-trained young men readily found employment, one with Standard Oil of New Jersey, one with the General Electric Co., one with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and one with Consolidated Edison of New York City. They went to work immediately at salaries which ranged from $55 to $65 per week.

Mr. Chairman, how fortunate for our future that one of these men, because of previous service in the Air Force during World War II, and believing as he does in the mission of the Air Force, decided to again take up military life. Now, it is despite the poor compensation that he is again in the armed services of his country.

Mr. Chairman, I investigated this particular case in order to more fully inform my mind with respect to ascertaining the influences that cause men to make these determinations.

Mr. Chairman, let me instance in brief the potential earning of the four young men had they joined up with our Air Force, as I see that future under the terms of the proposed establishment of the 70-group program in being and in what we all hope is a long-time peacetime.

If they each joined the armed services as a second lieutenant, they would have collected as pay, exclusive of allowances, the gross of $180 per month and, as per the current pay schedule, the sum of $264.50 per month after 10 years of service.

Mr. Chairman, is it any wonder that these young men should have asked themselves the question as to why they should join the armed forces of the United States and wait 10 years to earn $61 a week when one can find gainful employment in private industry at a starting pay today of at least $60 per week?

What is true with respect to that engineering student is true of all students matriculating in schools of public administration, business management, finance, physics, engineering, law, accounting, personnel administration, medicine, dentistry, meteorology, and the entire catalog of what the Honorable Secretary Stuart Symington has declared should constitute the brain, bone, and sinews which he has planned to fabricate into the newly established Department of the Air Force.

It is because of these facts that the Air Force is today endeavoring to protect the American taxpayers of the future by training its young commissioned officers in especially developed curricula that looks to efficiency in business administration and economy in the expenditure of the taxpayer's dollar.

It was in accordance with that idea than an action program was instituted within the Department of the Air Force to return to college hundreds of young officers who had interrupted their college education and entered the Air Force in World War II.

These young men, experienced and battle-trained, now in their early thirties, constitute a nucleus of the Air Force. It is in their hands that the future efficiency, business management, and economy of the Air Force must rest. Some had graduated from college prior to their entry into the service, but the majority had less than 2 years' college training. Realizing the importance of business management and administrative skill, the Department of the Air Force has already sent back to college more than 1,000 of these young officers that they might be fully educated in finance and management.

I roughly estimate that it is today costing an average, including pay, of $5,000 per year to educate each of them, but the savings which their training will effect through good management, economy, and efficiency of operation will be paid back hundreds of times over during their foreseeable careers in the Air Force.

I am authoritatively advised that much of the money which we in Congress annually appropriate to our armed services is now being spent to highly train military personnel in all grades, but, Mr. Speaker, we are not training them to continue in their service to our country; we are training them, instead, for future gainful employment in the mills, factories, transportation, and other service occupations and private corporate interests.

As it stands today, the National Military Establishment, created primarily to secure the peace and welfare of this Nation, is in a large measure acting as a training and a trade school for the commercial, manufacturing, transportation, mining, and other private corporate interests in these United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is because of the foregoing that I sincerely hope that this Congress will pass a career compensation bill, a bill of such nature as will retain to our armed services men who will guard the Treasury disbursements in peacetime as they will the Nation in case of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has consumed 6 minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has demanded tellers. The gentleman from Wisconsin made the point of order that a quorum was not present. The Chair counted 105 Members present. At this time there is no question before the House on which tellers can be ordered.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fourteen Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, financial solvency is the first line of defense of any country. We must exercise great care not to wreck the financial structure of our Government. An army, navy, or air force is no use to a bankrupt country. The battle front is never stronger than the home front. A sound economy and thriving industry is essential for the defence of any nation.

Not minimizing the courage and heroism of the men and women in our armed services, who fought on land, sea, and in the air, it was, after all, America's industrial output and productive capacity that won this last war. Our highest military, naval, and air authorities will frankly agree to this. In modern times it requires not only personal bravery but the latest weapons with which to destroy an enemy.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation did not originate with the armed services. For many years those of us charged with the defense of our Nation, and who have associated closely with the personnel—both officers and enlisted men—in the different branches of our armed services, have felt an urgent need for an over-all and comprehensive study to obliterate many obvious injustices, to correct patent mistakes, and to readjust in a fair and equitable manner the pay given to the valiant men who fight and are willing to die in all branches of our armed services.

This bill, as any other measure, is not perfect. There are, no doubt, provisions in it which every Member could object to, but we are all wise enough to know that 435 Members of this House must give, as well as take, in order to get any bill passed. All legislation is the result of compromise—not on principle but on the basis of practicality.

This measure is an outgrowth of long, continuous, and serious study. A year and a half ago, the former Secretary of National Defense, James Forrestal, appointed a commission to study service pay. The Commission was composed of Mr. Charles Hook, chairman of the board, Armco Steel Corp., chairman; Father John J. Cavanaugh, president, Notre Dame University; Mr. Keith S. McHugh, vice president, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; and Mr. Lawrence H. Whiting, president, American Furniture Mart Building Co., and Whiting & Co. I wish to emphasize that the members of this Commission are all civilians and that they pay high taxes. These are the men who have recommended the legislation—and not those who would privately profit by its enactment.

A few nights ago I listened with some regret and more disgust, to a radio commentator who tried to tell the American people that we were neglecting the poor private to help a rich general. Mr. Chairman, there are many commentators and columnists who speak and write about the very little that they know. This bill equalizes opportunity and pay for all members of our armed forces in every branch, not only the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Geodetic Survey, and Public Health—but it also offers an incentive to each and every man who enters any branch of these services. It is a morale builder.

Since 1908—41 years ago—there has been no serious, comprehensive study made of this most complex, intricate, and difficult problem, and with one or two minor exceptions there has been no advance in pay.

Mr. Chairman, when this legislation was first introduced I was inclined to oppose it, chiefly because I know of the tremendous burden that is now being borne by the American taxpayer. However, after long and extensive hearings, careful consideration, thorough study, and thoughtful reflection, I am convinced that the bill should be passed.

It is not necessary for me to inform older Members of this House that often I have opposed, sometimes rather violently, the members of our National Military Establishment. Certainly, I do not have a ring in my nose—they do not lead me around, and I have dared oppose them when the odds were overwhelmingly against me. Never have I cow-towed to brass and braid, and the Lord knows they have seldom, if ever, granted me a single request which I thought was reasonable, honest, and just. I do not know why I should speak for them now—but I shall.

Let us for a few minutes look at this bill. Before I shall analyze a few of its provisions I must pay my compliments and express my gratitude to the very able lawyer and honorable Member from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] and all the members of his subcommittee, and the efficient services of our staff member, Mr. Blandford, for the patience, diligence, and thoroughness, which they exhibited during many weeks of hearings on this important and vital measure.

Well do we all realize that in peacetime, members of the armed services are interested chiefly in promotion and pay. In the last Congress, as chairman of a subcommittee, I held weeks of hearings on the promotion bill—303 pages—which I thought was one of the most complex and difficult measures I have ever examined but I confess this bill equals or excels that one in its difficulty.

Mr. Chairman, there is no country in the world that is so kind, considerate, and generous to the members of its armed services as the United States of America. We pay the members of our armed services the highest pay, give them the best food, and quarters, the biggest retirement of any nation in all the world.

We all know that you cannot put a dollar sign upon the American flag. Men do not enlist in our armed services for the monetary consideration, but we all know that they cannot live on glory, and they cannot eat honor.

The humble private since 1908 has received more than a 400-percent increase in his pay; the officer has received only 10 percent increase in his pay.

Under this bill a recruit receives no increase—and why should he? He gets $75 a month; he gets free housing, food, hospitalization, family allowances, dependency benefits, and many other perquisites—which total $183 a month. A high-school graduate going into private industry would receive only $173 a month—a little less. The reason for low Army pay has been based upon two factors:

First. Security of employment—whether there is a depression, drought, rain, hail, fire, or storm, he has a job.

Second. He is guaranteed retirement after 20 years' service. Pray tell me, Mr. Chairman, in what business could a young man of 20 years enter and retire at the age of 40 on a guaranteed retirement that will pay his grocery bills and permit him to be free to enter into any business he wishes. There is nothing in America or in all the world comparable to it. If our committee is to be criticized, it is because of liberality.

Sir, it has been charged under this bill that we are favoring officers against the enlisted man. Nothing could be more false.

Already, I have pointed out that a high-school graduate could go into the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Air Force, and make more money than he could in private industry. He has no grave responsibilities or great care. Under existing law a brigadier general draws no more pay than a lieutenant colonel after 30 years of service, and only $69 more a month than a major after 30 years of service. What a gross injustice. One of the reasons for this bill is to eradicate such obvious wrongs, and to obliterate such inequities.

A brigadier general, commanding a division of fifteen to eighteen thousand men should certainly receive more money for his stupendous duty and great responsibility. In 1908 he received $624.58 a month. Today he receives $712 a month or the shocking increase of $87.42 since 1908.

In this last war we paid a major general $9,934.04 a year. We entrusted the lives of fifteen to eighteen thousand men in his hands. He had a division or a task force, or an air wing to lead, and we paid him less than $10,000 a year.

Mr. Chairman, there were factory and shipyard works who earned as much or more in this country during the war than the major generals to whom we gave these tremendous responsibilities.

Only the other day we listened to Gen. Lucius Clay—and his over-all pay with all accessories amounted to $12,000 a year. We all know he can get $50,000 or more from a private concern.

Why should we pass this bill? Because of what the able gentleman from New York, the former Senator now a Member of this House, Mr. WADSWORTH, who was chairman of a joint committee of the House and Senate in 1922, clearly saw—that if we are to have able, competent, and efficient men in charge, not of a business but of human lives, they must draw an amount that approximates the commensurate pay in private industry. He knows and we know that we are losing many of our finest, ablest, young officers and many of our graduates not only of ROTC but from our military and naval academies who are either refusing to accept their commissions or resigning their commissions soon after graduation.

Only today I learned through one of our colleagues, who received a letter from a personal friend who is a director at the Naval Academy, that half of the men in this year's graduating class are applying for resignations of commissions.

Mr. Chairman, it costs approximately $20,000 to educate a boy at Annapolis or West Point. We must appoint others to take their places, when we have an acute shortage of officers because neither Academy can supply the full quota.

Here in Washington where we daily see and elbow many of the brass and braid, we are inclined to believe that the country is filled with generals and admirals. In spite of the fact that they seldom, if ever, grant any reasonable request of a Member of Congress, I shall say for them that there are only 885 in the grade of general and flag rank.

In order to keep the record straight, I wish to state that only nine-tenths of 1 percent of the total Regular officers of the Navy are of flag rank; only 1½ percent of the total Regular Army officer strength are general officers; slightly over 1 percent of the Air Force officers are general officers and only seven-tenths of 1 percent of the officer strength of the Marine Corps are general officers.

Now we are faced with this situation—we just are not getting the new officer material that we need and we are getting too many resignations from officers in the services. We cannot afford to lose these people. We must make the salaries of the services somewhere near commensurate with the salaries that these same men would command in private industry.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken longer than I intended, but in closing I wish to say these few words. It is easy to criticize the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force, but when you get right down to it they did a magnificent job in winning the last war. In those dark days they were hailed—and all but worshipped—and now sweetness and light have turned to wormwood and gall.

If you think it is an easy task to move a division of 15,000 men, figure out how much food they will eat, how much water they will drink, how much ammunition they are going to shoot, how much gasoline their vehicles will use, how many ships will be needed to get them where they are going, what equipment they will need after they get there—and a thousand other things.

Then try to plan an attack upon the enemy; hit him where he is weakest; find out about his reserves; march to the front where a minimum of loss of life of your own troops will occur. That is an awful responsibility upon your head. Consider yourself responsible for the welfare and health of 15,000 men—and even their morals when you take over the city.

This measure provides extra pay for hazardous duty—flying and submarine duty, glider duty, parachute duty, diving duty, submarine escape, deep-sea diving, and leprosy duty. It is true the cost of the proposed bill will be approximately $360,000,000 for fiscal 1950 and approximately $406,000,000 for fiscal 1951. Thereafter the cost should decrease in view of the new physical disability provisions for retirement, the eventual elimination of family allowance benefits and of many special pays. Of course much of this increased pay will be recaptured by the Government in taxes. In the long run this bill will cost little if any more than our present costly, cumbersome, antiquated, and inadequate system. This is a good bill and long overdue.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to my distinguished friend from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. While the gentleman is talking about the cost of this legislation, and others have spoken about amounts that might be saved through the passage of this bill, I am wondering what the gentleman thinks about what might be saved to the country in the event this legislation passes and we remove the probability of again resorting to a draft act. Does not the gentleman feel that if we have to go back to a draft act again it will not only be costly in dollars but will again disrupt the lives of the young men of this Nation?

Mr. SHORT. I think the gentleman has made a most pertinent observation. If we pass this legislation we will not need a UMT or the peacetime draft, which is wholly contrary to the traditions of the American people.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I commend the gentleman for the very able statement that he has made. It might be well to put in the RECORD also that from November to February 16 percent of the vacancies in petty officerships remained unfilled because of the lack of incentive for these boys to go up there and compete in these examinations to fill these very important positions.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I fear that if we do not pass this bill, we will not have much of a Navy and we will have weak branches in the other armed services 10 years hence.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, there is very little that can be added to what has already been said about this bill, but I hope to give you a few new ideas about it.

I want to pay my compliments to the chairman of the subcommittee handling this bill, the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable PAUL J. KILDAY, for the fine work that he has done. He spent days and days on this and he was most efficient and competent in the holding of the hearings. I think he did an excellent job and it was a pleasure to work with him. I wish also to pay my respects, too, to our staff member, Mr. Blandford, and also to the three service officials, Admiral Fechteler, General Dahlquist, and General Nugent, who appeared there as witnesses and who brought many other witnesses to us. They were most helpful in giving us background facts on the various aspects of this problem and in explaining many technical details of this bill.

I was a subcommittee chairman during the last Congress. We always get interested witnesses coming before our committees. It is almost impossible on a military bill to obtain disinterested witnesses. I used to ask our chairman, at that time, our late colleague from New York, Mr. Andrews, whether there was not some way that we could get disinterested witnesses to help us on the problems submitted to us for legislative action. In this particular case we had the benefit of such of these men. In the hearings on this bill we had the gentleman from the Hook Commission, all of whom were absolutely disinterested. I want to point out that one of those men, Mr. Whiting, has spent almost his whole life studying the problems of military pay as a hobby. He was an expert on that during the First World War, and he continued his interest in the question of military pay during the intervening years.

What are we trying to do here? We are trying to erect the structure which will take care of the security of America. In that way this bill is different from any bill that we have before us. The security system of America cannot fail—that is the one branch of our Government that must succeed. If it does fail, America as we know it will no longer be America. Germany, Italy, and Japan learned what failure in a nation's security system means. That is why it is essential that we have a good personnel system and a good pay structure which will attract and hold the kind of men that we need to handle these problems in our Government. One of the imperishable impressions which I received during this hearing was when one admiral said, in response to a question, "I am not thinking of what will happen in the next 5 years or even about the pay—what I am thinking about is, if America gets in trouble in 20 years, will we have the admirals and generals who must lead the men and the forces who are going to protect and preserve America? Will we have the men who must make the plans and develop the strategic concepts that will lead to victory, with the least cost in lives and property? In short will we have the leaders—in all ranks—that will prove the deciding factor in protecting America and prevent its destruction?"

This bill does exactly that, as many speakers have told you today.

The world is in a state of chaos. Everywhere you go there is trouble in the air. I was utterly astounded last Monday when I was in Chicago taking part in a meeting of Reserve officers and busiessmen taking courses in the Armed Services Industrial College. At that place there were three or four hundred men, leaders in business, leaders in all kinds of industrial, fiscal, transportation and other activities. Why were they there? They were successful. They were making big money. Many of them had served their country and could well say "I've done my part, let someone else protect the country." They were there because they wanted to add their experience, their time, and their skill to let the world know that America was ready for trouble. The impression they gave me was that if America was ready for trouble, then we would not have any trouble and they wanted the world to get this impression.

We have a Military Establishment worth over $70,000,000,000, scattered all over the country, scattered all over the world today. We need capable, intelligent, efficient, and trained men to operate this big plant.

One thing that has personally interested me is the matter of flying pay. Many years ago it was my privilege to draw flying pay. There has been a great deal of criticism over the years over the fact that our flying pay is entirely too generous, and I believe that is true. The scale we have had all through the years is to pay 50 percent of the base pay in addition to the regular pay as flying pay. This bill cuts that down. Generals are allowed only $100 a month for flying pay. It is our feeling that even then there might be some abuses, but, on the whole, those men who do little flying should have that experience so that they can better understand the problems of the active fliers. There is an increase of about 35 percent from colonels on down, for those who participate in regular flying duties.

Second lieutenants, enlisted personnel, and finally the lowest man get $30 a month exra. This is necessary.

Mr. Churchill some time ago made a speech in which he said:

> For good or ill, air mastery is today the supreme expression of military power, and fleets and armies, however necessary, must accept a subordinate rank. This is a memorable milestone in the march of man.

It is a fact that flying is dangerous. Postwar flying of American aviators in our armed services is 25 percent more dangerous than it was during the prewar days. The reason is we have these new, fast experimental planes of all kinds. In air maneuvers battle conditions are simulated and that is dangerous. During the war, it might surprise many of you to realize that in the Air Force 24,119 officers lost their lives. In all of the other branches only 10,526 lost their lives. In addition to those Air Force officers we lost 16,313 men who were flying personnel. The minimum that men must fly in the American Air Force today to qualify for flying pay is 100 hours a year. The mortality rate of a boy 22 years old going into the flying branch, as compared with one who goes into the ground service or into the Navy, is 12 years shorter. For every boy of 22 who goes in for flying in the American Air Force or the Navy, by the time he is 40 one out of every four will have perished from air accidents. That is the reason we feel that flying pay is justified. There is danger, and we wish to get the most favorable men we can find in our Air Force, because through the air, above all of the other activities of the armed forces, is where our victory will come in the future, if we are unfortunate enough to be attacked, which I pray and hope will never again happen.

Under leave granted to me by the House I call your attention to the two following tables showing the comparative increases in pay in many branches of the Government which have occurred from 1908 to 1949. The last general over-all study and pay structure was in 1908. You will notice the pronounced increase in raises by every department—except one—over what we are proposing for the armed services.

TABLE I.—Comparison of Government services salary data with that of officers in the uniformed services

Those are some of the things that have impelled me to recommend to you my associates in the House that you support this bill wholeheartedly. I will bring the efficiency and morale that we need at this particular time in our armed services.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. In connection with special duty and hazard pay, the question has been raised as to whether the bill covers those teams called underwater demolition teams.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. It does cover those teams.

Mr. COLE of New York. They are covered by the hazard-duty pay?

Mr. JOHNSON. They are covered in the bill, I believe section 204, subdivision (7), on page 18.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. I have heard a great deal of talk today on the subject of the incentive involved in trying to get second lieutenants to join the Army. I am a little in doubt as to what this bill accomplishes for them. I think it is rather futile to say that you are going to raise the pay of a brigadier general and expect that to be an incentive for young men to join the Army as a second lieutenant. I do not want to use too much of the gentleman's time, and will get to the question I have in mind very rapidly, but I wish to lay this groundwork for a question.

The thing that disturbs me is the showing of the statistics on ROTC graduates not accepting commissions. Certainly they do not, because at $180 a month a young man cannot expect to support a home, wife, and children; yet you expect him to take on his shoulders all the responsibilities of a second lieutenant. There is nothing in this bill, as I understand, that will give the second lieutenant any chance of becoming a brigadier general. It looks to me as though the bill were self-destructive, because of its provisions as to decreased value of longevity pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. How does this bill actually give any incentive to the second lieutenant?

Mr. JOHNSON. It raises the pay of the second lieutenant from $180 to $225, to start with, and gives them a later increase in pay based on length of service. Also, the course from second lieutenant to general is more even and uniform under the provisions of the bill, and it also gives these young fellows a chance to be selected for promotion under a different system. We have established a new system of promotion that is partly by selection and not entirely by the file system. It offers an incentive to those who enter the service to stay in it, and gives them a chance, by working hard, to be selected for promotion over a more indolent or less intelligent officer.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I wish the gentleman would explain about children. As I understand, there is no allowance for any member of the soldier's family except his wife.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is governed now by the Dependency Act, the Family Allowance Act, that we passed during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, one of the most difficult problems confronting the committee was family allowances under the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942. This act passed after we began inducting large numbers of men with families and other dependents, and it was a necessary and beneficial piece of legislation. It would have been difficult to have fought the war without it. However, it was purely a war measure. The act provided that it was to be terminated 6 months after declaring the war to be at an end—and that is what we have done.

Our committee gave this matter most careful consideration and we were particularly anxious to obtain the impressions of enlisted personnel with regard to this matter. I was an enlisted man in World War II. We had six enlisted men testify before the subcommittee on certain features of the bill and particularly with reference to the family allowance benefits. Let me quote from the record what some of those enlisted men said about the elimination of the family allowance benefits. Chief Yeoman Sands, of the United States Navy, stated:

> In section 511 * * * we find the termination of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, commonly known as family allowance. Although I am the father of 2 boys, age 3 and 5, I believe this termination to be a good thing. An allowance of this type was absolutely necessary during the war years, but I feel that to subsidize marriage and dependents without regard to ability, work performed or responsibilities assumed, is out of place in the peacetime forces.

Boatswain's Mate King, of the Navy, stated:

> Another good thing about this bill is the ending of the family allowance benefits. I guess they were necessary during the war when men with large families had to come into the service, but it doesn't seem to be a good thing to base a man's pay on his prolific ability rather than his rating and his job.

Corp. Frank L. Vito, of the United States Army, stated that the comments he had heard with regard to the elimination of family allowances were from career privates, and when asked to define career privates he explained:

> They have no desire to get ahead. And as long as they are collecting that money and haven't the responsibility you can't very well blame them. I mean, I believe it will tend to eliminate those personnel. They are entitled to make a living, the same as the rest of us are, for their family, but I don't believe they should come into the Army strictly to have the Army support them because they are Americans.

I think those enlisted personnel who appeared before our committee rather neatly summed up the arguments for and against dependency allowances. If our armed forces are to be run on a welfare basis then by all means we should keep the family allowance benefit. But if we want a Military Establishment with personnel paid in accordance with their responsibilities we had better eliminate a system which pays a man strictly on the basis of his family needs. I know of only one nation in the world that operates under that theory, and it is not the United States.

Let me cite some examples of how the system works. Any enlisted man who can produce evidence that he contributes to the support not only of wife and children, but of parents, brothers, and sisters can get the allowances. Here are some actual examples. A master sergeant, with nine dependents, consisting of a wife, six children, a parent, and a brother, is drawing $217 a month in family allowances. That is in addition to his pay of $214.50 and his subsistence and his clothing. His total compensation in cash, therefore, is $431.50 a month. He does the same job as other master sergeants with smaller families but gets twice the pay. He draws more pay than warrant officers and commissioned officers up to the grade of major and lieutenant colonel. Here is another case—a corporal with a wife and 11 children. His family allowance payments total $280 per month. His total pay for 4 years' service is $385 per month. This is more than any soldier senior to him draws whose family is smaller, and it is more than any chief warrant officer with 21 years' service. It is more than a captain with 9 years' service. Is that man interested in promotion? He can stay on a job with no responsibility and still draw more money than thousands with more service and harder jobs. Or take this case—a private with 1 year's service, with 13 dependents, including a wife and child, 2 parents, and 9 brothers and sisters, whom he claims as dependents.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Would the Army have to take a man who had 10 children if he undertook to join the Army today?

Mr. WALSH. That is the fault of the recruiting service. I agree with the gentleman. I believe the Army itself is wrong in taking that man into the service. They should not have done it and it should not be done in the future.

His allowances are $247 a month. This, plus his $80 a month, gives him $327 cash per month. This is in addition to his food, clothing, and shelter. This is more than the pay of any enlisted man senior to him with a smaller family, any warrant officer with less than 18 years' service and any lieutenant or any captain with 3 years' service. Does he seek promotion? Is it not a ridiculous situation?

The cost for family allowances for 1950 will be $314,000,000. Next to pay it is the largest single appropriation pertaining to personnel. By terminating the family allowance benefits 6 months after the date of the enactment of the proposed bill, we will cut the cost of this program from the present $314,000,000 by $191,000,000, and in the succeeding years this amount will decrease. Because of previous law, we must still continue family allowances for those who enlisted prior to July 1, 1946, but all of those enlistments will terminate not later than July 1, 1952.

The committee did a very wise thing. They approved an adequate pay scale for enlisted men and coupled it with quarters allowances for the noncommissioned officer, which will permit these career men to maintain themselves and families decently. They put in the provision declaring the war at an end so far as dependents allowances are concerned. This will put the enlisted men on a permanent basis where they know where they stand. It will prevent privates getting more pay than master sergeants and officers. However, we included a proviso that any man whose pay is reduced because of cessation of his family allowances shall be discharged upon application.

Nothing in this pay bill is more important than the correction of the deplorable situation resulting from family allowances.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. The gentleman stated that only six enlisted men testified. The gentleman was an enlisted man himself. Does he not know that he would have been crazy to come down and testify against an officer when he was an enlisted man?

Mr. WALSH. I would not consider that testifying against an officer. I realize that some enlisted men would be hesitant to appear before a committee. But, the men that did appear, I am glad to say, came upon their own free will and testified.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. With reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee about the hesitancy of enlisted men to testify, let me say that they serve on courts martial now. Enlisted men are not afraid to testify before committees of Congress. They come before us and give us the benefit of their views. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee did not appear and offer any contributions for the consideration of the committee when it was having these hearings, but the members of the enlisted service did come there and stated that they approved what we were doing with reference to family allowances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, the problem of disability within the military services is perhaps one of the most difficult of all personnel problems. It is, to me, a matter of wonder and surprise that the provisions for retirement or severance on account of disability have remained unchanged almost since their enactment, practically a century ago. In truth and honesty, it is not solely because the provisions enacted shortly after the Civil War were so well planned and prophetic. It is more likely that the problems were so perplexing and the military services, in general, so small that arrangements could be made within the family, so to speak, to insure that neither the services nor the individuals suffered too greatly. In addition, the establishment of a Veterans' Administration and its several predecessors assisted, materially, in glossing over the problem since men with wartime service could always apply for veterans' benefits. These, as we all know, have been modified by almost every session of Congress.

The large Military Establishment which we have today and which may be with us for some time renders it impossible to overlook this problem any longer. Since the close of World War II, particularly, the situation with respect to disability retirement in the armed services has received special attention and scrutiny. Not only have the services themselves attempted to improve the procedures and suggest revisions in the system, but the Congress on its own initiative has conducted several investigations of the matter. Probably the most serious and extensive study of this type made by the Congress was undertaken in the spring of last year under resolutions authorizing the Armed Services Committee to conduct thorough studies and investigations concerning physical disability retirement of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

The development of a program of proper career compensation for the uniformed services necessarily involved further study of this subject. The committee of outstanding civilians appointed in December 1947 by Secretary Forrestal to furnish him with a completely unbiased and objective report covering every significant phase of a sound sysem of compensation made findings and recommendations concerning all types of retirement and paid particular attention to the issues involved in retirement on account of disability. The Commission stated in its report:

> Disability retirement is one of the most difficult questions to be resolved. The Commission recognizes that there is a marked distinction between service disability as affecting capacity for most service in the armed forces and capacity in civilian employment particularly since in civilian life disability can generally be matched against type of duty and environment. It cannot accept the thesis, however, that a minor disability, which may render the individual unacceptable for certain types of military service but which is no bar to civilian employment justifies a liftetime annuity at the taxpayers' expense.

The House Armed Services Committee welcomed the findings and proposals of the civilian commission and in general accepted the principles which it formulated. It was gratifying that the investigation made by this eminent group concurred in so many respects with our own recommendation made last year by the legal subcommittee of which I had the honor to be chairman.

Retirement of Regular officers of the armed services has been conducted without substantial change since the laws permitting such retirement were first enacted in 1861. Generally speaking, these laws provide that any officer who becomes permanently incapable of performing his duties as the result of physical disability incurred as an incident of service may be retired.

Enlisted men were not entitled to retire on account of service disability until 1941 when personnel of the Army—now extended to the Air Force—were granted the same rights as officers, provided they had 20 years service. Navy and Marine Corps personnel who have transferred to the Fleet Reserve after 20 years may be placed on the retired list for service disability but with no increase in retired pay. Coast guardsmen who have at least 16 years of service are entitled to retired pay at 75 percent upon the occurrence of disability. All enlisted personnel, and officers as well, are equally entitled to pensions and disability compensation provided by the Veterans' Administration on account of disability incurred or aggravated in service, or thereafter if traceable to service.

In addition to these differences between officers and enlisted personnel, differences between reserve and regular officers exist. During the First World War Reserve and temporary officers of the Navy and Marine Corps were eligible for disability retired pay on the same basis as regulars. This was terminated in 1921. In 1928, Congress authorized the non-Regular officers of all services, who had incurred at least 30 percent permanent disability during World War I, to be certified to the Veterans' Administration and receive 75 percent of the basic pay of their rank. At present officers of the Army and the Air Force, who held reserve commissions during World War II, are certified to the Veterans' Administration by virtue of an Executive order under the 1928 law, whereas Navy Reserve officers are compensated on account of disability retirement by the Navy. Both receive 75 percent of the basic pay of their rank, irrespective of degree of disability.

Reserve personnel who suffered disability while on training duty of less than 30 days duration are eligible to elect disability benefits from the Veterans' Administration, or those provided for civil employees of the Federal Government under the Employees' Compensation Act, which is a type of workman's compensation program. Reserves serving on duty for periods in excess of 30 days receive the same benefits as regulars.

By virtue of tax law and interpretations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, benefits received on account of disability, whether paid under the military or veterans' laws, have been exempt from taxation. As pointed out by a representative of the Treasury Department in hearings before the committee last year this exemption works in an unequal fashion in that the more income a man has the more the exemption is worth. Consequently, since the man with lesser disability is more likely to be able to earn a livelihood, the exemption would appear to provide an advantage to the man who deserves it least.

One further comment should be made concerning the existing system. At present, disability retirement is final and conclusive with no reexamination required of the individual's future physical condition, except for those who take veterans' benefits. Consequently, a lifetime payment of 75 percent of the pay of the rank held at retirement is assured whether the payment in the light of changes and health is found adequate or inadequate.

The proposed bill attempt to improve the inequities of the existing system and to extend disability privileges equally and fairly. Briefly, the proposal would—

First. Provide an identical disability program for officers and enlisted personnel, as well as for regular and reserve personnel.

Second. Distinguish between disability incurred as the proximate result of direct performance of military duty and disability otherwise incurred.

Third. Establish a temporary-disability category which would enable the services during a 5-year period to check into the status of retired individuals and restore to active duty or Reserve status those who recover sufficiently to perform satisfactorily.

Fourth. Relate the amount of disability-retirement pay either to length of service or degree of impairment, the latter to be determined in accordance with current standards established by the Veterans' Administration.

The bill provides that a compensable disability must be rated as at least 30-percent impairment according to veterans' standards, although the services, as at present, would be authorized to discharge on account of disability any person deemed unfit for military service. Those deemed unfit, but having less than 30-percent disability, would receive severance pay under the same formula as that provided for officers involuntarily separated because of failure of selection for promotion. The bill stipulates that those persons whose disability is not found to be the proximate result of direct performance of duty shall not be placed on either a temporary or permanent retired list unless they have completed eight years of service, counting all periods of duty which are creditable in connection with retirement or discharge in connection with any other involuntary separation. Regulars and Reserves are treated alike except that part-time service members, that is those who engage in training duty and drills, will not be entitled to disability compensation unless the physical unfitness resulted from an injury incurred while engaging in the performance of his military duties and the cause of such injury was the performance of such duty.

Probably the most significant proviso of the new bill is the establishment of a temporary disability retired list which will make it possible for the first time to recheck a medical examiner's findings and to avoid the inequities which inevitably result from a single determination requiring a finding of permanent disability. Under this provision periodic physical examination must be given not less often than every 18 months to determine if the disability has changed. If, as a result of the examination, the disability is found to be 30 percent or more and permanent under accepted medical standards, the individual is placed on the permanent list and will receive disability retirement pay based on his condition at that time. Those who improve to the extent that their disability is less than 30 percent must be returned to duty status if found fit or else are severed with appropriate severance pay. The tax problem noted above is solved by declaring that those persons who elect disability retirement pay on the basis of degree of disability shall be entitled to the exemption which exists today but those who elect disability pay on the basis of years of service times 2½ percent of active duty pay at the time of retirement will not be entitled to such exemption.

The new bill continues the present provisions of law which prevent payment of physical disability benefits to any member whose disability resulted from misconduct or willful neglect. Such a person is separated without entitlement to any disability benefits. Similarly, existing law is retained with respect to permitting an election between disability retired pay offered by the Services and benefits provided by the Veterans' Administration, with the usual proviso that not more than one benefit may be paid for the same disability. Also, it would still be possible for a person to waive part of his disability retired pay in order to obtain veterans benefits and such other privileges as hospitalization and rehabilitation which are accorded to persons receiving payments under veterans laws. The bill provides, however, that persons who receive severance pay from the military services either because of their disability did not qualify them for a continuing benefit or because their continuing benefit was terminated on account of their improvement, will have the amount of such payment deducted from any veterans payments they may later be entitled to receive. Such deduction would not be made in the case of a survivor benefit paid to the widow or children of a veteran.

With respect to the administration of this new program the bill insures first that the determination of fitness for military duty both at the original determination and in determination to restore to duty or status after improvement shall rest with the services which are best, if not exclusively, capable of such determination.

Second, determination of degree of disability is based on civilian standards which are under regular review and improvement by the Veterans' Administration, but their application is given to the services in connection with original determinations since, as stated previously, they are in the best position to make such a determination.

Third, periodic reexaminations, hospitalization and whatever medical attention is required in connection with caring for the temporary disability class is a matter which, under presidential regulation, may be given either to the services or the Veterans' Administration.

Finally, the bill gives those members or former members of the uniformed services previously retired by reason of physical disability the right to continue to draw the pay they are now receiving or to request within the 5-year period following the effective date of the act, first, to qualify under this act and if found qualified on the basis of the physical disability upon which he had previously been retired, to receive the new pay; or, second, to receive retired pay on the basis of years of service.

Under this provision a person who seeks to qualify under the new program has the opportunity of receiving a higher benefit based on the higher pay scale if his total years of service or degree of disability under this bill would result in his receiving the higher retired pay.

In my opinion, the passage of the proposed bill will eliminate many of the inequities and abuses resulting from existing law—and will also save the Government millions of dollars in the future.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

BENEFITS FOR THE ENLISTED MAN

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, the Career Compensation Act of 1949 as reported out of the Armed Services Committee has accepted the following basic principles of the Hook Commission in considering the needs of enlisted personnel: Pay for responsibility, with adequate pay spread between each level of responsibility, to encourage personnel to seek and accept added responsibility. A pay scale that will attract and hold adequate personnel in the service with an assurance of equal opportunity with his civilian fellow citizen. The establishment of a proper balance among basic pay and allowances, the special pays and allowances, and retirement and severance pay benefits.

The basic pay for enlisted personnel proposed in this bill is comparable to pay of civilians with like trades and skills. The increased spread between grades will create an incentive to seek promotion and compensate the leaders for their added responsibility. The career servicemen, those in the top four grades, will receive an increase in basic pay from 28 percent to 38 percent. The longevity increases, now considered part of the basic pay, will start earlier and occur more frequently during the earlier years of service. Thus the increases will occur every 2 years, instead of the present 3-year interval, for the first 18 years and then on 4-year intervals. The longevity increases in the lower grades being more frequent and larger in dollars gives adequate increases to compensate for what appears to be a small increase in the lower grades. The career programs will permit the majority of enlisted personnel to reach grade 4 inside of 3 years, where increases are 28 percent. Those few remaining in lower grades longer find that longevity has in effect given them larger increases, that is, private, grade 2, with 4 years has a present pay of $84 and proposed pay of $97.50, or a 16-percent increase; private first class, grade 3, with 6 years, has a present pay of $99 and proposed pay of $120, or a 21-percent increase.

The subsistence allowance for enlisted persons authorized to ration separately will remain a flexible figure to be based on the current cost of the off-the-post maintenance. The rental allowance now authorized for first-three-grade enlisted persons when married and not furnished Government quarters had been revised to permit grade 4 enlisted personnel with 7 years' service to be included in authority for Government quarters or rental allowance in lieu thereof. This was based on the consideration that enlisted men after 7 years' service and in grade 4 or above can be considered career personnel. In addition to extending quarters allowance to another grade of enlisted men, this bill has increased the rental allowance from $37.50 to $67.50, based on the present average cost of rental, a $30-a-month increase accounting for a very large part of the cost of this bill—almost $114,000,000—even with an effective date of October 1 for fiscal year 1950. For the first-four-grade enlisted persons, the rental allowance further parallels the officer scale by having a different rate for those with and without dependents.

The hazard pay scales now in effect for enlisted personnel are not materially changed. The parachute, glider, and diving pay scales are maintained as they are today. The flying pay is changed from a percentage of the present pay to a flat figure for each grade, which is the same principle as being recommended for officers. The flying pay, therefore, runs from $30 per month to $75. This low figure for the bottom three enlisted grades is lower than present flying pay in dollars, but it must be noted that the services seldom assign personnel of these grades to flying duty, therefore the scales are not expected to be used.

The Hook Commission recommended a new reenlistment bonus program under which the amount of bonus will be determined not on the prior service but will be based on the number of years for which the individual is reenlisting. The total bonus will increase rapidly for those who enlist for longer periods of time. Thus, reenlistments for 2 years will pay a $40 bonus; 3 years will pay $90; 4 years will pay $160; 5 years will pay $250; and 6 years will pay $360. The committee accepted the Hook recommendation for the future and inserted a savings clause for those now in service to permit them to take the old bonus plan or the new one on their first reenlistment after passage of this act.

Enlisted personnel as well as officers are included in the increase in travel and transportation allowances. The mileage allowance for members of the uniformed services has been increased to 10 cents per mile while the per diem in lieu of subsistence has been increased to $9 per day.

Insofar as enlisted persons are concerned, this bill has greatly extended disability retirement provisions. It wasn't until World War II that Army enlisted personnel were eligible for disability retirement after 20 years of service, and even today there is no such thing as physical disability retirement at 75 percent of pay for Navy and Marine Corps personnel.

Now retirement benefits will be extended to all enlisted personnel on the same basis as officers. The factors for eligibility for each will be in the same section of law and should result in uniform treatment. Thus, enlisted persons will be eligible for disability retirement based on service-connected disability after 1 day active service. This same retirement plan calls for severance pay for those disabled persons with less than 30-percent disability who are separated without being retired.

In brief, the enlisted persons have lost a few special pays for badges but have been given a pay scale slightly above the civilian scale. The percent of increase for career soldiers, that is, the first four grades, is comparable to the percent of increase for officers. It is the opinion of the committee that the scale is equitable and just and that it can be administered with minimum change in present procedures.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. KEEFE and Mr. VINSON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 3, noes 86.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, as one who is frequently disturbed by our ever-increasing costs of Government, and as one who has opposed most of the programs that are responsible for such tremendous increases in Government expenditures, I rise to support this legislation.

I do so, Mr. Chairman, because I cannot concede that this so-called Armed Services Pay bill is just another problem of Federal expenditures as other Members have labeled it.

This legislation has as its primary purpose the establishment of a compensation program which will induce men and women to enter the armed services on a career basis and would remunerate them on this basis comparable to persons who seek to follow careers in industry and in professions.

To achieve this the bill has, in my opinion, corrected an inadequate and unsound structure which has been built piecemeal since 1908 without regard to principles and without over-all action. The basic work in analyzing the existing structure and in recommending revisions to conform with current conditions, was undertaken by a group of civilian advisers which included Charles R. Hook, of the Armco Steel Corp.; Father John J. Cavanaugh, president of Notre Dame University; Keith S. McHugh, vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Lawrence H. Whiting, president of the American Furniture Mart Building Co., and Whiting & Co., in response to a request by former Secretary of Defense James Forrestal.

In his letter to these men, who later became known as the Hook Commission, the former Secretary of Defense stated:

> The National Military Establishment now has before it the very critical and important problem of determining the adequacy of the compensation presently received by members of the armed services and the soundness of its general military pay structures.
> Moreover, there is a definite need to bring about a greater degree of uniformity in matters of compensation among the several services, and even within the individual services. There are disparities and inequalities in pay and other benefits which are not consistent with sound personnel policies or required by special considerations, and which not only affect morale and efficiency, but also seriously limit the effectiveness of certain activities.
> The number and caliber of men who have left the services in the past year, and the continuing number of such separations indicate the possibility that the services are not in a position to compete on an equal basis with industry and the professions because of a disparity in the income offer. If this is true, it portends the most serious long-range consequences, for it is plain, I think, that the strength and adequacy of our Military Establishment depends on the quality of men which it can attract. It requires, just as any successful business enterprise requires, men of real ability. It cannot provide the elements of military strength which are required for the security of our country if it is forced to build an organization with second- or third-rate men.

This statement by Mr. Forrestal with respect to the disparities and inequalities of pay was, if anything, quite modest. I sat through the hearings on this legislation at which the separate reports of each member of the Hook Commission were made. I have also studied the complete report of the Commission.

The Commission found that the present pay structures of our armed services provide a variety of special pays and allowances which bear no relation to the well-accepted canons of equal pay for equal work and proper pay for responsibility. The structure is encrusted with provisions which seek to insure that long service, whether or not effective, will be rewarded as well as, and sometimes better than, outstanding merit and superior responsibility.

With respect to the benefit programs a veritable hodgepodge exists when it is realized that the seven uniformed services have different promotion laws which seriously affect their retirement programs and distinctions exist between officers and enlisted men, between Regulars and non-Regulars, and between military and veterans benefits frequently intended to compensate for the same service and disability.

The reasons for this situation may be found in a great part in the changing public regard for the value and services of the military. During emergency periods and periods of economic readjustment, pay raises and special privileges have been granted. In periods of sustained peace and economic depression no improvements in the pay or structure were made and in some instances actual pay reductions were effected.

The last comprehensive revision of pay made for the six uniformed services—the Air Force was established in 1947—which have for about 50 years been grouped together for this purpose, was made in 1908. Practically since their inception the Marine Corps, Coast Guard and Public Health Service have been considered together with the Army or the Navy. The Coast Guard and Geodetic Survey remained under the independent law until 1920 when it was granted the same pay and allowances as the Navy.

The acts of 1908 were intended to compensate for changes in the cost of living to about 25 percent since 1899. Since the 1908 revision was made during a stable period, it may be presumed that the pay system then indicated represents the valuation by Congress of the worth to the Government of military personnel services, as measured both by industrial compensation and the purchasing value of the pay authorized. Before 1899 the Navy pay scale was based on grade, with in-grade increases based on service within the grade. The Army scale provided for additional pay for total service or the longevity principle. The 1908 pay structure employed basic over-all pay for responsibility by establishing a base pay for each grade which, even though increased for longevity, would not exceed the base and longevity pay of the next high grade. In 1920 war bonuses ranging from $420 to $840 a year were granted to the officer grades below brigadier general. This temporary measure, intended to expire in June 1922, was an attempt to cover widely diverse conditions affecting six military and civilian services caught in the postwar economic situation.

The Joint Service Pay Act of 1922 effected a general readjustment of pay and allowances and placed the six services together. Unlike the 1908 act, the Joint Pay Act did not strengthen the concept of pay and allowances for services rendered but weakened this principle by establishing compensation which would allow the officer to maintain himself and his family with reasonable decency under various conditions of service and at minimum cost to the Government. That law was intended, in fact, to cost less than the current schedule, since by that time the postwar recession had set in and was designed to provide attractive careers to young men of character and ability. Length of service became a controlling factor in determining rates of pay and extra compensation because of family responsibility was introduced.

The 1922 adjustment of the 1908 pattern is the basic act under which officers are paid today. Under this act generals and lieutenant generals receive the pay of a major general, plus personal cash allowances. Brigadier generals receive the same pay as is provided for colonels with 30 years service. Commissioned officers below this rank were allocated into six pay periods with an equal base pay for each period. An officer's total length of service determined the pay period to which he was allocated in such manner as to make it possible for an officer of any given grade to receive the pay usually applicable to the next higher or next lower grade if he had relatively long or short service. Pay for longevity was granted on the basis of 5 percent of base pay for each 3 years of service up to a maximum of 30. Allowances varied with the pay period and the dependents which an officer had. It should be noted that both in 1920 and 1922 benefits were applied only to officers below the rank of brigadier general.

The many anomalies in compensation thus developed caused a steady decrease in the purchasing value of military pay coupled with general increases in civilian salaries, particularly in the higher brackets, gave rise to numerous departmental and interdepartmental studies between 1928 and 1938. As a result of the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Pay Committee of 1941, the Congress passed the Pay Readjustment Act of June 16, 1942, which provided a small increase for the first pay period—second lieutenants with under 5 years service, increased the rental allowances of the first to the third pay period, increased the subsistence allowance for all officers, and removed existing legal limitations affecting total pay and allowances of general and flag officers. In 1946 Congress gave all officers in the first three pay periods an increase of 20 percent of base pay and longevity, those in the third pay period an increase of 15 percent, and those in the remaining pay periods a 10-percent increase. This was actually the first increase given officers as a group and officers of the general rank and fourth and fifth and sixth pay periods, since 1922, and for officers of the general or flag rank their first increase since 1908. Both the staff studies and the congressional studies based the increases on rises in the cost of living during this period.

During the Eightieth Congress, comparable promotion laws for the various services were enacted so that the main stumbling block to revision of the archaic pay structure has now been removed. Stagnation in rank has, to a large extent, been brought under statutory and administrative control and a career pay schedule can once again be established.

Pay schedules for enlisted men of the Army were fixed by specific acts of Congress in the early days, but until 1908 the pay of Navy enlisted personnel was fixed by the President under Executive order.

Although the pay for both services was thereafter fixed by Congress, intermingled grades and ratings were continued for the Navy until 1920 and specialist ratings in the Army and Marine Corps were not eliminated until 1942.

A common pay scale for all services was established in 1922, except that slightly higher amounts were authorized for the middle grades of the Navy and Coast Guard as compared with the Army and marines. It was considered that these differences were offset by clothing-money allowances received by the Army and Marine Corps. It was not until 1942 that an identical pay scale was established for all services.

Although the various pay boards and committees convened between 1928 and 1938 concerned themselves mainly with officer pay, several boards recommended increases for all grades, but no congressional action was taken. The first increase in pay for enlisted personnel after the act of 1922 was $10 a month for all personnel after 12 months' service, authorized by the Service Extension Act of 1941. The act of March 7, 1942, provided that the base pay of any enlisted man, warrant officer, or nurse in the military or naval services should be increased by 20 percent and the base pay of any commissioned officer by 10 percent while on sea or foreign duty. This provision was confirmed in the act of June 16, 1942, for the duration of the war, but was subsequently made permanent by the act of October 6, 1945. The Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, which was designed to provide an equitable, progressive increase throughout the enlisted grades and to eliminate disparities, achieved an increase in base pay for all grades and established longevity pay of 5 percent for each 3 years of service in lieu of the previous longevity system. The temporary increase of $10 per month, authorized by the Service Extension Act of 1941, was eliminated. Monetary allowances in lieu of quarters was retained for enlisted personnel of the top three grades, with dependents, along with certain extra pays. The last revision occurred in 1946, when all enlisted pay was raised for both those on active duty and those in retired or retainer status. Under this revision the seventh grade was advanced from a base pay of $50 to $75, the next from $54 to $80, and the next from $66 to $90. The first pay grade moved from $138 to 165—once again reflecting a lower percentage increase for grades of higher responsibility.

Warrant officers are, in general, appointed from enlisted status after considerable service upon the attainment of a certain specialty or expertness. They generally do not qualify for officer billets because of age, educational background, or lack of general experience.

Prior to 1942 these officers were paid on an individual pay scale but in that year the Pay Readjustment Act authorized the pay and allowances of the first pay period for the warrant grades. The Navy warrant officers were divided into those who were appointed and those commissioned. Chief warrant officers in the Navy and Coast Guard were provided only one base pay until 1916, when the pay and allowances of a lieutenant, junior grade, was authorized after 6 years' commissioned service, and those of a lieutenant after 12 years. Later they were authorized the pay of the first four periods, covering total service of 30 years in the warrant grades. The base pay of warrant officers was increased for commissioned warrant officers with less than 10 years service by the law of 1946 and the others were given the same increases as officers, except that a limitation of $550 was established on total pay and allowances for any warrant officer. This limitation still exists.

As the pay laws now stand, warrant officers in the Navy and Marine Corps receive the pay and allowances of the first period whereas commissioned warrant officers with less than 10 years of such service have their base pay set by law and receive the allowances of the second period. After 10 years service they receive the pay and allowances of the third period and after 20 years those of the fourth period.

In the Army the original warrant officers were in the mine planter service for which separate pay scales were established, in 1918, and continued until 1942 when their pay was tied to that of the first and second officer pay periods, with certain exceptions to receive pay of the third and fourth pay periods.

The warrant officer programs and eligibility for increases are, at present, considerably different as between the Army and the Navy, so that even though a similar pay scale exists, similar opportunity to receive such pay clearly does not.

It must be evident from these piecemeal changes and from the retention of separate groups with separate pay scales that the present pay scheme is not only obsolete but is a positive handicap to the insurance of a proper career program. In addition to the inequities and maladjustments which exist with respect to the basic pay and allowances, the retention of a variety of special pays and formulas for certain of these which permit the pyramiding of pay adds to the confusion and resultant discrimination. The net result has been, as the public and Congress so well realize, that very few people understand exactly what the pay of military personnel is. Indeed, it is not uncommon for members of the services themselves to have considerable doubt as to the pay to which they are entitled. This is particularly true today when, added to the permanent revisions which have just been outlined, temporary pays and allowances are in effect. For example, temporary law permits placement of Army warrant officers into higher pay periods. The most significant temporary provision, however, is the granting of family allowances under the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, and, as amended in 1946, under which enlisted personnel, by contributing a portion of their pay to authorized dependents, become entitled to a Government contribution which varies in accordance with the number and types of dependents. Under this program, many enlisted men receive more actual income in allowances than in base and longevity pay, which is intended to be geared to the responsibility with which they are charged. The overlaps in officer grades because of the operation of the longevity principles are nowhere near as disastrous as the dislocations which result from payment of dependents' allowances and the increases and decreases in pay which come about through the addition or loss of dependents.

Another element in the scrambled pay structure comes about because of the uneven impact of income taxes. Until the first of this year, enlisted pay was completely exempt from tax and the first $1,500 of officer pay was exempt, under temporary wartime relief provisions.

The removal of the complete and partial exemptions has clarified the situation considerably, but at present since the bulk of men in service enjoyed the exemption, the reestablishment of tax has effected a practical loss in take-home pay, once again varying with the nature of its impact.

This situation cries out for reform. It cannot be long delayed, if the effectiveness of the military organization is to be kept at the level which is required in today's troubled world. With advances and technological improvement, military science and strategy and general personnel planning, it is essential to have a career compensation plan which will be appropriate. First, it goes without saying, the scales should be uniform for the same grades of personnel, irrespective of the service and these scales should be applied as uniformly as possible. This precept requires the elimination of special and extra pays and separate pay scales and the establishment of similar personnel programs throughout the services. For example, warrant officers within the services must be placed on a comparable basis, as quickly as possible if the new scale is to have any meaning.

Second, the new scale should recognize the established fact that the military organization is in competition with the Federal civilian establishment and industry. Its rates of pay must, therefore, be comparable in order to attract qualified men and keep them in service.

Third, the scales should be designed on a career basis so that those who move onward and upward through the service, in accordance with career planning, will be justly rewarded. For this reason extraneous elements of pay and allowances and the longevity principle have to be eliminated or minimized.

H. R. 4591, in my opinion, affords a remedy for the ills of the present system and provides a positive answer. It is founded on the principles of pay for responsibility and the amounts suggested should, under ordinary circumstances, provide the inducement for capable men and the encouragement for career progress. Furthermore, it has elements within it which permit the exercise of administrative discretion and adjustment to economic trends. I believe it establishes a proper pattern for the present and the future and a basis for the strengthening of one institution which should never be allowed to fail.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am confident that there is very little that I can add that would be new and not repetitious of what already has been said in explanation of this bill. I recognize the concern that many have over its cost. That is a concern which is shared by myself as well as those of the committee who worked on the question. This problem was not considered by the subcommittee hurriedly nor sketchily, I can assure the gentleman from Wisconsin and those others who are so concerned about its cost.

Our first hearings began some time during the middle of February, and the bill was reported finally about a week ago. Approximately 3 months were consumed in the over-all consideration of the bill, and I repeat that the cost phase was one of the most important which was considered by the members of the subcommittee. Since it is pretty much repetitious to explain the bill more fully, I do want to take just a minute or two to engage in some personal reflections.

This being a rather involved, difficult, complicated, and intricate bill, it was a difficult, cumbersome, and boring assignment, but through it all it was an inspiration to me to work under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], who I dare say knows more about pay matters relating to the military than any other Member of this House. He attended all the hearings, he was always on the job, always calm, deliberate, understanding and tolerant, and he was always ready with an explanation of a point which many of us often did not understand.

In addition to the Hook Commission, to whom reference already has been made, there are some others to whom I think acknowledgment should be made for their close work and helpful cooperation in this difficult problem. Those were Maj. Gen. John E. Dahlquist, of the Army, a man whose capacity for absorbing and retaining details is a marvel and beyond my comprehension; Vice Admiral William M. Fechteler and Commander David L. Martineau of the Navy; and Maj. Gen. Richard E. Nugent, of the Air Force. There was also John L. Hoen, executive secretary of the Hook Commission, who with Mr. Irving Ladimer, assistant secretary, was in attendance with the subcommittee at all of its deliberations. All of the individuals whom I have named dealt with the question objectively, with due regard to the interests of the enlisted men as well as the interests of the taxpayer. There were many others on the staff of these people who assisted us. I shall not take the time to identify them individually, but they all were very helpful in bringing together under one bill a most difficult piece of legislation.

I think we should remember as we are about to cast our ballot on this bill that while it is true this bill costs approximately $400,000,000 a year, nearly half a billion dollars over and above the present cost, representing in itself a staggering sum of money, yet when we lay that increase alongside what the Federal expenditure for this same service, we see that it represents an increase of only 10 percent. I say "only 10 percent" only for the purpose of emphasizing the extent of the percentage of increase and not for the purpose of belittling the amount of dollars involved.

I think we should also remember, as has been stated here before this afternoon, that not since 1909 has any considerable adjustment been made in the salaries of our military people, so perhaps it would be well for us to refresh our recollection of what has happened during that 40-year period with respect to the pay scales of other types of Federal employment.

The Congress has increased the salaries of its Members 100 percent during that 40-year period. The judiciary has been increased by an average of 121 percent. Foreign Service by an average of 290 percent. Civil Service, 333 percent. Post Office inspectors, an average of 188 percent. Public schools here in the District of Columbia, 300 percent. The fire department here in the District 222 percent, the police department 187 percent. Those are the averages of increase in salaries during that 40-year period. And over that same period the average increase for officers of the Army is 30 percent. I repeat, the amount of money which is involved is substantial, but no one should argue that the military have been treated with relative fairness and equality. The benefits which the country will receive through an improved talent in its personnel make this money well spent.

There are two principal reasons why this bill should be enacted. A general raise in pay schedules in view of the increased cost of living is patently necessary. Of even greater importance, however, is a complete reform of the antiquated, patchwork collection of laws now covering pay and allowances. These two things, correction of inadequate pay and correction or abolition of unnecessary, wasteful, and duplicating allowances and special pays must go hand in hand. Reform of the pay system cannot be accomplished until new pay scales are adopted. This pay bill, based upon a year's intensive study by an independent, objective board of eminent civilians with broad experience in the fields of education, finance, industry, and public utilities does just that. It sets up a completely new scale of pay which relates the compensation of the various grades to, first, the responsibility of the job, and, secondly, to pay for similar positions in other governmental agencies and in contemporary civil life. It also does away with a whole list of other compensations in the form of special pay and allowances. The allowances which are retained are related to the needs of the services today.

The present Pay Readjustment Act, last amended in 1946, is a patched-up job, the result of many laws enacted under emergency conditions. The last comprehensive-pay study for the armed services was undertaken in 1908. Its purpose was to bring the Army and Navy pay systems into accord and to relate their pay rates to the scale of prices then existing. Since that time major changes have been made as follows:

(a) The act of May 18, 1920, granted temporary war bonuses to grant relief for the inflationary prices of World War I. These temporary increases expired on June 30, 1922.

(b) The Joint Service Pay Act of June 10, 1922. This was permanent legislation and had to be passed because the temporary act of 1920 was expiring. Although this act was an attempt at pay readjustment, certain economic considerations prevailing at that time largely prevented that accomplishment. These considerations were that the new pay schedule had to cost less than the then existing one plus the temporary increase because of the severe postwar recession then in progress and length of service had to be a controlling factor in setting scales because of the stagnation in Army promotion.

(c) Next came the pay cuts of 1933 and 1934 necessitated by the depression.

(d) The Selective Service Extension Act of 1941 which added $10 a month for all enlisted men kept in more than 12 months.

(e) The authorization of foreign-service pay of 10 percent for officers and 20 percent for enlisted men March 7, 1942.

(f) The Pay Readjustment Act of June 1942. This was restricted to those features which seemed to be absolutely necessary in view of the war. It gave a small increase to second lieutenants, increased the rental allowances of second lieutenants, first lieutenants, and captains a few dollars a month, increased the subsistence allowances 10 cents a day per ration. It materially increased the rates of pay of enlisted men.

(g) The Servicemen's Dependents Act granting family allowances enacted June 23, 1942, because enlisted-pay scales even as increased the week before were inadequate.

(h) The Pay Act of 1946. Inflation had begun. Prices were up and still going. No study of the over-all problem was made and a hasty compromise solution was reached. Congress was anxious to discontinue the draft law and this influenced the action taken. A percentage increase was adopted. This gave increases varying from 50 percent for the private to 20 percent for master sergeants, 2d lieutenants and 1st lieutenants. Captains received a 15-percent increase and all other officers a 10-percent increase. This was the first bill which gave all grades some increase in pay over the rates of 1908.

None of the pay acts passed since 1908 were based on a complete analysis of the problem. They were all the result of hurried action. In none of them was there any effort made to analyze the positions covered and the going pay in similar lines of endeavor in civilian life. Let us look at the results of this piecework legislation by comparing the present pay rates of the armed services with those of 1908, 41 years ago. Percentagewise here is the score: Major generals have had an increase of 11 percent; brigadier generals, 14 percent; colonels, 30 percent; lieutenant colonels, 29 percent; majors, 13 percent; captains, 28 percent; first lieutenants, 38 percent, second lieutenants, 57 percent; grade 1 enlisted, 116 percent; grade 2 enlisted, 159 percent; grade 3 enlisted, 154 percent; grade 4 enlisted, 218 percent; grade 5 enlisted, 328 percent; grade 6 enlisted, 344 percent; grade 7 enlisted, 400 percent.

The enlisted men have had a very sizable increase in the last 40 years, but two factors must be remembered in this connection. First, the pay scale of 40 years ago for enlisted men was miserably small, and second, the nature of enlisted men's services has materially changed because of the great technological advances in the military services.

When one compares the increase in officers' scales for the last 40 years with increases in other governmental positions, one is impressed with the great difference. Let me read some of them to you: Congress has had an increase of 100 percent; the judiciary an average of 121 percent; Foreign Service an average of 290 percent; civil service, professional, an average of 333 percent; post office inspectors an average of 188 percent; public schools, District of Columbia, an average of 300 percent; fire department, District of Columbia, an average of 222 percent; police department, District of Columbia, an average of 187 percent.

The average increase for Army officers for that period is 30 percent. I do not believe there is another occupation in this country where an individual receives less take-home pay in equivalent purchasing-power dollars than he received in 1903. That is the situation in which our senior officers, rear admirals, and major generals find themselves today. The increases which this pay bill give expressed in percentages over the scale of 1908 are as follows: Major general, 48 percent; brigadier general, 70 percent; colonel, 64 percent; lieutenant colonel, 58 percent; major, 40 percent; captain, 69 percent; first lieutenant, 77 percent; second lieutenant, 92 percent, grade 1 enlisted, 172 percent; grade 2 enlisted, 234 percent, grade 3 enlisted, 246 percent; Grade 4 enlisted, 309 percent; grade 5 enlisted, 364 percent; grade 6 enlisted, 358 percent and grade 7 enlisted, 400 percent.

It seems to me that in view of these statistics the case for an over-all increase is clear and justified. The Hook Commission, however, did not base their recommendations only on a comparison with 1908. They based their recommendations on comparisons made between service pay and pay for like positions in industry now. They made an exhaustive and comprehensive study of salaries and wages paid in industry. They compared jobs of the services with like positions in the fields of armament and mechanical-equipment production and maintenance, transportation, communications, shipbuilding and ship repair, construction and maintenance, finance, manufacturing, physicians and dentists, and earnings of college graduates. These studies brought out in startling fashion that the pay of the services when all factors, including retirement, medical care, the advantages of buying at cooperative exchanges and commissaries, were considered had fallen far below that of enlightened industry.

They also took cognizance of the effect, particularly on the quality of the officer corps of the depressed scale of pay. The problem the Nation faces is not procurement of numbers. There are plenty of men who want those positions even at depressed rates of pay. It is quality that is affected. Let me show you what is happening. During the period from January 1946 to January 1949, a 3-year period, 4,256 Regular officers resigned, an annual average of nearly 1,500 resignations. Prior to the war the percentage of college trained men in the officer corps of the Army and Air Force was 87 percent; today it is 56 percent. In flying cadets this is the story. In the latter part of 1940 the 5,214 aviation cadets entering training included 36 percent college graduates and but 7 percent with less than 2 years' college, while in 1948 of the 2,629 aviation cadets entering training only 1.5 percent were college graduates and 71 percent had less than 2 years' college. The Army is trying to interest distinguished college graduates in Regular commissions. In 6 southern colleges a recent report shows that out of 54 proffered appointments, 34 were declined. The ultimate cost to the Nation if remedial action is not taken will be totally inadequate management of the multibillion dollar investment represented in the military services and what is far more important, inadequate leadership when another emergency confronts us.

The Commission also found terrific inequities and absurb relationships between pay and responsibility. The most glaring one, of course, is in the case of the brigadier general of the Army or Air Force or the rear admiral, lower half of the Navy. This grade, the most important in an officer's career, the one which only thirty-seven one-hundredths percent can reach, has the same pay scale as a colonel or a lieutenant colonel with 30 years' service. The lieutenant colonel commands a battalion; the brigadier general a task force of 4,000 to 5,000 men of all arms—yet both get the same pay. That explains the apparently unusual large increase for brigadier generals. It is well justified but far too long delayed.

The disparity between pay and responsibility is not only in that grade, however, but in all grades due to the longevity system presently in effect. Under the present pay system every 3 years there is an increase of 5 percent of base pay up to 30 years' service. When Frederick the Great was asked one day why he did not promote a certain officer who had long, honorable, and faithful service, he pointed to an old mule and replied, "He also has had long, honorable, and faithful years of service, exactly the same number as the officer. I am not promoting either and for the same reasons." We may not promote them but we add to their pay. Look at some of the results:

A second lieutenant of long service but unable to get promotion can get more pay than a first lieutenant, a captain, or a major.

A first lieutenant can get more pay than a captain, a major, or even a lieutenant colonel.

A captain can get more pay than a major, a lieutenant colonel, or a colonel.

An outstanding surgeon, for example, appointed a colonel in time of war and put at the head of a hospital receives $366 a month. His adjutant, who may be a soldier of long service and recently appointed a captain, will draw $371 a month.

A colonel with 30 years' service as an officer draws $366 for his grade and $184 because of longevity.

When we consider the enlisted grades the situation is worse, due principally to the operation of the Family Allowance Act of 1942. It was absolutely vital then because we were inducting men with dependents and the soldiers' pay scale was far too low to permit proper care of dependents. It was a war measure and still is. We cannot abolish it until we pass an adequate pay system, because if we did abolish it, several hundred thousand of our career soldiers would have to leave the service. Under that Family Allowance Act, the Government pays $28 a month extra for a wife, $30 a month extra for the first child, and $20 a month extra for each additional child regardless of numbers. In addition, if the soldier claims his parents or his brother or sisters as dependents, the Government pays extra for them. This family allowance system, which grants pay on the size of families instead of on job responsibility, costs the Government $314,000,000 a year for that item alone. Here are a few examples of the total compensation received because of that system:

A recruit now drawing family allowance for a wife, four children, one parent, and eight brothers and sisters has monthly pay for military service performed of $75 and monthly allowance for dependents of $258, or total monthly pay of $333, which is more than any enlisted grade, a second lieutenant, a first lieutenant, or a captain.

A corporal now having a family allowance for a wife and 11 children has monthly pay for military service performed of $110 and monthly allowance for dependents of $258, or a total monthly pay of $368, which is more than any enlisted grade, a second lieutenant, a first lieutenant, a captain, or a major.

Besides pay, the principal part of an officer's or noncommissioned officer's compensation are the allowances for quarters and rations, either in kind or their commutation in money. Here we also found anomalies. In 1922, because it was impossible to do what we have done now, that is, examine the whole pay structure, a curious philosophy was adopted with reference to the ration allowance for officers. It was decided that an officer in the fourth and fifth pay periods, that is a captain with over 17 years' service, a major, or lieutenant colonel would have the largest families and therefore needed the most money. That officer, if he had dependents, was to receive three allowances. Other officers with dependents were to receive two allowances, and bachelors one allowance. Thus, a captain with 17 years' service, a major or lieutenant colonel with one dependent received $63 a month extra, although a colonel with six dependents received $42 a month. It seems clear that if we had a decent pay system geared to the responsibility of the position and adequate, there would be no necessity for such a weird philosophy. The commutations for rations pertain to the individual and not to anyone else. This pay bill establishes that—one ration per officer.

With quarters allowances there had also crept in the idea that dependents no matter how far removed should be considered and if a single man contributed to a parent's support he received larger allowances. The Government's obligation with regard to quarters should be to furnish the officer adequate quarters for himself and his immediate family or a commutation in lieu thereof. That also has been taken care of by carefully defining who is entitled to be considered as dependents and limiting this to wife, children, and dependent parents, if actually a member of an officer's or soldier's household.

Soldiers of the top four grades, the career noncommissioned officers are put on the same basis as officers with regard to quarters and their allowances are almost doubled. With respect to rations these are furnished in kind to enlisted men. If they are not furnished in kind, enlisted men are paid $2.25 a day for rations.

Quarters and rations are basic allowances. These were retained but put on a business-like basis. It was in other special pays that this bill really made a reform. Special pays had grown like Topsy in an effort to compensate for inadequate pay and as special inducements. Together they cost a lot of money. First, there was hazard pay adopted when all aviators were second lieutenants and established at 50 percent of base and longevity pay. For a second lieutenant, 40 years ago, this was only $70 a month. But as our air forces and submarine service grew and officers of all ranks were involved, the extra pay went up until it reached $400 a month for a major general overseas. Hazard pay could not be abolished but it could be changed. This is a subject which has bothered Congress for many years. The Hook Commission after looking into all aspects decided that hazard pay could not be related exactly to hazard. They did find it was necessary to pay extra pay as an inducement for men to take up hazardous and specially uncomfortable duties. They also found that a percentage basis was wrong because it pyramided. Thus an officer on foreign service or sea duty and on hazardous duty received 165 percent pay; an enlisted man 180 percent pay. They, therefore, set a flat scale for each rank sufficiently related to the pay of the rank to serve as an adequate inducement. For senior officers they reduced the amount to $100 per month.

Next there was foreign service and sea pay. Adopted during the war because of the extra expense involved by separation of families, it had become a part of permanent pay. Unnecessary in peacetime, we recommend its abolition except for enlisted men for whom such service is specially burdensome, and we recommend a flat rate instead of a percentage.

The present temporary law giving $100 extra per month for doctors and dentists has been retained because of the dire shortage of such personnel. But all other special pays are abolished. These include furlough travel pay, messmen's pay, stenographers' pay, mailmen's pay, aides' pay, marksmanship and gunnery pays, special pay for mounts, special pays for awards, and the wartime combat pays. Each of these were small in themselves. They add practically nothing as an incentive. They throw the pay system out of balance and they cost a terrific amount of money. One hundred and eleven million dollars annually is the total cost of the special pays deducted or abolished in this pay bill. In addition, there is the three hundred and fourteen millions ultimately to be saved on family allowances or total of $415,000,000.

The savings made by the reduction or abolition of special allowances and pays must be considered in connection with the pay increase. When these are taken into account, we find that the net increase in total pay costs for the first fiscal year is not 20 percent but only 12 percent. When all the savings are eventually accounted for the increase will be 10 percent annually. It is a complete pay readjustment act. It is truly a Career Compensation Act. It is a reform long needed. It would have been a simple thing to have dismissed the problem of pay for the armed services with either a flat increase or with a percentage increase as was done in 1946. That would have been no solution, however. It would only have perpetrated the abnormalities and inequities of the present crazy-quilt system of pays and allowances. A complete readjustment of the pay scales is necessary.

The personnel problem facing all services today is the procurement of enlisted men with intelligence, fortitude, and ambition who can properly man the intricate and expensive tools and weapons of modern military services and of officers properly educated and with the requisite abilities to manage the Nation's costliest asset, both in material and in men. Unless such individuals are attracted to the military service and make it a career, the billions we appropriate for defense will be wasted. Such men are not attracted by the starting pay alone. Such men make their decision to stay on because of the ultimate rewards if they succeed.

This Career Compensation Act furnishes that incentive. It offers enlisted men who have the ability and the will to become noncommissioned officers as fine a career as they can find. It will induce them to reenlist. It holds out to the officer who wants to advance the same opportunity. Success means a pay scale adequate to provide themselves and families a decent American scale of living. Certainly this Nation can offer its military servants no less.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this opportunity to address the Committee on the one matter which I believe beyond all question is the most serious threat to the internal economy of this Nation.

Every Member of this Committee by now must realize that, if a halt is not called to the spending trend, we face a real danger that the Federal budget may get completely out of control.

At the rate at which this House has approved appropriations we all know by now that this Government is facing a deficit by 1950. We know too that our economy is experiencing a recession. You may call it disinflation, a leveling off, or what you will. The fact is that prices are declining, employment is declining, and unemployment is on the increase.

In what appears to be a frantic search for the easy way out of this mess it has now been proposed that we resort to financial finagling to avoid the appearance of a Federal deficit.

The gentleman from Arkansas, my good friend Mr. MILLS, has proposed that corporations be required to pay all of their taxes in the first half of the year instead of four quarterly installments. I know there are some who will welcome with open arms any proposal which will keep the Treasury in the black a little while longer and stave off the evil day when some positive action must be taken to avoid a deficit. Let us analyze this proposal very briefly and see what it really means.

The Federal Treasury, like many businesses, operates on a fiscal year ending June 30. But the Federal Government, unlike most business organizations, carries its account strictly on a cash basis. Because of these two facts alone corporate taxpayers in 1950 are required to advance all of their payments to a date before June 30. These payments will all be cash receipts of the fiscal year 1950. On an accrual accounting basis the transaction would merely mean substituting cash for accounts receivable.

After making this change the Federal Government will be in no better financial condition than without the change.

There is one primary reason why in times like these we must avoid a deficit if possible: we must maintain the credit of the Federal Government.

In 1933 the customers of the banks demanded cash for their demand deposits; the banks closed. Today the United States Treasury has outstanding billions of dollars of bonds that are in effect demand deposits. We are still selling these bonds and telling the buyers "you can have your cash on demand."

If the faith in the Federal credit collapses, you and I know what will happen. Now, turning to the current proposal to advance the due date of Federal taxes, can anyone honestly believe that this type of bookkeeping transaction will bring about confidence in the United States Government?

If your family should go on a spending spree this month, your bank account were overdrawn, and you should borrow money against the salary due you the first of next month, would you feel that you were in a sounder or weaker financial position than if you postponed these expenses until you could pay for them?

I submit that there is no difference whatever between the Federal Treasury demanding earlier payment of tax obligations in order to meet its bills than the family borrowing against wages in advance of pay day in order to meet its bills.

Many specific objections can be raised to this proposal. I believe the primary objection, however, is the simple proposition that it has no merit.

But here are some specific objections:

This plan would seriously affect the cash and inventory position of small and medium-sized corporations.

Some large corporations likewise would be affected. Many of these large corporations are using every resource they can lay their hands on to get additional capital for expansion and maintenance of employment. However, many of them do buy Federal tax notes or in other ways set up reserves to meet their tax obligations. Where this practice is followed the corporation's financial position would not be impaired but on the other hand in most of these cases there would be no additional revenue, as the Treasury already has the money anyway. As I said before, it is the small- and medium-sized business that would feel the primary pinch of this proposal. Many of these would not have the cash to pay their taxes in June without reducing their inventory, borrowing, or using the cash that they need for the operation of their business. The results could be so drastic as to change the current recession into a depression.

These effects would be immediate but there is an additional long-range, permanent result that would follow adoption of this plan. This would be the accentuation of seasonal swings in business.

Throughout the business world today there is an acute consciousness of the necessity of stabilizing industry and employment.

Business corporations in every State and every community have made many changes in their methods of operation in order to maintain a smooth flow of sales and employment throughout the year.

Government should do everything to cooperate in this direction. The current tax proposal is a long step in quite the contrary direction. Under this proposal every year from now on Federal corporation taxes would be collected in half the year and no taxes would be paid in the other half. Can anyone believe that this change would not be reflected in wider seasonal swings in business and employment?

It is my opinion that the consequences of such a proposal would in time become so serious that we would have to reverse ourselves and make it possible again for corporations to spread their tax payments throughout the year. But how could we do it? Consider for a moment the situation we would face in making such a reversal. There would be only one way then to make the shift and that would be to require all of these corporations to pay an extra half year's tax in order that we might go on spending and spending and keep the Treasury in the black.

Gentlemen, there can be only one solution to this problem. That solution is economy and ultimately we are going to be forced to face it in one way or another.

We cannot substitute book juggling for economy.

We cannot levy enough taxes to meet a constantly expanding budget. We can raise the tax rates but by imposing new taxes now on a shrinking economy we know we face a real danger of plunging the country into a deep depression. We can start a new era of deficit financing, but to do this at the present level of national income would mean in effect telling the American people and the world that this Congress is not strong enough to keep the budget under control. A new era of deficit financing now could destroy confidence in the Federal credit and could precipitate a run on the Treasury.

If we tax ourselves into a depression we will have to economize. If we destroy public faith in the Treasury, we will have to economize. The economies we will have to come to in either of these events will be the kind that will hurt. They will be the kind that may destroy the economy we have known.

When you get down to it there is only one easy way to balance the budget, and that is to spend less. There is nothing in the record of the Eighty-first Congress to indicate that this solution is easy, but I still maintain it is far more palatable than the alternatives. The record in the Eighty-first Congress is not one of which the American people can be proud. Talk of economy is now resounding through the halls of Congress, but it has in the meantime been spending and spending and spending. The deficit is here in consequence of the spending.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I would be presumptuous, indeed, if I thought that in the 5 minutes remaining to me in the closing hours of the debate on this important issue I could influence you one bit. There are one or two things I want to call to your attention. The Committee on Armed Services, of which I have had the honor of being a member for about 10 years, languished 40 days—40 days—with this problem. We have brought something to you, thanks to the untiring efforts of our distinguished chairman, Hon. CARL VINSON, and the chairman of the subcommittee, Hon. PAUL KILDAY, and our respective colleagues. We have brought something to you which we think is a great piece of work. Why do I say this? We are your Committee on Armed Services. The armed services is your organization. I say your organization, because it is a unified organization. For 40 years—remember that—for 40 years no committee has ever come to you with a problem solved better than this one. For 40 years committees of Congress have failed to bring a comprehensive program to the Congress wherein these matters of pay, subsistence, and retirement have been more intelligently handled than in this bill. Now comes today. We bring this to you. We think it is a good job for this reason: No longer can we have the terrible condition existing as one gentleman has said, as in the case of Benny Meyers. In the future retirements will be subject to periodic examinations, the same as the Veterans' Administration requires for the GI's under their administration.

In the future, every GI will know what he is going to get in the future, as he cannot say now. In the future, all officers know what their pay is going to be, and what future officers there will be.

Now whose problem is this? Let me say this to you: In the event of another war we may not have the good fortune of having a Patton dashing across the landscape of France with the speed of a meteor. We may not have that man. If you want that man in the future, you had better prepare for him today. How should you prepare for that? You tell the young officer what he can hope for when he raises his hand and takes an oath to forever serve in the armed forces, for the tenure of office prescribed by the armed forces. When you tell him to make a career of the armed services and forego all opportunity of making a great deal of money in life, prepare now, when he leads your children and your children's children in the great armadas of the future, the great armies and the great navies of the future, prepare him now for the best leadership. You had better do it, because in the future, when the strategy of the future is unrolled before you, it is going to be the Regular Army officer and the Regular Navy officer and the Regular Air Force officer who is going to plan that strategy. You had better get the best that money can buy. He is going to lead your children, whether they are Reserves, whether they are draftees, or whether they are National Guard men. You have got a chance today to make that appointment with destiny.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I am happy that the able gentleman from South Carolina has issued this solemn warning, because if we do not get these young officers today we will not have the admirals and generals in another emergency.

Mr. RIVERS. If we do not pass this legislation today, in the very near future we are going to have an exodus from the armed services that will astound your imagination. We are laying this before you today with the greatest sincerity we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time, 9 minutes, to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I thank my chairman very much for this time. It will be almost impossible for me to add very much this afternoon to this debate.

I have served on this committee for the past 10 years. I did not serve on this subcommittee and am not in a position to speak with authority on all the points involved. However, there are a few things we should think about this afternoon beyond the mere dollar.

We are all concerned at the present time with the cost of operation of our armed services. And it looks like it will continue to grow.

We have been operating in this atmosphere of planes of subsonic speeds. We have reached the point where we have got to go to the supersonic speed. You will have to bear the expense of the equipment, the wind tunnels, and the other devices to carry out and make it possible to go to the supersonic speed planes, or you will stop dead in your tracks.

Along with that, in this bill you are considering today is the problem of morale, as well as the dollar. You know and I know that it is impossible to conduct any kind of business without at least normally good morale. At the present time a captain who would be operating a B–29 or a B–36, draws $6,138, with all of his flight pay and everything else included. Under this new bill he will draw $7,380. He can walk out of that ship any hour he wants to and draw either ten or twelve thousand dollars with any commercial air line in this country. If he has a family, you and I could not blame him for walking out and taking a position with that company. It is a matter of economics. We must face it. We will face it in the future. These boys who are trained in radar are trained in all phases of its development. It is something that grows in size and increases like a snowball. We are going to have to train personnel in all branches, and they are going to have to be paid. I do not, therefore, put this matter simply on a dollars-and-cents basis; it is necessary, in my opinion, if you expect to have a small striking force, I say it is small compared with the one today that we know is probably the threat of the world, and we might just as well take cognizance today of the fact that they have an army of 4,500,000 men while we are trying to get along with a small force in this country. I believe the American people are willing to pay for it; that is the reason I am supporting this measure.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time. All time has expired. I ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Career Compensation Act of 1949."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that it be open to amendment at any part.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think that would be a practical request after we have proceeded a little further with the bill. There are some Members who have not had an opportunity to participate in general debate. If a few of us could have 5 minutes on the first few sections I think the gentleman's request would be practical.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of this important piece of legislation I have asked for a number of quorum calls with just one idea in mind, not to be destructive by that action, but in order that the Members of this Congress might be here to listen to the arguments in relation to this most important bill.

To me it is an astounding thing to hear repeatedly in the well of this House the pleas for economy, yet when a bill as monumental as this comes here, a bill involving an annual expenditure after the fiscal year 1950 of $406,000,000 a year to see such a lack of interest outside of the membership of the committee that has presented the bill to the Congress. There are a lot of questions that ought to be asked about this bill, and there is a lot of information that ought to be given clearly and succinctly that has not been given; it is rather muddled up in the record as it appears at the present time.

It is said that the net cost of this bill will be $406,000,000 a year. How was this figure arrived at? I assume that the items in the figure must have been one thing, at least: Provision relating to allowances, subsection 301, found on page 31 of the report, that certain allowances were computed to arrive at the figure of $406,000,000 annually as the cost of this bill. Then you read the bill and find in subsection 301 (b) the President authorized to prescribe semiannually the amounts of the basic allowance for officers and enlisted personnel.

Section 301 (e) authorizes the President to prescribe regulations to administer the section.

Subsection 302 (b) provides that the President may annually prescribe the amounts which shall constitute quarters allowance.

Mr. Chairman, when you pass this bill, therefore, can you anticipate what the President is going to prescribe for quarters and for allowances under this bill? If you cannot, how can you then come in with any degree of certainty and say what this bill is going to cost? You are abrogating so far as the Congress is concerned, you are saying, "We are turning this over to you, Mr. President, and semiannually or annually, as you prescribe in your regulations, you determine what the allowances shall be under this law."

Mr. Chairman, the Members ought to think about that just a little. There ought to be some explanation as to how you arrive at $406,000,000. It may be a half billion dollars, it may be more than that, for all you and I know. I think the Members of the Congress ought to know.

I want to support this legislation if I can. There are many parts of it I would like to vote for. There is a lot in this bill I want to vote for. But I have reluctantly come to the conclusion the more I read it that the main parts of this bill are sort of sugar-coated over with a few other provisions to put the whole thing across.

I would like to have some answers from the Members who are in charge of the bill to this simple question: When you figured the net cost of this and said it was to be $406,000,000, what figures did you use?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, what figures did you use for allowances in order to arrive at the figure of $406,000,000? Did you use the figures that are tentatively set up in this bill until the President decrees otherwise under the provisions of the bill?

May I ask the gentleman from Texas to answer that question?

Mr. KILDAY. I did not get the last question.

Mr. KEEFE. The question is: Did you use the figures which are provided in subsection 301 (f) of the above in arriving at the cost of allowances making up one item of this $406,000,000 net annual cost?

Mr. KILDAY. That is the basis of that figure.

Mr. KEEFE. That figure can be changed by the President at any time he sees fit to do it, up or down.

Mr. KILDAY. On the basis of fixing quarters and subsistence allowances.

Mr. KEEFE. How much is involved in the total cost for the armed services for subsistence allowances and for quarters allowance? How much in total money?

Mr. KILDAY. $182,000,000 for subsistence.

Mr. KEEFE. How much for quarters?

Mr. KILDAY. The total increase in cost of the two items is $145,601,320.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman misunderstood my question. I would like to know how much you are totally spending for quarters and for subsistence allowances in the present budget for the armed services?

Mr. KILDAY. The 1950 budget contains a total of $182,232,239 for quarters.

Mr. KEEFE. How much for subsistence?

Mr. KILDAY. $182,606,757.

Mr. KEEFE. Regardless of what those figures might total—and I have not the time to total them right now—under this bill the President could up those figures, could he not?

Mr. KILDAY. He could.

Mr. KEEFE. In any amount which he, in his discretion, might deem to be necessary to provide what he considered under his regulations suitable allowances for subsistence and quarters.

Mr. KILDAY. And he could likewise reduce them.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; he could go either way. He could raise them or reduce them. So, when we vote for this bill we are in reality placing in the hands of the President the power, by his own regulations and orders, to increase both the quarters and subsistence allowances.

Mr. KILDAY. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not true that we are placing in the hands of himself and the other members of the Committee on Appropriations the power to control that, because he could not do it if we did not give him the money.

Mr. KEEFE. Of course, that is true in a sense. But, may I say to the gentleman that when the President himself comes up with his request, that that is a rather hollow argument. It has been my observation it is a rather hollow argument and really does not touch the situation. What we are in effect saying to the President is this: We give him the power to fix semiannually in this bill the amount of subsistence allowances, and if he does so fix them, they are going to pay them under this regulation, and then be in here for a deficiency.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman's committee controls that, does it not?

Mr. KEEFE. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The obligation is created.

Mr. KEEFE. The obligation is created by this bill, and all they have got to do is to implement it.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, let me ask him this question: In the last bill we had there was an obligation for transportation, and you very materially reduced that item, and by that manner you controlled the amount of money that would be paid in fiscal 1950 for transportation, notwithstanding the fact that the table set out in existing law and in the proposal showed that the allowance was to be for transportation. But, you controlled it by the amount of money you give them.

Mr. KEEFE. If the Committee on Appropriations has such vast power, and I doubt it, I will yield to the gentleman who was chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] to answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes in order to get the answer to this question, if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The question in my mind is whether or not this provision places in the hands of the President the right to fix the amount—and I think it does—of subsistence and quarters under the law, and which takes away, in my judgment, from the Committee on Appropriations, the power to change that figure. In my judgment, it becomes an obligation on the Government, and I think we are liable to pay for it. We cannot change that any more than we could change a per diem figure, if they have incorporated it in there.

Mr. KEEFE. It is a specific provision in the legislation that the President may annually or semiannually fix these amounts. Assume that the President does so, then it has got to be paid, has it not? Are we not then saying to the Committee on Appropriations, "You will have to appropriate the amount that the Congress, by the passage of this legislation, has made mandatory?" Otherwise we would have an awful situation confronting us.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, there could be a difference between transportation and pay for subsistence and quarters. If the President is given the authority to fix an amount which a member of the armed services is entitled to receive individually in quarters or in pay, then an obligation would be created, and under this opinion which the Comptroller General gave the other day in the Straus-Boke case, clearly there would rest an obligation under the terms of the old Watson decision.

Mr. KEEFE. Under the old Watson, Dodd, and Lovett case they would have to pay, and that is all there would be to it.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. The theory upon which the subsistence and quarters allowance was based was that it would be far preferable to have discretion vested in the President than to fix it positively, because the cost of living, fluctuating over the years, might justify its sometimes going up and sometimes going down. We should certainly have the latitude to make that change, instead of being positive as to what it should be. That is the reason the flexibility is in there.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The law takes from the congressional Appropriations Committee the right to fix that amount as they see it and places it in the hands of the Executive.

Mr. VINSON. Of course it does not, because the gentleman's committee ultimately has to make the money available. Suppose the President put it at a certain figure and the Committee on Appropriations concluded the facts did not justify it. You would appropriate only what money you thought the facts justified. It would result in your having authority to fix the amount.

Mr. KEEFE. I should like to raise one other question before my time expires. This situation exists: There is $400,000,000 set up in the President's budget this year in anticipation of the possible enactment of this legislation. It is included in the President's budget, but of course no appropriation has been made for it and the appropriation will have to come up before the Congress to implement it through a deficiency item sooner or later, which will give us a chance again to reappraise part of this. But if we pass this bill right as it is now, my opinion, and the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, is that we have bound the Committee on Appropriations to supply whatever funds are necessary as prescribed by the President for subsistence and other allowances.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. This provision permits the President to change the amount of the subsistence allowance as provided for in an appropriation bill which the Congress has already passed, and upon which my committee has already acted.

Mr. KEEFE. There is one other phase of this which I think we should bear in mind. I do not think the committee has been able to demonstrate clearly the gains which will accrue financially to the country as a result of the passage of this bill. That is rather in a conglomerate mass, as you will see in this record as you get to read it.

I think there is one phase of this thing we ought to think about. I remember when the draft legislation was before this Congress, and I voted against it. I was one of those who contended that it was unnecessary, that we would raise an Army if we paid them sufficient. Do you remember that? Man after man stood in the well of this House and said, "You provide suitable emoluments for the services and you will get all the men you want." We did raise the emoluments and we got a flood of enlistments. This selective service thing is as dead as a dodo, and we no longer hear anything about compulsory military training. That has gone out the window. When you measure up the cost of those two organizations and figure the cost of selective service, we have to balance that and measure it against the cost that may be involved in this bill, which will enable us to continue to maintain an efficient and a proper military organization.

I confess that this bill has given me a lot of concern. I voted against the pension bill. I am now asked to vote for $406,000,000 of pay increase here. You will have to make some pretty decisive answers to your constituents when this thing gets out, and you cannot be guided alone by the exigencies of the situation as they may be presented by the armed services.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had not anticipated consuming any of the valuable time of the committee on this measure; but in view of the remarks made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] a few moments ago, I thought possibly I might enlighten him to a degree. I must admit I may be in error a little, myself, because it has been some time since I reviewed the facts. But if my memory serves me correctly, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and a former Member from my own State of South Carolina, and a former Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes, in the year 1922, were instrumental in enacting into law or seeing that appropriate provision was made that the Secretaries of the particular branch of the armed forces, that is, the Secretary of the Navy and of the Army, should designate the actual amount of subsistence and quarters allowance, which was to be provided for the enlisted personnel of our armed forces. I think under the present act that still remains the fact. I believe the gentleman is correct insofar as officer personnel are concerned, that the President still has the right to establish the amount an officer shall be permitted to draw for his subsistence and for his quarters allowance. Heretofore I believe that the amount that has been permitted to be drawn has been the maximum as established under the original law in 1922. Be he who he may, Democrat, Republican or otherwise, I feel quite certain that any President of the United States will not act unwisely in the matter and will not act without the advice and consent of the various Secretaries who appreciate the fact that the armed services, regardless of the branch, must obtain their money from our Committee on Appropriations.

I certainly hope this measure will meet with the approval of this branch of the Congress. I have heard a number of Members express some doubt or consternation as to whether or not they should support it, but in each instance their uncertainty was occasioned by the fact that it seems the general is getting a little more than the private. I can appreciate that. I served both as an enlisted man and as an officer. I served before the war started and served under the old pay scale. Thanks to our colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] who was instrumental in getting us a little pay raise, we got such a raise in June of 1942. We appreciated it.

We notice under the present pay scale where an enlisted man, I believe they call them recruits in the Army, or an apprentice seaman, starts off at $75 a month. He continues to serve for that amount for 90 days. Then, he is automatically raised to the next higher grade and receives thereby an increase in the amount of $7.50 per month which makes a total of $82.50 per month.

I am under the impression that the salary scale for the recruit or apprentice seaman was not raised from the existing $75 a month because of the fact that a majority of those men are only 17, 18, or 19 years of age and also are unmarried. I might interpose that that amount is quite insufficient for those who have dependent parents but if my interpretation of the existing draft law is correct, those with dependents are not subject to the draft. Consequently, I think that we might well assume that a majority of the recruits and apprentice seamen have no one to look after, other than themselves. If our assumption is correct, then I think $75 a month in addition to his board, housing, and clothing is entirely sufficient. Of course, if such an individual in the category of the lowest enlisted ranks has someone who is dependent upon him, then I certainly agree that such an amount is entirely insufficient.

This measure does not meet with my entire approval in each sentence and paragraph and I am sure that is true of the majority of the Members of this body. However, the same can be said of most every measure that is brought before us.

A great deal has been said today about the private and about the brass, but so far as I am concerned most of it has been nothing more than cheap demagoguery by those who have not taken the time to actually analyze the provisions of this measure. At this point I want to pay my respects and compliments to the chairman and members of the Armed Services Committee for their untiring efforts in endeavoring to prepare and report an honest and fair bill.

Something has been said about the injustices in pay insofar as extra-hazardous duty is concerned. The argument has been used that a private is entitled to as much remuneration as the captain of a ship or plane. I agree that the life of one is as valuable as the life of the other and that both should receive some extra compensation for their hazardous duties. However, I do not think that the individual who sits in the rear of the plane and places his life in the hands of the one who is at the control of the plane and upon whom the responsibility for all lives is placed should receive quite as much. Those who argue contrariwise lose sight of the fact that those other than pilots fly because of their own volition and desire; whereas, the pilots fly because of their requirement under law.

It is my impression from my study, and I submit if my impression is incorrect I stand to be corrected, that the present measure will afford the enlisted personnel of our armed services more pay than they now receive. Further, I wish to state that I am one of the greatest exponents of increasing the salary of both the officers and the enlisted personnel of our armed services because I know that that is the only method by which we can obtain capable personnel and the only method by which we can induce them to make the service a career.

Some say that we cannot afford the $500,000-a-year increase. If we can afford to spend $5,000,000,000 in Europe to combat communism in a program which we have no assurance will succeed, then we can afford to spend $500,000 in the United States in order to develop an efficient armed service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this debate should close without having placed into the RECORD the total figures for pay and allowances and a break-down of those figures for the fiscal year 1950.

I have the figures for the Army and the Army Air Force. I do not have them here for the Navy.

The justifications of the estimates for the fiscal year 1950, as submitted to Congress, are contained in nine volumes, as far as the Army is concerned. Tabulation 5 of volume 1 gives the pay of the Army, and that record shows that for the Army alone, not including the Navy or the Air Force, the total pay and allowances for the fiscal year 1950, as requested by the Budget, was $336,836,000. Of that total, $194,621,600 was base pay and $142,215,000 were other allowances.

That breaks down as follows:

Longevity, $38,629,480.

Rental allowance, $50,083,805.

Subsistence allowance, $35,646,309.

Flying pay, rated officers, $1,639,340.

Flying pay, nonrated officers, $108,000.

Additional pay for airborne troops, $2,040,000.

Overseas and sea-duty pay, $6,928,404.

Gratuity, $775,625.

Uniform allowance, $2,000,000.

Additional pay for medical and dental officers, $3,000,000.

Lump-sum terminal-leave payments, $2,121,600.

Miscellaneous, $81,250.

Adjustments, $734,204.

Making up this amount of $336,836,000.

Again, the break-down shows that the base pay was $194,000,000 and other allowances $142,000,000. So when you are discussing base pay you are discussing just a little more than 50 percent of what is paid to the Army officers.

Now let us take the Air Force. The figures I am going to give you include the flying pay.

The total pay for the Army Air Force was $296,440,000. Of this amount, only $151,000,000 was base pay and $145,000,000 allowances. So the allowances that were granted are almost as much as the base pay upon which we are basing our percentage rate increase.

That breaks itself down as follows:

Base pay, $151,393,860.

Longevity, $21,569,539.

Rental, $39,898,630.

Subsistence, $27,722,590.

Flying pay, rated officers, $51,417,376.

Flying pay, nonrated officers, $945,360.

Overseas and sea-duty pay, $3,821,829.

Gratuity upon death, $1,210,125.

Uniform allowance, $846,250.

Lump-sum settlement to Air Force Reserve officers, $1,750,000; additional pay for medical and dental officers, $595,000; miscellaneous, $55,800; station allowances, $750,750.

Deduct lapse, $5,746,791; base pay, $143,000,000, and allowances in addition to base pay, $145,000,000. And this does not include the benefits received in the way of hospitalization. They go into the hospital on a per diem and subsistence pay basis; and it does not include retirement and many other benefits which they have.

In view of the financial condition of the Nation I cannot support a bill which adds $407,000,000 in pay and allowances to the above amounts.

Just a word more before closing. I cannot support a bill which takes family allowances away from enlisted men and gives such money to officers. The moral welfare of the enlisted man requires that he have the same privileges of having a normal family life insofar as is practicable as the officer has.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to discuss this bill in its entirety. I do, however, wish to discuss a matter which has been generally misunderstood by much of the personnel in many branches of the service, but which I feel is necessary in order to maintain adequate personnel in certain branches of our defense.

Although I am strongly and unalterably opposed to certain provisions of this bill, nevertheless, there is one provision with which I am in thorough accord. I feel that the Commission's recommendations in regard to hazard pay are sound and practical. It is to be expected, however, that these provisions of the bill are the ones most likely to be misunderstood and possibly attacked. For that reason I want to review in some detail the philosophy behind hazard pay and the related features of this new pay bill.

The principal hazard pays and the ones I am discussing here are those for air crew and submarine service; glider, parachute, explosive demolition, and aerial observation duty; and deep-sea diving. Of these, pay for flying and submarine duty are the highest, most important, and most controversial.

The thinking of the Commission on the question of flying pay is essentially the same as on that of submarine duty, and is, I think, wholly sound. It is not the purpose of flying pay, to reward pilots for their cleverness or otherwise pamper them. Neither is it to compensate them for the likelihood of getting killed. It is for the practical purpose of inducing men to continue flying who might otherwise quit because of the risk involved. The provisions of this bill represent the result of a wholly realistic approach to a practical problem. The pay is, I feel, equally defensible on the basis of moral justification, but I want to emphasize here the wholly practical aspects of the matter.

In the first place I want to establish definitely this matter of risk. The increasing safety of commercial aviation has created some confusion on this point. Military flying involves aircraft in which safety factors must be sacrificed for performance. It includes operations, such as dive bombing, strafing, and all-weather flying, in which the emphasis must be on military effectiveness rather than safety. As a result, the fatality rate in the Air Force is three times that in commercial aviation. The death rate for military pilots from accidents alone, exceeds by five times that for the rest of the service from all causes. The danger is definitely there, and those in the Air Force and naval air arm know it is there. Moreover, their families are aware of it. These two facts are all important. I say they are important because I have heard it said that flying pay is not necessary to attract capable young men into the service as pilots. No, it is not. When the novelty has worn off flying, however; when flying has become a routine task, and when experience induces a sober and mature appraisal of the odds; then the picture changes drastically. At this point growing family responsibilities and mounting family pressure provide further reasons for ceasing active military flying. Under these circumstances it is not difficult to see why 66 percent of rated flying officers and 96 percent of flying enlisted personnel, of representative groups interrogated, have given flying pay as the principal reason for remaining on flying status. It is not difficult to see why 76 percent of the same officers and 90 percent of the same enlisted men stated that they would cease to fly were flight pay abolished.

The Advisory Commission has realistically faced the facts of flying hazard and flight pay in relation to the retention of necessary flying personnel, and as a result recommends the retention of this pay. They have found it necessary now, and it will continue to be necessary as long as increased aircraft performance acts to offset safety developments and as long as one out of four young men who become pilots at the age of 22 will be dead before he reaches the age of 40.

There remains the question of the gradation of the flight pay provided. It is less in the enlisted grades; increases in relation to base pay, although not in direct proportion; and is less for general than for company- and field-grade officers. Enlisted flight pay recommended is less because the fatality rates for enlisted men have consistently been less, indicating a lesser risk accepted. Also, officers perform extra duties and responsibilities in flight that operate to increase the emotional strain and reluctance to fly. Moreover, it must be emphasized again that flight pay is an inducement, not a compensation for possibly shorter life. Obviously, a larger sum is required to constitute equal inducement in the eyes of a man making more to begin with. The gradation observed throughout the pay scale is consistent with the sound policy of keeping compensation for primary responsibility greater in all grades than that for any additional duty. General officers' flight pay is less than that for those in the lower grades because general officers do not regularly engage in many of the more hazardous operations in the more dangerous types of aircraft that junior officers do. It would be a grave fallacy, however, to assume that generals should not fly or receive flight pay. Air Force generals, as befits the leaders of any vigorous, aggressive force, lead their men in the air in peace and war alike. In the last war 90 Air Force generals regularly flew combat missions. Of these, 10 were killed in combat, and 5 more met death in operational accidents. Those are impressive casualty rates. They are directly related, I am convinced, to the brilliant record and fine spirit of our Air Force in the last war.

The matter of submarine pay in the Navy involves much the same problem. True, submarines are not as dangerous in peacetime as are military and naval flying. The reality of the situation is, however, that they are regarded as dangerous; they are cramped and unpleasant; and they definitely impose a feeling of claustrophobia and cumulative emotional strain. As a result, there are not enough men who prefer this type of duty without added incentive in the form of pay. The submarine service must, obviously, for purposes of effectiveness, be voluntary. It is clear that, were it to be compulsory, fairness would require that the duty be imposed upon all in turn under a system of rotation. But submarines are highly specialized craft. They require personnel of long experience with them. They require enthusiastic crews. For all these reasons they must be manned by volunteers. Experience has shown the necessity of the proposed scale of special pay if an adequate number of men are to be obtained for submarine duty.

It has been suggested that these pays, however applicable in peacetime, should not continue in time of war. The facts do not support any such contention. I do not wish to disparage other fighting units or to belittle their heroic performance of dangerous, unpleasant, and essential tasks. However, I feel obliged to correct a current misconception to the effect that the infantry sustained the heaviest combat losses in the recent war. Many accept this as a matter of fact, but our wartime casualty lists reveal otherwise. According to the War Department, out of a mean strength of 122,823 combat officers, the Army Air Forces had 23,551 killed in action. The fatality rate per year per 1,000 officers was 47.9. The corresponding rate for the infantry was 28.3, representing 8,233 deaths out of a total strength of 72,857 officers in combat.

Among enlisted men the ratio was not less, as some might suggest, but greater. The Air Force lost 69 men per year per 1,000 in combat. The infantry lost but 27.7. The statistics thus show that the Air Force fatality rate was double that of the most dangerous ground branch. It was nine times that of the Army as a whole. These figures do not include 16,313 deaths during the war from accidents alone, resulting in an accident-fatality rate six times that of the rest of the Army from all noncombat causes. I seriously doubt, in view of these facts, that anyone can seriously maintain that in wartime all are exposed to the same risks, or that flying personnel are unfairly compensated to a greater degree than some even who are exposed to greater risks. The remaining pays for dangerous or unpleasant duties have been determined in accordance with essentially the same principles that determined the establishment of flying and submarine pay. In each instance the degree of danger or extreme distastefulness has proved to be such as to discourage voluntary acceptance of the duty. Additional pay, therefore, is the only workable and fair system for obtaining the men to perform these tasks. The Navy has long used a system of special pay for deep-sea diving which is essentially the same as that common in industry. Based on actual operations performed, it has proved workable, and no change has been recommended nor does any seem necessary. The remaining hazardous and unpleasant duties have been classified together and a flat pay rate of $100 monthly for officers and $50 for enlisted men prescribed. The reason for the flat rates for these duties is essentially that they are performed periodically or for fairly short intervals. Parachute jumping, for example, can only be performed by young and vigorous men, while submarine rescue and bomb disposal must by their nature be performed at intervals. Thus in these duties there is lacking both cumulative strain or a sizable increase in base pay over the periods of one man's participation in these activities. Past experience has shown that the rates recommended are adequate but necessary to serve the purpose of providing these special pays.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I have studied this bill quite a bit, despite what the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services said. I will admit that I was not present during all the sessions of the committee, but I plead in justification my work on the Committee on Agriculture, where we have been very busy; so I stayed on the job on the Committee on Agriculture. But I am trying to contribute my part in the writing of this legislation. For the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia I may state that my contribution is in the form of an amendment, now at the Clerk's desk, to strike out section 201 (a) on page 9. Now, let us get down to brass tacks about this matter.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. Not at this time.

I have heard most of the debate on this bill, and everybody has been presented the chance of saying they are not getting enough money. I have great respect for rank, in the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps. Like my good friend, I, too, was an enlisted man and also an officer in World War II. But let us look at this a little and let us see what a general or an admiral does get.

You say he gets $8,800 base pay. That may be true, but that does not take into consideration the car he is furnished, nor the chauffeur he is furnished, nor the beautiful mansion or home he is furnished; that does not take into consideration the servants his wife is furnished, the cook he has for his home; that does not take into consideration his aide, who is his personal secretary; that does not take into consideration the private plane that is at his disposal. When you take these things into consideration, actually, a general of the Army or an admiral of the Navy makes more than the Secretary of Defense; furthermore, he also has medical facilities not only for himself but for his entire family.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Furthermore, it does not take into consideration the fact that the army officer does not pay a thin dime toward his reirement, as a Congressman does.

Mr. SUTTON. Definitely; the gentleman pays towards his retirement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Also it does not take into consideration the fact that he can buy his groceries at the commissary.

Mr. SUTTON. He has the full advantages of the PX and the commissary; the gentleman is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He buys his clothes at the PX and his groceries at the commissary.

Mr. SUTTON. And buys diamond rings for his wife without tax, buys her fur coats without tax, at the wholesale price; yes, and can buy television sets that way, too. There is a per diem paid too.

Let us go a little further. I will admit that your second lieutenants and your ensigns are resigning after they finish the academies. They are boys who need some help. Your second lieutenants, your first lieutenants, your captains, your enlisted men need help. You give them a little aid. You are trying to see that they stay in.

If the gentleman from Georgia wants some adidtional officers in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, I have over 50 applicants who are trying to get into the Army right now. I will venture to say that there are not over 20 Members in this chamber right now who do not have boys, officers in the recent war, wanting to get back into the Army, wanting to get back into the Navy, wanting to get into the Air Force and Marine Corps. But try to get one of them in.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I feel I must rise at the moment. I have been rather silent on this measure thus far. I want to support what the gentleman says on that point. I have had a number of very able young men, Reserve officers, who want to get back into active duty in the Army and Air Force and I have not succeeded. With one or two exceptions I have not been able to get them back into the armed services. This is one method of getting fine young men into the Army.

Mr. SUTTON. The gentleman is correct.

May I refer to the testimony and the hearings, page 1457 for the benefit of the Committee? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] asked Admiral Fechteler a question as to why this was needed. Here is the admiral's answer:

> It is a combination of three things, Mr. VINSON, as I see it. First, it is the marked increase in the cost of living.

Everybody knows that the cost of living has gone down some. It is continuing to go down.

> Second, the inadequacy of the present pay scales as an incentive to attract and retain the type individual that we know we need.

If the boys who served during the war as officers, who then led us on to victory, are not the type of men that the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps need, I would like to know the reason why? Some of them are trying to get back in, just as the gentleman stated a while ago, but they cannot get in. That is excuse No. 2.

Here is No. 3:

> And, third, a matter of justice to the people who have stuck with us over many years.

Try to get one of them retired when he is a major or when he is a lieutenant colonel or when is a colonel or when he is a brigadier general or major general, if you please.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill so far as some sections are concerned, but, as a gentleman stated a while ago, it is a sugar-coated proposition so far as the pay in here is concerned. There should be two bills and this could be another contribution to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services. You have some good provisions here so far as retirement is concerned, and I speak as a veteran. You have some good provisions here, you have a good bill, but your pay raise should be in an additional bill. Let us talk about pay raises. We are trying to economize now. The cost of living is going down. We are thinking about additional taxes. It looks as if we are going in the red $3,000,000,000 this year. We will need an increase in taxation. Yet you come along and want to give the top brass this additional money.

Mr. Chairman, let us for a moment refer to the number that this will effect. You have 644 major generals and above, you have 248 brigadier generals or of corresponding rank. During the war they asked for 1,500 colonels to fight the war. Today you have 7,741 colonels, you have 17,025 lieutenant colonels, you have 25,675 majors. This information was secured from the House Armed Services Committee on May 20—today. These are not my figures. If you do not believe that you have that much top brass, just try to walk into the doors, any of you, over at the Pentagon building. That place, as I have maintained before, should have been established as a veterans hospital, and America would be better off today if that had been done, instead of a place for sinecures, for the top brass, that are coming in here and asking us for additional money.

I do not know how you feel about it, but I know how I feel about this matter. You have got a good bill, in parts. I congratulate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], on the sections in here relating to retirement and other provisions. But, I still maintain that we should have two bills instead of this one. I think we should send it back to the committee if we do not strike out this section 201 (a). If we strike out that section, I think we will have a good bill, but if we do not do that, I think it should go back to the committee with instructions that they do bring in a pay bill, and as to the other provisions bring in a separate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to discuss this bill in its entirety. I do, however, wish to discuss a matter which has been generally misunderstood by much of the personnel in many branches of the service, but which I feel is necessary in order to maintain adequate personnel in certain branches of our defense.

Although I am strongly and unalterably opposed to certain provisions of this bill, nevertheless, there is one provision with which I am in thorough accord. I feel that the Commission's recommendations in regard to hazard pay are sound and practical. It is to be expected, however, that these provisions of the bill are the ones most likely to be misunderstood and possibly attacked. For that reason I want to review in some detail the philosophy behind hazard pay and the related features of this new pay bill.

The principal hazard pays and the ones I am discussing here are those for air crew and submarine service; glider, parachute, explosive demolition, and aerial observation duty; and deep-sea diving. Of these, pay for flying and submarine duty are the highest, most important, and most controversial.

The thinking of the Commission on the question of flying pay is essentially the same as on that of submarine duty, and is, I think, wholly sound. It is not the purpose of flying pay, to reward pilots for their cleverness or otherwise pamper them. Neither is it to compensate them for the likelihood of getting killed. It is for the practical purpose of inducing men to continue flying who might otherwise quit because of the risk involved. The provisions of this bill represent the result of a wholly realistic approach to a practical problem. The pay is, I feel, equally defensible on the basis of moral justification, but I want to emphasize here the wholly practical aspects of the matter.

In the first place I want to establish definitely this matter of risk. The increasing safety of commercial aviation has created some confusion on this point. Military flying involves aircraft in which safety factors must be sacrificed for performance. It includes operations, such as dive bombing, strafing, and all-weather flying, in which the emphasis must be on military effectiveness rather than safety. As a result, the fatality rate in the Air Force is three times that in commercial aviation. The death rate for military pilots from accidents alone, exceeds by five times that for the rest of the service from all causes. The danger is definitely there, and those in the Air Force and naval air arm know it is there. Moreover, their families are aware of it. These two facts are all important. I say they are important because I have heard it said that flying pay is not necessary to attract capable young men into the service as pilots. No, it is not. When the novelty has worn off flying, however; when flying has become a routine task, and when experience induces a sober and mature appraisal of the odds; then the picture changes drastically. At this point growing family responsibilities and mounting family pressure provide further reasons for ceasing active military flying. Under these circumstances it is not difficult to see why 66 percent of rated flying officers and 96 percent of flying enlisted personnel, of representative groups interrogated, have given flying pay as the principal reason for remaining on flying status. It is not difficult to see why 76 percent of the same officers and 90 percent of the same enlisted men stated that they would cease to fly were flight pay abolished.

The Advisory Commission has realistically faced the facts of flying hazard and flight pay in relation to the retention of necessary flying personnel, and as a result recommends the retention of this pay. They have found it necessary now, and it will continue to be necessary as long as increased aircraft performance acts to offset safety developments and as long as one out of four young men who become pilots at the age of 22 will be dead before he reaches the age of 40.

There remains the question of the gradation of the flight pay provided. It is less in the enlisted grades; increases in relation to base pay, although not in direct proportion; and is less for general than for company- and field-grade officers. Enlisted flight pay recommended is less because the fatality rates for enlisted men have consistently been less, indicating a lesser risk accepted. Also, officers perform extra duties and responsibilities in flight that operate to increase the emotional strain and reluctance to fly. Moreover, it must be emphasized again that flight pay is an inducement, not a compensation for possibly shorter life. Obviously, a larger sum is required to constitute equal inducement in the eyes of a man making more to begin with. The gradation observed throughout the pay scale is consistent with the sound policy of keeping compensation for primary responsibility greater in all grades than that for any additional duty. General officers' flight pay is less than that for those in the lower grades because general officers do not regularly engage in many of the more hazardous operations in the more dangerous types of aircraft that junior officers do. It would be a grave fallacy, however, to assume that generals should not fly or receive flight pay. Air Force generals, as befits the leaders of any vigorous, aggressive force, lead their men in the air in peace and war alike. In the last war 90 Air Force generals regularly flew combat missions. Of these, 10 were killed in combat, and 5 more met death in operational accidents. Those are impressive casualty rates. They are directly related, I am convinced, to the brilliant record and fine spirit of our Air Force in the last war.

The matter of submarine pay in the Navy involves much the same problem. True, submarines are not as dangerous in peacetime as are military and naval flying. The reality of the situation is, however, that they are regarded as dangerous; they are cramped and unpleasant; and they definitely impose a feeling of claustrophobia and cumulative emotional strain. As a result, there are not enough men who prefer this type of duty without added incentive in the form of pay. The submarine service must, obviously, for purposes of effectiveness, be voluntary. It is clear that, were it to be compulsory, fairness would require that the duty be imposed upon all in turn under a system of rotation. But submarines are highly specialized craft. They require personnel of long experience with them. They require enthusiastic crews. For all these reasons they must be manned by volunteers. Experience has shown the necessity of the proposed scale of special pay if an adequate number of men are to be obtained for submarine duty.

It has been suggested that these pays, however applicable in peacetime, should not continue in time of war. The facts do not support any such contention. I do not wish to disparage other fighting units or to belittle their heroic performance of dangerous, unpleasant, and essential tasks. However, I feel obliged to correct a current misconception to the effect that the infantry sustained the heaviest combat losses in the recent war. Many accept this as a matter of fact, but our wartime casualty lists reveal otherwise. According to the War Department, out of a mean strength of 122,823 combat officers, the Army Air Forces had 23,551 killed in action. The fatality rate per year per 1,000 officers was 47.9. The corresponding rate for the infantry was 28.3, representing 8,233 deaths out of a total strength of 72,857 officers in combat.

Among enlisted men the ratio was not less, as some might suggest, but greater. The Air Force lost 69 men per year per 1,000 in combat. The infantry lost but 27.7. The statistics thus show that the Air Force fatality rate was double that of the most dangerous ground branch. It was nine times that of the Army as a whole. These figures do not include 16,313 deaths during the war from accidents alone, resulting in an accident-fatality rate six times that of the rest of the Army from all noncombat causes. I seriously doubt, in view of these facts, that anyone can seriously maintain that in wartime all are exposed to the same risks, or that flying personnel are unfairly compensated to a greater degree than some even who are exposed to greater risks. The remaining pays for dangerous or unpleasant duties have been determined in accordance with essentially the same principles that determined the establishment of flying and submarine pay. In each instance the degree of danger or extreme distastefulness has proved to be such as to discourage voluntary acceptance of the duty. Additional pay, therefore, is the only workable and fair system for obtaining the men to perform these tasks. The Navy has long used a system of special pay for deep-sea diving which is essentially the same as that common in industry. Based on actual operations performed, it has proved workable, and no change has been recommended nor does any seem necessary. The remaining hazardous and unpleasant duties have been classified together and a flat pay rate of $100 monthly for officers and $50 for enlisted men prescribed. The reason for the flat rates for these duties is essentially that they are performed periodically or for fairly short intervals. Parachute jumping, for example, can only be performed by young and vigorous men, while submarine rescue and bomb disposal must by their nature be performed at intervals. Thus in these duties there is lacking both cumulative strain or a sizable increase in base pay over the periods of one man's participation in these activities. Past experience has shown that the rates recommended are adequate but necessary to serve the purpose of providing these special pays.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that my chairman has hurt the feelings of the gentleman from Tennessee. I have never questioned his sincerity nor his right to offer an amendment nor to question the terms of this bill. However, I was a little bit disappointed in some of the tactics he adopted in connection with his proposal and in connection with the bill.

Over and above everything else we must remember that a committee of distinguished civilians spent about a year analyzing the pay scales of the military services and applying them to pay scales of industry. They brought us here a bill which equalizes all of the services. I think that the manner in which we want to approach this is as to what constitutes adequate and proper compensation for the responsibility assumed and the services rendered.

Now, on the question of the cost of living, I do not believe that there is going to be any question about whether the cost of living has gone down since 1908. Your last revision so far as generals are concerned was in 1908. Major generals now draw $800 a year more than they did in 1908. Again, I do not know that we should reflect upon the number of men who wear stars in the various services. After all, I guess that we here in Congress are responsible for that, and whether they are plugging all of the doorways in the Pentagon or not, the most that we had in the last World War was 1,500. At the present time in all three services, the Army, the Marines, and the Air Corps, there are 880. I do not believe that that is out of line when you apply it percentagewise to the strength of your present Army.

I regret very much that the gentleman from Tennessee saw fit to say the mean things he did say with reference to the soldiers of the professional services. I recall that the greatest living human being visited the United States shortly after the fighting ceased, and he then warned the members of the Armed Services what their status would be now that the guns had stopped. I refer to Winston Churchill when he quoted his famous ancestor, the Duke of Marlborough:

Our God and soldier we alike adore,
When at the brink of ruin, not before;
After deliverance, both alike requited,
Our God forgotten, and our soldiers slighted.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, anyone who has been at all familiar with the armed services must be aware of the fact that this committee has done some hard and diligent work in order to bring together a bill which deals with as many phases of compensation for the men in the uniformed services as this bill does. It deals with allowances; it deals with retirement; it deals with quarters; and it deals with pay. It is a monumental work. I would not detract from that over-all job by anything I might say.

At the same time, anyone who is facing his responsibility as a Member of Congress in these days, realizing that other bills are coming along, all of them asking for money, must give some consideration to the over-all financial picture of the country.

Just 2 days ago over in the other body another bill requested by the armed services was introduced—and perhaps it has also been introduced in this body—to authorize $623,000,000 in construction, largely for military housing. The Secretary of Defense, in connection with it, wrote to the chairman of the committee, "I earnestly request on behalf of the National Military Establishment favorable consideration of this legislation." And we all know that military housing is exceedingly important. Take that requested $623,000,000 in authorizations for housing and things of that sort, add that to the $400,000,000 in this bill, and you have a billion dollars added to the budget for the armed services in another year. This $400,000,000 plus will add nearly half a billion dollars, not for 1 year but from now on.

Now, when the subcommittee on appropriations for the armed services comes in next year somebody will say, "Why didn't you cut down that sum from last year?" And they will have to say, "We have made some reductions totaling $400,000,000, but we will still have as big a bill as we did last year because Congress voted these authorizations for increased pay."

There has been some discussion as to whether or not an obligation is created if this bill becomes law. The decision in the Dodd-Lovett-Watson case certainly established the fact that if the Congress authorizes a pay rate for a certain position and the man is holding that position legally, the obligation to pay him rests upon the Congress. The same thing would apply to quarters or subsistence if it is provided that they can be taken in cash, that is, if we continue commutation of quarters and subsistence. This does not apply to transportation because transportation is given only if it is used. If Congress limited the funds for transportation, presumably travel orders would be limited to the funds available. But if you have an Army or Navy that is entitled to quarters that can be drawn in cash you must provide the money for the men on the rolls, and pay, of course, is an obligation. Whatever we do here to create an obligation will tie the hands of the Committee on Appropriations to that extent. Now what is the situation we face financially?

I hold in my hand the daily treasury statement for May 17. It tells what is happening to the Treasury. Men may differ in their opinions as to what is happening, but here are some pretty hard, cold, facts.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I just want to know if he got permission from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] to read this statement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania were here, I am sure he would support me. I think the gentleman from Georgia, as one of the most conscientious Members of the House, also is concerned with this situation.

This is the Treasury statement. The income tax withheld by employers on May 17 is down $330,000,000 from the same date in May last year. The income tax paid by the other people is down, as of May 17, $48,000,000. The refund of revenue receipts is up $150,000,000. Then, with other changes in some of the other sources of revenue, the final line, "net budget receipts," is down $600,000,000 on the 17th of May, compared with the corresponding date last year.

In the face of a trend like that in the month of May, are we going to create a new obligation of this sort at this time, knowing, as we do, that there are other matters to be dealt with, all calling for huge sums?

It is impossible to ignore the cold facts on employment and wages these days. When the receipts from internal revenue taxes withheld by employers are down $330,000,000, are more people at work today than there were a year ago?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Those figures which the gentleman has given are just for the month of May. They do not include anything else.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, that is right; they are just for the month of May.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the face of these figures, are you going to tie the budget and the appropriations bills for the next year to another $400,000,000 or $360,000,000 for the first year, and $406,000,000 for the next 2 years beyond that? And what is the picture after that? Proponents say after that it is not going to cost us so much because we will have terminated the family allowance for the enlisted man. I do not want to put it as baldly as it could be put. But think for yourself: Are we going to say to the enlisted man, "We cut off your family allowance in order that we may raise the pay of the commissioned ranks?" Is that the record you want to defend? Do you want to say on some of these other bills, let us say, Federal aid to education, "I voted an additional $400,000,000 a year for officer pay, so I have to vote against Federal aid to education," or "I have to vote against the housing bill because the receipts in May are down $660,000,000 and I have already voted to add $400,000,000 to the military budget?"

Reference has been made to the fine work of the Hook Committee, a committee of sound businessmen. According to the report, however, the Hook committee started its work 18 months ago and presented its report in December, 6 months ago. Are you going to write a pay bill for officers on the basis of economic conditions in the country as of 18 months ago or a year ago or even 6 months ago? If writing that pay scale involves tying $400,000,000 or more to our annual budget from now on? Are we to freeze into the pay statutes a scale based upon the glowing inflationary picture of a year ago?

Even if you say after 2 or 3 years the increase will be offset by the savings mentioned, you have to defend the proposition that you have taken the wartime allowance for dependent families and used that wartime allowance for the purpose of writing into permanent law a higher pay scale. There will be amendments offered which will seek to correct this bill in this respect. I hope each Member of the House realizes that he, himself, is going to have to defend what he does here in the light of how he votes on some other bills. If we vote informedly I have no fear of a good result.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand the gentleman's statement on family allowances, if I understood the remarks of a member of the committee, if the men wanted to retire from the service, they could do so, otherwise, they would have to take the cut.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is right. They can retire from the service. But I think, and I believe that some of these men in the Army would feel that they had a contract for the period of their enlistement for dependency allowances.

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that the Government made certain commitments and promises to the enlisted men in the Navy and Army that for the period of enlistment they could reasonably expect to receive this allowance for their dependents, and was not that done to induce men to enlist in order to build up our armed services on a voluntary basis?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am sure that some of them will feel that way about it.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Does not the gentleman feel that this definitely will be against family men who might want to make careers in the armed services and have a family at the same time?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Who might want to work up into the noncommissioned ranks? I will say that I am afraid it might have that result.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Does not the gentleman feel that his comments with regard to present economic conditions are also pertinent as bearing on the evidence we have had before us of resignations from the armed services. In other words, is it not fair to anticipate that in the times we are having now—and they are at least, to put it conservatively, uncertain—it is less likely that these resignations from the service will continue as has been true in the past.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is illustrated by the fact that recruiting has come up in the last few months, responding to changing economic conditions. Security of job and pay, retirement without contributions, these are looking better than they did a few months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has expired.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I want to agree almost completely with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] had to say. There is no question in my mind but that this bill should be recommitted. It should be sent back to the committee for revision and then brought back here. The committee unquestionably has put in a lot of time and has reported a bill which has a great many good points, but it also has a great many bad points, in my humble judgment. It seems to me, from my reading of the hearings and the bill and the committee report that the whole bill is top heavy. Their emphasis has been put on the top—the generals, the admirals, and the high-ranking officers.

In the debate, in what I have heard here, it has been the same thing. I do not know how many of those here have forgotten the time when they were in the service, but it sort of riles me up a little bit when I hear so much about what the high-ranking officers did and how they had all the brains and did all the work and won the war. Anyone in the service knows that the men who did the most of the work were the men that this bill is not taking care of. It was the average, every-day enlisted man, and we all know it.

I am not trying to detract from the great work that the top military did, but when it came time to carry out the job they had planned, it was that average, every-day man who did the work, the enlisted man.

I was surprised to see, in reading the hearings, a point that I made with my own committee some time ago, that almost every single witness was a high-ranking man, and of the enlisted men who testified there was one corporal and two sergeants. I would like to know why it is that we do not hear from some of the enlisted men at these committee hearings of a thousand pages. They know the score. You would be surprised at some of the things they could tell you. The enlisted man is smart and has brains. Why do we not listen to him once in a while? Hear the top military, yes; but let us hear the little fellow, too. I am surprised there is no more in the hearings from the enlisted men. I think the enlisted men had less than 6 pages of testimony in the 1,000 pages of this report of the hearings.

This bill goes so far, if I may say it, with reference to emphasizing benefits for the top military that even with reference to hazardous duties, where theoretically a man is going to be paid something extra because he is taking a chance, the high-ranking officers get more pay than the enlisted man. Why is that? That extra pay is not given to a man because he has more brains or more ability. It is not given to him for any special qualifications. It is given to the man because it is called a perilous duty. Yet in this bill you do exactly what the military has always done. If a colonel and an enlisted man go on the same flight, on the same hazardous duty, the theory of the bill is that they are getting paid extra because it is a hazardous duty. And yet that enlisted man will get $30 for the risk and a major or a colonel will get $100 or $150. That is in this bill. There is not any excuse in the world why, when men take their lives in their hands for hazardous duty, the man with the gold braid or the stars or anything else should get more for it than the average, every-day enlisted man.

The bill may be logical when it says to pay top military men for their brains and ability, but that reasoning does not apply to hazardous duty where a man gets extra pay for taking extra chances, not for his brains or ability. Yet this bill so favors the top military at the expense of the enlisted man that it boldly says to give the top military men three or four times as much for the same risk as the enlisted man.

I think this bill should be sent back to the committee so that either one or two bills can be brought back to this House, as was suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, so that we can vote for those parts of the bill that we think are good and vote against the parts that we think are bad.

I also think that something should be done about what I consider to be a disgraceful situation. The committee says nothing can be done about it. I have reference to the situation where high-ranking officers have been retired because of physical disability, and receive their pension, and then go out and make twice that amount of money working. These pensions run to $150,000,000 a year, I think it is supposed to cost. Some are justified, some are not. Your committee says nothing can be done about those cases that are scandalously unjustified because it is a legal contract. If they have a legal contract, then at least they have a moral contract with the enlisted man. They say, however, you cannot enforce a moral contract in the courts. That may be, but we in Congress are under a moral obligation, we have a moral duty here. Maybe the courts do not have to pay attention to the moral contract, but here in this Congress we can and must pay attention to a moral duty.

Mr. SUTTON. Two hundred thousand people have applied for 9,000 jobs in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. That is how anxious they are to get these jobs.

Mr. FURCOLO. There is no question about that. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] made the point that there are hundreds and thousands of men who want these jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I consider it a privilege to address the House on this vital bill.

Our committee has clearly recognized its great importance both to the present and the long-range security of the country.

Here is involved what is still the greatest weapon in our possession—the American fighting man.

Is he to be instructed and led by skilled professionals, or is he to be subjected to the bungling of second raters?

The Congress must always demand in the strongest terms that our military leaders of today and tomorrow be the best qualified men our country produces. But this can no longer be assured unless we establish pay scales that will give men in all ranks a decent pay in keeping with their responsibilies.

What will this bill accomplish?

What are its basic objectives?

First, it will completely overhaul the existing military pay system, in order to correct the inequities and absurdities which have been pyramiding during the past 41 years.

Second, it will establish the fundamental premise that pay and responsibility must go hand in hand in all ranks. This does not exist under the present system.

Third, it is aimed at checking the alarming rate at which our most promising younger officers and enlisted personnel are leaving the service for greater opportunities offered them in business and industry.

Fourth, it will completely revise the present laws governing physical disability retirement which have been the source of so much criticism since the end of the war.

The present foundation of military pay was laid down in 1908. Since that time there has been no complete study or revision conducted by the Congress.

I might add that until 1947 the sharp differences between the promotion systems of the Army and Navy prevented any such action.

There have been some changes made. But they have been piecemeal, with almost no regard for the great changes that have taken place since 1908 in the economic and military situations confronting our country today.

It is therefore not at all surprising that the original philosophy of the pay structure has been completely distorted. This condition has grown to the point where it is wasteful and inefficient. It is actually stifling the initiative and individual progress of our service personnel. There is little incentive to work to qualify for greater responsibilities.

We must get the full value from the tremendous sums we are having to appropriate for national defense. It is imperative that the armed services be able to attract and to retain highly competent personnel in all ranks.

We cannot escape the fact that under present world conditions we are compelled to maintain the National Military Establishment as the most tremendous single organization in the world. An organization whose equipment and material are currently valued at more than $75,000,000,000. Its operating costs for the next year will approximate $15,000,000,000.

Certainly it would be regarded as folly of the worst kind if any private industry tried to do business under a hopelessly antiquated pay system. One that could not attract and keep the best qualified people to do the job.

Nevertheless, that is the position in which we find the armed services today. The facts clearly indicate that they are waging a losing battle in the vital field of personnel.

They are having increasing difficulty in getting new men of high caliber and qualifications. They are losing too large a number of their trained and experienced veterans.

In the Navy the resignation rate is approaching 40 percent among classes of recently graduated officers who have served the required time.

Among those officers who fought through the war as reservists and later transferred to the Regular Navy, 15 percent of them have already resigned.

The Air Force prior to the war had no difficulty in attracting college graduates for regular service. But now only 29 percent of its new officers have as much as 2 years' college training. Only 1½ percent have actually graduated from college.

The Army situation is no different. Of the selected graduates of the various military schools and colleges who were offered commissions in 1948, only 12 percent accepted. During the current year to date, such acceptances have dwindled to an appalling 1 percent.

All the services are confronted with the problem of retaining highly skilled enlisted men. This is particularly serious in the technical fields such as engineering and electronics.

What are the reasons for this alarming lack of interest?

Here are the most predominate ones: Too low a pay for the degree of responsibility required; poor career prospects in the military as compared to civilian occupation; lack of individual freedom of action; and, finally, the problem of housing.

The first two reasons given would be corrected by this bill; but the third reason is inherent in the military system and must be accepted by those who choose a military career. The fourth is still a Nation-wide problem.

A distinguished commission appointed by the Secretary of Defense gave the over-all problem the most intensive study for 12 months. Let me read you a few words from the report of this Commission:

> When an emergency arises, the safety and welfare of the United States depends on an efficient performance by the uniformed forces. It is the one institution in our country that can never be allowed to fail. The effectiveness of any organization can be no greater, over an extended period, than the efficiency of its management.

Let us now examine in some detail what this bill would accomplish as regards pay and allowances.

Starting with the lowest enlisted grade, the recruit. At the present time we are paying him $75 per month. This represents a 400-percent increase in the recruit's pay since 1908, the largest single increase for any rank.

In addition to his pay, the Government provides his food, quarters, a complete clothing outfit, and medical attention, the total value of which, according to current standards, is $108 per month. This amounts to a total monthly emolument of $183 per month, which compares very favorably with what is paid a beginner in any business or industry.

I wish also to point out to the House that a recruit normally remains in this pay grade only during the first 4 months in service—the period of his elementary training. Upon satisfactory completion of this training he is automatically promoted to the next grade.

In view of these facts, the committee recommends no further increase in the basic pay of a recruit.

The next grade is that of a private and a seaman second class. Men in this grade are presently receiving a monthly pay of $80 with a 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service. This represents an increase of 344 percent in basic pay since 1908.

Here we propose only a modest raise to $82.50 per month, but with a more substantial increase up to 10 years' service.

I should like to mention at this point a fundamental change that is proposed for length of service pay increases for all enlisted and commissioned grades. Present law provides a flat 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service. This has produced a serious overlapping of pay in the various grades which enables a man of long service to draw more pay than a more competent man of higher rank but with shorter service. The bill corrects this condition by providing a flat sum increase for each 2 years of service, not to exceed prescribed limits.

Continuing now with the enlisted pay grades, we come next to the corporal and seaman first class. They now receive a base pay of $90 per month and 5-percent increase for each 3 years' service. Under the bill, this would be increased to $97.50, with a $7.50 monthly increase after each 2 years of service.

The next grade is that of a sergeant or a petty officer, third class. It is in this grade that we enter the noncommissioned and petty-officer ratings. Enlisted men who by virtue of their rank first commence to exercise important initiative and responsibility. They now get a base pay of $100 per month, with a 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service. While this represents an increase of 218 percent since 1908, this bill would provide a substantial raise for this grade to $120, with further increases for each 2 years of service.

Opportunity exists for competent men to reach this grade during their first enlistment or very shortly thereafter. It is highly desirable for economy and efficiency that men who reach this grade be encouraged to remain for a full career.

The next enlisted grade is that of technical sergeant and second class petty officer, who now receive a monthly basic pay of $115 with a 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service. It is in this grade that we begin to find the really valuable noncommissioned and petty officers, those who by their experience and skill make an important contribution to the efficiency of their service. While the pay of this grade has already been raised 154 percent since 1908, this bill would authorize an additional increase to $180 per month to a man with 10 years service. This compares to $132 which he now receives for the same length of service.

The next and very important enlisted grade is that of staff sergeant and petty officer, first class. At the present time he receives $135 per month base pay with a 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service. This amounts to $162 monthly for a man having 12 years of service. Under this bill the same man would be raised to $210 per month, with additional increases for each 2 years' service thereafter up to $255.

Finally we come to the top of the enlisted pay grade—that of master sergeant and chief petty officer. Here is the experienced, practical leader of men, often termed the "backbone of the service." Under existing law, and with 18 years of service, such a man now receives $214 per month—a 117-percent increase since 1908. It would be increased by this bill to $270 for the same length of service. The maximum pay provided in this grade under present law is $247 per month, but is not attained until after 30 years of service. Under the bill, maximum pay in this grade would be $300 per month after 26 years of service.

It is my firm conviction, based upon long observation of the armed services, that the best approach to a sound personnel system is not to raise the pay of the recruit or of the new officer out of all proportion to what he is worth. Let us say instead to these new men, "We will give you an adequate beginner's pay as you start your career. It will be substantially increased as you prove your worth, and win promotion to the higher grades."

Both the civilian Commission and the Armed Services Committee are convinced that this is by far the best method, and would provide the most effective inducement for good men to make the service their life career. To establish such a system is a fundamental aim of this bill.

The average enlisted pay has been increased by nearly 300 percent since 1908—the smallest single raise being 117 percent.

During the same period, however, the average officer's pay has been increased by less than 50 percent, with the smallest raise being 10 percent.

Let us now examine the provisions of this bill covering the basic pay of officers. We must keep in mind the fact that the newly commissioned officer is required to have had a considerable amount of technical education, or the equivalent experience and skill, before he can qualify for his commission. It should also be noted that these same qualifications make him a fine prospect for civilian occupation.

Under present law, the ensign and second lieutenant are paid $180 per month, with a 5-percent increase for each 3 years of service, a 57-percent increase since 1908. Under this bill they would receive a starting pay of $225, with a flat $15 increase for each 2 years of service until the maximum is reached after 14 years.

Let me state that no one will be permitted to sit in that or any other grade for as long as 14 years. That feature becomes necessary when outstanding enlisted men are made officers, in order to credit them with their previous enlisted service.

The next grade, that of first lieutenant and lieutenant junior grade with 3 years' service, now receives $210, with the usual longevity increase every 3 years. This is a 38-percent increase since 1908. The bill would raise this to $277 for the same length of service, with the maximum pay attainable at 14 years.

The senior Navy lieutenant and the Army or Air Force captain with 6 years' service now gets $253 per month—a 28-percent increase since 1908. This would be raised to $360. In order to cover nurses and former enlisted men, a maximum pay of $435 is attainable at 22 years' service. Others who fail to be promoted will be eliminated not later than 14 years' service.

The major and lieutenant commander with 12 years' service now are paid $330—only a 14-percent increase since 1908. These are the officers who begin to demonstrate their ability to exercise independent command. This is perhaps the most indicative grade in an officer's career. Under this bill and with the same length of service, they would be raised to $450. Maximum pay of $540 to be attainable at 26 years' service.

Lieutenant colonels and commanders with 18 years' service currently are paid $417, a 30-percent increase since 1908. In this grade we find officers exercising important responsibilities. They command battalions, destroyers, and submarines, aircraft squadrons, each of which may include several hundred men. Their monthly pay under this bill would be increased to $555 for the same period of service.

Then we have the colonels and the Navy captains. The great majority of these officers will complete their careers in this grade. Only about 1 out of 6 of their number can be promoted to higher rank. Under the new promotion law, the others must retire after 30 years' service to make way for younger men coming up.

The present pay in this grade with 27 years' service is $532, a 31-percent increase since 1908. We must now provide a substantial pay increase.

Unless we establish reasonable career incentive, the best of our young officers will leave the service for more promising futures in other fields.

This bill provides that the pay of colonels and captains with 27 or more years' service be raised to $705. It is the only sensible way to meet the problem, and I strongly urge your full support.

Now we come to the brigadier generals and the lower half rear admirals, who currently receive a flat $550. Considering the ability and experience required, we find here one of the most poorly paid positions in the entire Government. During the past 41 years, this grade has received only a 14-percent raise.

These are the men upon whom we must depend for vital defense planning, and for commands of great responsibility in battle.

What are their jobs?

In the Navy they command task groups that may number over 20,000 men, with combatant ships and planes worth several hundred million dollars. Dan Callaghan and Norman Scott who gave their lives in the great night battle at Guadalcanal were both in this grade.

In the Army and Marine Corps, brigadiers command those magnificent combat teams numbering up to 10,000 men and equipped with all of the supporting ground weapons. They must be ready to take over command of entire divisions of 15,000 to 20,000 men and a tremendous amount of modern fighting equipment. William Darby who organized the Ranger battalions and was finally killed in the mountains of Italy was among the 25 Army brigadiers who died in action in the war.

In the Air Force, brigadier generals personally lead the great air wings of heavy bombers and fighters. This means the responsibility for as many as 500 planes, several hundred million dollars worth of property, and 10,000 to 15,000 men, with all of the supporting ground elements. Nathan Bedford Forrest III who gave his life in the skies over Europe, and Eusel Ent who died leading the raid on the Ploesti oil fields, both were serving in this grade.

Major generals and upper half rear admirals have been given a paltry 11 percent raise since 1908. Are we to say to these men who lead our combat divisions, air commands, and task forces, "Win our country's battles, but you are not worth a decent pay."

It would be an appalling mistake if we failed to correct the gross pay inequities of these grades.

I, therefore, ask your strongest endorsement for the pay raises provided in this bill. With 30 years' service, these mean increases for the major general from $733 to $1,005, and for the brigadier from $550 to $870.

We must meet this vital issue squarely. Otherwise the country will find that these key positions eventually will be held by mediocre men, and we shall have paved the way to disaster and defeat.

One of the most distorted features of the present system has been that dealing with the money allowances for quarters and subsistence. We have simplified this and brought it up to date.

The enlisted men of the top three pay grades are normally those who have made the service their career. For those having dependents, and not living in Government quarters, the monthly quarters allowance is increased from $37.50 to $67.50. This allowance is extended for the first time to men of the fourth pay grade with seven or more years service—that being the point where an enlisted man usually decides to make it his career.

Enlisted men below the fourth pay grade, and all those without dependents, when not living in Government quarters, will receive quarters allowance of $45.

Food rations are normally provided to enlisted men. But where this is not done, the monthly allowance of $31.50 will be continued. This may be increased under certain conditions to $67.50 or $90.

Under present law, the ration allowance for officers varies between $21 and $63, according to their rank and dependents. The bill provides that this allowance be fixed at a flat $45 under all conditions. Officers have never been provided with Government rations in kind.

The quarters allowance for officers with dependents varies under present law between $60 and $120, depending on their rank. This would be increased under the bill to range from $75 to $150. The allowance of course is not paid when Government quarters are provided.

Officers without dependents currently receive from $45 to $105 unless living in Government quarters. This would be increased to range from $60 to $120.

A most important feature of this bill is that dealing with the termination of the wartime Dependents Allowances Act. Under that act, enlisted men have been paid special allowances according to the number of their dependents. It applies the same to all enlisted men regardless of their rank. It has resulted in some cases of privates drawing as much as $400 above their regular pay.

It is a most expensive program. Under existing law it will cost $314,000,000 for the next fiscal year. It was highly necessary during wartime when civilians with families and dependent relatives were drafted into military service. But it has no place in peacetime when we are striving to develop an efficient volunteer service.

This bill proposes a career pay structure based on responsibility and skill on the job. Adequate allowances are provided for those who gain promotions and establish their value to the service. But flat subsidies, solely for the number of one's dependents should be discontinued as soon as possible.

We, therefore, recommend in this bill that payment of these subsidies be terminated 6 months following enactment. If, as a result of such termination, any man then suffers a reduction in his now current pay and allowances, he will be discharged upon his own application.

The House will be interested to know that a number of enlisted men testified on the bill before our committee. Every one of them advocated that these family allowances be stopped, and said they were contrary to a sound career program.

Termination of these allowances, will result in a savings to the Government of $191,000,000 in the next fiscal year. Due to certain guaranties made in the Recruitment Act of 1945, all such payments will not be completely terminated until 1952.

I should like to say a word about those sections of the bill dealing with hazardous duty and other special pays. We have changed the flight and submarine pay from the 50-percent increase now provided. I have long felt that such a formula was outmoded.

We recommend flat monetary increases for each rank as incentive pay to perform hazardous duty. The highest amount would be paid in the colonel's rank. We have reduced the hazard pay of generals and admirals to $100 from the present average of $320. Their high executive duties should not require them to engage in such work to the same extent as the lower ranks.

The handling of transportation costs under present law has become so complicated that not even the experts can understand it. Furthermore, it has become unduly expensive and still results in many persons having to pay transportation costs out of their own pockets when performing official travel.

We have cleared up this section and placed it on a sensible basis where legitimate travel will be paid for by the Government and at no increase in present cost.

We have not followed all of the recommendations of the Hook Commission regarding retirement. The principle reason for this being that the subject of retirement is a most complicated and far-reaching matter. It is also tied up with adequate survivor benefits and the placing of all retirements on a contributory basis.

The committee, therefore, recommends that all matters pertaining to voluntary and involuntary retirement be made the subject of a special study, and that final action be deferred until that study is made available to the Congress.

I should like to remind the Members that since the end of the war the Congress has already done quite an extensive job in revising the voluntary and involuntary retirement laws, affecting both the Regulars and Reserves.

In the matter of physical-disability retirement, however, the committee strongly recommends drastic changes in existing law. The present disability retirement law has been in effect almost without change since 1861—2 weeks after the Battle of Bull Run. It is, therefore, not surprising that this law is hopelessly out of date and has been the source of much criticism and abuse.

Therefore, instead of permitting only officers to be retired for disability with a flat 75-percent tax-free pay, this bill provides a complete change in the entire system.

Under this bill the right to disability benefits would be extended on the same basis to all persons, officers and enlisted, Regular or Reserve. It will be geared to the percentage of actual disability according to standards of the Veterans' Administration.

No person with less than 30-percent disability is going to receive a physical retirement under any conditions. If he has less than 30-percent disability and still cannot do his military job, he is going to be discharged with severance pay.

Where a person is unfit for his duty and has more than 30-percent disability, he is going to be placed on a temporary-disability list, subject to physical reexaminations for a period not to exceed 5 years. If he recovers during this time, he is going to be restored to active duty. If he does not recover and still has more than 30-percent disability, he will then be permanently retired. Or he may elect to go to the Veterans' Administration if he is entitled to a greater benefit from that agency.

I repeat that this bill would abolish the flat three-quarters disability pay now available only to officers. Instead, where a person is entitled to either temporary or permanent disability retirement, his pay will be based upon the degree of his disability, or upon the length of his active service, whichever he elects.

If he elects retired pay on the basis of length of service, that pay will be fully taxable.

Those who have less than 8 years of service will be eligible for retirement benefits only if the disability is incurred in connection with the direct performance of his active duty.

It is absolutely necessary that the Congress put an end to the present disability retirement law. This bill not only will accomplish great future savings to the Government, but will place such retirement on a just and proper basis.

No person who has been previously retired need suffer any reduction in his present retired pay under this bill. He may elect to have his retired pay based on the new pay rates, providing he qualifies under the new rules.

In addition to the new rules for physical disability this bill provides that there will be no other kinds of special retirement benefits except on the strict basis of length of active service.

I wish to remind the Members that both under present law and this bill no person is entitled to any kind of retirement, except physical disability, unless he has completed at least 20 years of service.

The additional cost that will result from this bill for the next fiscal year will be $360,000,000. The President has already recognized the vital necessity of revising the military pay system and has allowed $400,000,000 in his 1950 budget for this purpose.

The bill provides that the effective date of the pay and disability retirement provisions be deferred until October 1 of this year. This is necessary to meet the President's budget limitations for fiscal 1950.

Assuming the personnel strength for fiscal 1950 is to remain constant, the cost of the bill for the entire fiscal year commencing July 1, 1950, will be $406,000,000. This amount will be reduced during ensuing years due to further reduction in family-allowance benefits and the expiration of other savings clauses.

I wish the Members to know that the above costs do not take into consideration the amount of income tax that is recovered by the Government from service personnel.

During the war and until January 1 of this year all active enlisted pay and the first $1,500 pay of active officers was tax exempted. With the termination of the tax exemption on the first of January, the amount of income tax withheld from the pay of all active personnel has been increased by an annual amount of $130,000,000 and based upon the present pay rates.

This has resulted in a sharp reduction of take-home pay in all ranks. It means that the present inadequate service pay has not been raised as it has been in all other fields, but has been reduced.

When adequate pay rates are enacted, as provided by this bill, there can be no argument that service personnel should not pay taxes on exactly the same basis as all other citizens. Under these new pay rates the amount of income tax paid by service personnel would be further increased by an additional $70,000,000.

My point is this, whereas the President has authorized a $400,000,000 increase in service pay, the amount of income tax recovered by the Government would be $200,000,000 over that paid by service personnel in the calendar year 1949 and before expiration of the tax-exemption law.

In the first complete fiscal year of operation, that of 1951, the total increased cost would be $406,000,000.

It should be noted, however, that this includes $107,000,000 for increased Reserve training and retired pay.

Thus only $299,000,000 is actually available for the increased pay and allowances of active-duty personnel.

This represents a net increase of only 7½ percent in the present cost of active-duty pay and allowances for fiscal 1950.

We are living today in the atomic age of a dangerous world. Any future war would be carried on at almost fantastic speeds, and would involve a degree of scientific mass destruction almost beyond comprehension.

The final responsibility for maintaining our military security rests with the armed services. We will continue to provide them with the finest possible weapons and equipment. But we must likewise assure that the quality of their personnel, their technical skill, their leadership, and morale all be of the very highest order.

We recognize the need for economy in the operations of the Government. But we cannot in justice ask the men and women of our armed forces to bear more than their share of economizing in Government expenditures. They should not be expected to continue under an obsolete and inadequate compensation scale.

It is indeed a tribute to their patriotism and devotion to duty that our defense forces are today strong and intact.

In the interests of our national security and in simple justice to our uniformed personnel this bill must be enacted.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, this measure before us, H. R. 4591, dealing with pay, allowances, and retirement for the members of our armed forces, is the result of long study made by a distinguished committee of private citizens. The committee that has brought this bill to the floor of the House has likewise spent a great deal of time on it. While I do not agree with everything in it, I want to say that it has many good provisions. It has many provisions that I favor.

The real question is: Should we at this time pass this measure which will add to the annual pay-roll costs of the armed services $360,000,000, or possibly something over $400,000,000 in view of the present financial plight of this Government? The question to be determined is: Is this bill meritorious enough to warrant its passage if this additional cost will mean increased taxes or a larger deficit?

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the 5 minutes. I appreciated the remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, when he told you about the increase for the enlisted men. But, I would like to point this out to the House that he did not tell you what he took away from the enlisted men in family allowances. If you will figure up what he has taken away in the nature of family allowances from the enlisted men you will find the enlisted man will get considerably less than this increase that is given here. It is true that technical sergeants should be getting $48 additional pay. Who runs the Army? Who runs the Navy? Who runs the Marine Corps? If you want to know about the Army, you go to a sergeant. If you want to know about the Navy, you go to a chief petty officer. If you want to know about the Marine Corps, you go to a sergeant or to a warrant officer. You do not go to a captain in the Navy or a brigadier general or a colonel in the Army. He would have to call down to the sergeant 5 times out of 10 and find out.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. I forgot to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is another great advantage for the enlisted man, one with dependents, and that is quarters. Today the enlisted man with dependents and with a quarters allowance gets only $37.50, and in this bill we are giving him $67.50.

Mr. SUTTON. That is true.

Mr. VINSON. Wherever you turn a page that relates to the enlisted man in this bill, we have given him more help than he ever enjoyed before in the history of this country.

Mr. SUTTON. And at the same time you cut down the family allowances.

Let us see about these admirals and generals, whether they have cooks or not. I spent a little over 5½ years in the service, and I have not yet seen a general nor an admiral who did not have a man in service down in his kitchen. He might not have it by law, but he will have it there.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate with great interest. I think I come here before you with a background that qualifies me to speak on the subject before you. I had my first introduction to the Army when I reported to Gen. Jack Pershing for duty down at Fort Sam Houston in 1917, when he was wearing two stars while serving in command of the Southern Department. I traveled 340,000 miles inspecting military installations during the 8 years from 1939 to 1947 that I served on the Committee on Military Affairs. I am no longer serving on that committee. I served those 8 years on the Subcommittee on Pay for the Armed Services. Most of my travel was spent in interviewing all types of soldiers from the lowest rank to the top, in all kinds of conditions.

I was out there alone at 2 a. m., the only civilian present, when I had walked through 5 miles of mud to witness Patton make his first crossing of any body of water, the Sabine River, in the Louisiana maneuvers. I was again the only civilian present when General Eisenhower was promoted from colonel to brigadier general. I have seen military leaders come up through the line, come up through the ranks, from the bottom to the top.

If there was ever a time in history that we should stabilize our national defense, it is now for the peacetime swing. We need a revision of the pay for the whole armed service. The Hook Commission has made a magnificent study. I admire the work they have produced. Also, I admire the work the Committee on Armed Services has done here in this legislation. I know what the struggle has been. I have not taken active part in the work the last 3 years, but I know how they have carried on. I know how complicated this subject is. I think I know how difficult the task is. My hat is off to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], and to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] for their work on this measure, and to the other members of the committee for developing and bringing out this bill. It is a well-balanced bill. It is calculated to get results that our Nation sorely needs.

I stand with all those who are for economy, but I am not going to cripple our armed services as the starting point of my drive for economy. The time is coming when we will thank God for an adequate, smooth, efficient, armed service. Now is the time to avoid wrecking it. This is a challenge to the Congress of America to place confidence in those who have made a thorough study of this matter. I commend the Committee on Armed Services and the Hook Commission for a good job well done. I do not want to see Congress wreck the morale of the armed services.

If you were to ask me whether I would want to go back to the very small number of high-ranking officers and generals present in April of 1917, I would have to say, "From a lifetime of experience and observation, I will take a better balanced supply of high rank to do the job as it should be done. It is important to select good leaders and to give them incentive and reward. It is most important also that we give those leaders the power and authority to match their responsibilities if we are to make it possible for them to develop and maintain the caliber of defense we need in this unsettled world.

In my humble opinion this bill will go far toward stabilizing our armed services. I know that you can take any bill of this kind and pick it to pieces and criticize it for not being in complete accord with your personal views. Also that it has not been brought out closer to the time of investigation. But I challenge any Member of Congress to take this problem and formulate a good, sound piece of legislation without some time lag. You will always need considerable time to do a good job such as the Committee on Armed Services has done. This is too big a subject and too complicated and too hard a task to do on the spur of the moment.

We need this legislation and the bill before us is well prepared and adequate for our needs. I will support it as vigorously as I can.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, due to the fact that the House met at 11 o'clock this morning and that we have been on this bill for 5 hours, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RABAUT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4591) to provide pay, allowances, and physical-disability retirement for members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Public Health Service, the Reserve components thereof, the National Guard, and the Air National Guard, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why the Selective Service Act should not be repealed when operations under this act are at a virtual standstill.

Young men cannot proceed in full confidence with their educational programs or start up in business with this passive threat hanging over them. Under present conditions it is a nuisance law which serves no constructive purpose. It points the dagger of fear at every mother's heart.

The Army has already announced that there would be no draft call during fiscal year 1950—July 1, 1949–June 30, 1950. See House Report No. 425 on H. R. 4177, independent offices appropriation bill, made on April 11, 1949.

Yet, the administration of selective service, with nothing to administer, is given $4,500,000 to spend. In the month of March, throughout the Nation, this agency inducted a grand total of 10 men. Not that we would have this number increased—far from it. We simply cannot understand why this agency should exist in the first place. Secondly, we believe that a saving of $4,500,000 could be effected by abolishing it immediately.

There are now so many advantages which encourage enlistments, that the Navy has become quite discriminating in its choice of men. In fact, all of the armed forces have raised their standards. The rise in unemployment will cause them to turn away many eligible men or put them on a waiting list.

The Marshall plan and the proposed Atlantic Pact are making an impression on Soviet Russia. As the nations of western Europe are nursed back to ecomonic health, and as they acquire collective strength to resist aggression, thanks to our help, the international situation will steadily improve. Unless the pact contains an unwritten understanding whereby we are secretly committed to increase the number of our troops abroad, there will be no justification whatever to continue the Selective Service System, even on paper.

The volunteer method is sufficient to meet our needs. When we recall the agitation for compulsory military training last year, it appears that certain quarters were anxious to foist this regimentation on the American people under the pressure of an artificial scare.

We have a Military Establishment which is adequate. In addition to the force in being, we have an impressive reserve of ships laid up in mothballs, besides many tanks and planes in storage. Any further emphasis should be on research, stock piling, and the strengthening of our industrial base, which is the mobilizable force of decisive value.

It would be unwise to so overload and strain our economy by a larger military force in being, for that would weaken the base upon which all strength rests. Even now we are concerned with the problem of waste in the Military Establishment. By more efficient organization we can still be fully prepared while, at the same time, we reduce the tax burden of this insurance.

There is no foundation in fact for the continuance of selective service. It is a deadweight on the shoulders of American youth. I suggest that we put it away in mothballs and to be dusted off and revived by legislative action only as a last resort.

Public Law 759, Eightieth Congress, chapter 625, second session, has titles covering the utilization of industry and reform of the courts-martial system which should be retained. But I ask that those provisions relating to selective service, or the compulsory draft of youth to serve in the armed forces, be repealed by passage of the bill I have introduced which will eliminate peacetime conscription.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article and a letter from the Department of Agriculture.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by former Representative Hamilton Fish.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FUGATE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. CARROLL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. BOYKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement on air pilots.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include several newspaper items.

Mr. O'KONSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio speech.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am very much interested in knowing when this bill will be taken up again. Will it be taken up on Monday or Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot make a definite statement in reply to the gentleman.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection; but since certain plans have been made, I thought it would be well to find out as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

NATION-WIDE PRAYER FOR PEACE DAY

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 61, requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating Memorial Day, 1949, as a day for a Nation-wide prayer for peace.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe Memorial Day, 1949, by praying, each in accordance with his religious faith, for permanent peace, designating a period during such day in which all the people of the United States may unite in prayer for a permanent peace; calling upon all the people of the United States to unite in prayer at such time; and calling upon the newspapers, radio stations, and all other mediums of information to join in observing such day and period of prayer.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS AT THIS POINT IN THE RECORD

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, on March 4, 1949, I introduced in the House House Joint Resolution 185. On March 16 Senator FERGUSON introduced Senate Joint Resolution 61. The resolutions are identical. My resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and this morning was ordered favorably reported by the subcommittee.

On yesterday the Senate passed Senate Joint Resolution 61, and I am now asking the House to agree to the Senate resolution.

The House resolution has not been considered by the full Committee on the Judiciary and that committee does not meet until Tuesday next. But a few days remain before the celebration of Memorial Day, therefore time is of the essence in the passage of this resolution.

I have talked personally with all of the members of the Judiciary Committee who are available and there is no objection on the part of any one of them to the request which I have just made. I feel sure that the two or three members who are not polled are of like mind. I have cleared through the majority leader and the minority leader, and have so advised the Speaker.

The only thing these resolutions do is to request the President in his Memorial Day proclamation to ask that the people of all faiths, for such time as the President may suggest, pray for permanent peace. Certainly no one can object to any such request by the Congress or any such action by the President. The American people do believe in God. They do believe in prayer. They do realize that it takes more than prayer as a rule to accomplish objectives. As a Nation we are today doing those things which we think are most likely to avoid war. A moment of even silent prayer on the part of all of our people will again call the attention of the world to the fact that we are a Christian Nation.

Be it remembered that the effectuation of this resolution will cost the Government nothing and will not add another holiday or day of celebration. It will simply supplement by suggesting the moment of prayer requested.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 25 minutes.

LEON JOHNSON AGAINST CHARLES DYE, WARDEN OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY JAIL

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks an opinion of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, one of Charles Dickens' characters, Mr. Bumble, in Oliver Twist, said:

If the law supposes that, the law is a ass, a idiot.

If he were among us today, he could say "I told you so," and the occasion for the remark would be the asinine pronouncement of one Chief Judge John Biggs, Jr., of the Third Circuit Federal Court of Appeals, in the case of Leon Johnson, alias Robert McMillan, against Charles L. Dye, warden of the Allegheny County jail, the opinion having been filed May 7.

I was amazed on yesterday to read newspaper stories that Biggs in his opinion on the appeal of a habeas corpus case, to which the State of Georgia was not a party, had clothed himself with full and complete authority to weigh the sovereign State of Georgia in the balance. Having done so, he proceeded to ally himself with the male killer of a 22-year-old woman, a self-confessed murderer, an escaped convict, and, without the merest pretense of an inquiry by Biggs himself, into the operation by the State of Georgia, of its penal system, with all the abandon and irresponsibility of a loose mule loping down the road, he arrogated to himself and his colleagues on the court full authority to exercise pardon powers for the State of Georgia, and full authority to nullify and set aside an admittedly legal and correct sentence of a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Georgia; which action by implication assumes the authority to exercise the pardoning power on behalf of, and nullify court decisions of every State in the Union.

Although this case originated in Allegheny County, Pa., the so-called judicial action which freed this murderer is not the action of the State of Pennsylvania. The record in this case shows that the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County had denied a petition for habeas corpus filed by the apprehended escaped convict. It further shows that an appeal was taken to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court which affirmed the judgment denying the writ of habeas corpus. It further shows that application was then made to the United States district court and that the application was likewise denied there. But when the appeal reached the Third Circuit Federal Court of Appeals, the escaped murderer found himself in the company of a kindred spirit. A sensible construction was given to the Constitution of the United States by the Pennsylvania Court of Common Pleas, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, and the United States district court. But, to Biggs it means nothing that section 1 of article IV of the Federal Constitution says:

Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other State.

And that paragraph 2 of section II of article IV of the Constitution says in plain understandable language:

A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, and be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

Biggs is not content that the State of Pennsylvania should observe this constitutional provision, as that State undoubtedly would have done, except for the interposition of Biggs and his colleagues. He must not only traduce the good name of a sovereign State, but he must also prevent another sovereign State from complying with its lawful obligation and duty under the Constitution of the United States.

In this decision, Biggs would rewrite the above-quoted provisions of the Federal Constitution to suit his own warped ideas. It is difficult to understand how a man of this caliber ever managed to attain the bench on a circuit court of appeals. I can only understand it as one of those things which occurred in an era when it was regarded in some quarters as politically and morally respectable to pack the courts of the country.

It is evident that Biggs approached this case with the determination to traduce the State of Georgia and to free this escaped murderer, regardless of the devious and fraudulent tactics necessary in order to accomplish that nefarious purpose. It was no deterrent to Biggs that Johnson, alias McMillan, told the court of common pleas of Pennsylvania during the trial of his case there, that he had plead guilty to the offense of murder in Cobb County Superior Court in Georgia. This would-be Thaddeus Stevens hurdled that obstacle with ease. He merely said, in substance, that although the defendant told the court of common pleas he had plead guilty to the offense of murder in Cobb County Superior Court, nevertheless he did not know what he was talking about. What Biggs in his colossal ignorance does not know is the procedure under which a defendant may plead guilty in Georgia to murder so as to avoid the death penalty. The statute of the State of Georgia provides that the punishment for murder is death, unless the jury trying the case recommends the defendant to the mercy of the court, in which event the punishment is life imprisonment. The trial judge who is willing to let the defendant plead guilty and receive a life imprisonment sentence submits the case to the jury with a statement of the facts, so that the jury may render its verdict recommending mercy, which authorizes the sentence of life imprisonment, instead of death by execution.

But these things present no problem to Biggs, the would-be present-day Thaddeus Stevens.

Unable to find any irregularity regarding the plea of guilty, or verdict as the case might be, he proceeds to work out a plan under which Johnson, alias McMillan can be pardoned. To do that, he must supply with his imagination certain portions of the record which were not present. He must refute the statement of the Pennsylvania trial judge that there was no evidence to support the contention of Johnson, alias McMillan, that he was treated with barbarism, cruelty, and inhumanity in a Georgia chain gang.

To do that he points out that there were other escaped convicts in the Allegheny County jail who testified as the defendant did regarding cruelty toward them. He pointed out that there was a former Army officer, now a jailbird on a charge of felonious assault in Pennsylvania, who testified to the same effect.

Not only that, but Biggs pointed out that there was a copy of Life magazine in the record which corroborated the testimony of Johnson, alias McMillan, regarding barbarism and cruelty in Georgia chain gangs, and not only that, but there was in the evidence a copy of an issue of Time magazine, which also corroborated the contention of the defendant. Biggs also noted there could have been in the record a complete report on the action on the President's Civil Rights Commission, although for some unexplained reason that was not included.

The trial judge evidently was familiar with the principle that—

> No man e'er felt the halter draw
> With good opinion of the law.

And Biggs pointed out that although the trial judge might have found the evidence of Johnson, alias McMillan, and his corroborating jailbird witnesses incredible; nevertheless the evidence was there, and could be believed by anyone who wanted to believe it, and Biggs then proceeded to pile assumption upon assumption to build up a case to try to give some respectability to his arbitrary and capricious action in nullifying the action of a court of competent jurisdiction by freeing, without any conditions or restrictions whatever, an escaped convict guilty of one of the most serious crimes known to civilization.

Under the procedure which Biggs is trying to establish, England could refuse to honor extradition proceedings to return Gerhart Eisler to the United States to serve the sentences which have been rightfully imposed upon him. All that Eisler would need to do to go free in England under the Biggs procedure would be to swear that United States prison officials are cruel and inhuman to Communists; bolster that up with corroborating testimony by jailbird Earl Browder, introduce a copy of the Daily Worker in the record, and he would be a freeman.

If the judicial system of the United States of America should ever sink to the low level of depravity where it would regard the decision of Biggs in this case as a binding precedent, the power of a sovereign State to protect the lives, safety, and property of its citizens would be completely destroyed.

Law-abiding people look with contempt and disfavor upon one who aids and abets a lawbreaker to escape.

Biggs, in this case, is as guilty of aiding and abetting an escaped criminal as any accomplice who ever harbored and gave shelter to a criminal in his home while the sheriff looked for him.

Aiding and abetting the escape of a criminal is a crime in itself. Biggs has committed this crime. He should be tried and sentenced for it. Not only that, he should be impeached and removed from the position which he holds.

This trend on the part of certain Federal judges to nullify not only State laws and constitutions, but also Federal laws and Federal Constitution, must be curbed, even if it means impeaching some Federal judges to do it.

In referring to this decision, I notice that the newspapers referred to this decision as a "precedent shaking" and "precedent making" decision.

I think that these terms are misnomers. This fraudulent decision will not make any precedent. It will not shake any established precedents. No court worthy of the name would feel obligated to follow it. No court worthy of the name would ever have rendered it in the first place.

The State of Georgia was not a party to the case in which this infamous, fraudulent decision was rendered. The State of Georgia, therefore, has no appeal in the matter.

Although Georgia was intended to be the victim of the decision of this court, which is so lacking not only in ability, but also in integrity, nevertheless the real victim is the State of Pennsylvania, upon whose citizens this convicted murderer has been released.

This is an invitation to other escaped convicts not only from Georgia but from every other State in the Union, to make Pennsylvania their haven. So long as this decision stands, it is Pennsylvania and her citizens who will have to endure them.

I offer the citizens of Pennsylvania my sympathy, and I remind them that Leon Johnson, alias Robert McMillan, a convicted murderer, now free, through decision of the Third Circuit Federal Court of Appeals, did not become a potential menace to them through any design or action on the part of the people of Georgia.

Immediately following these remarks I am inserting the decision written by Biggs in the case, and the dissenting opinion written by one of the judges of the Third Circuit Federal Court of Appeals:

LEON JOHNSON, ALIAS ROBERT MCMILLAN, APPELLANT, v. CHARLES L. DYE, WARDEN OF THE ALLEGHENY COUNTY JAIL

(United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, No. 9471, October term, 1947; appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania; argued March 18, 1948, reargued March 21, 1949, before Biggs, chief judge, and Maris, Goodrich, McLaughlin, O'Connell, and Kalodner, circuit judges)

OPINION OF THE COURT (FILED MAY 17, 1949)

By Biggs, chief judge.

The facts

The petitioner, Leon Johnson, is in the custody of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and is presently confined in the Allegheny County jail, of which the respondent, Charles L. Dye, is the warden. Johnson was indicted in the Cobb County Superior Court of the State of Georgia for the murder of one Sarah Frances Thompson, on December 6, 1942. He was tried by a jury, which found him guilty of murder with a recommendation of mercy, on January 25, 1943. Under the law of Georgia, Georgia Code Annotated, 1935, title 26, section 1005, the recommendation of the jury fixed the penalty at life imprisonment. The court thereupon sentenced Johnson to hard labor for life.[1] In June 1943 the petitioner escaped from a Georgia chain gang and eventually came to Allegheny County, Pa. Governor Arnall, of Georgia, dispatched a requisition for extradition to Governor James, of Pennsylvania, who issued an executive warrant under which Johnson was apprehended. We assume that the application for extradition was made pursuant to the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (Laws of Pennsylvania, 1941, July 8, P. L. 288, 19 P. S. Pa., sec. 191). See also the so-called Interstate Extradition Act (R. S., secs. 5278–5279, 18 U. S. C., secs. 662–663, 1940 ed.). So far as appears, Governor James did not call on the attorney general or any prosecuting officer of Pennsylvania as he was authorized to do under the act to investigate the demand made by the State of Georgia. See Laws of Pennsylvania, 1941 (P. L. 268, 19 P. S. Pa., sec. 191.4). Johnson petitioned the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County for a writ of habeas corpus at its No. 3679, April term, 1946. There is no copy of Johnson's petition to that court or the proceedings therein in the record. The court of common pleas apparently[2] refused to free Johnson and discharged the writ. The court of common pleas was under the impression that Johnson had pleaded guilty to the indictment in Georgia.[3] The decision was reviewed by the Superior Court of Pennsylvania, which affirmed the judgment of the court below (159 Pa. Super. 542, 49 A. 2d 195). No review seems to have been sought by Johnson in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania or in the Supreme Court of the United States. On November 14, 1946, Johnson petitioned the court below for a writ of habeas corpus. After the issuance of a rule to show cause on the petition and upon answers[4] filed and after a full hearing the court below filed an opinion (71 F. Supp. 262) and discharged the writ. Johnson appealed to this court.

[1] The court apparently exceeded its authority in sentencing Johnson to hard labor. The law of Georgia authorizes "confinement and labor," where the sentence includes imprisonment. See Georgia Code Annotated, title 27, sec. 2504. However, this unlawful imposition of hard labor to the sentence of imprisonment does not of itself render the sentence void so as to entitle the prisoner to discharge on habeas corpus. See Harlan v. McGourin (218 U. S. 442); United States v. Pridgeon (153 U. S. 48).

[2] No copy of the court's order is included in the present record.

[3] We make this statement because it appears from the brief of the appellee in the Superior Court of Pennsylvania on the appeal from the decision of the court of common pleas that the judge of the court of common pleas said: "I have made up my mind about it. The man [Johnson] admitted he plead guilty to murder and the proceedings are regular from my viewpoint." Johnson did state at the hearing before the court of common pleas that he pleaded guilty to the Georgia indictment. The record of the proceedings before the Cobb County Superior Court of the State of Georgia demonstrates clearly, however, that Johnson's statement was incorrect. The Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County, however, did not receive the record of the proceedings in the Cobb County Court until after it had rendered its decision against Johnson in the habeas corpus proceeding.

[4] An answer was filed for the United States by the United States District Attorney. The answer filed by the United States District Attorney states that, "The rule to show cause has not been served on the United States Attorney for this district * * * but the clerk of court seems to be of the opinion that an answer should be filed by the United States Attorney."

We must state at the outset that it is difficult to dispose of the questions of law raised by the instant appeal on the record now before us.[5] It appears, however, from Johnson's petition in the court below that the grounds asserted by him for the issuance of the writ were threefold. He alleged (1) that his constitutional rights had been violated at his trial for murder in Georgia in that several witnesses who testified against him were compelled to do so by "certain police authorities of Cobb County, Ga."; (2) that following his conviction he was "committed to a chain gang * * * and was the victim of cruel, barbaric, and inhuman treatment at the hands of his jailers to the extent that his life and health were in grave jeopardy"; and (3) that "* * * in the event he is returned to the State of Georgia to complete his unfinished sentence his life will be endangered and he fears that if he is returned there is danger that he will meet his death by mob violence and be so brutalized or tortured by his jailers that he will succumb." On March 14, 1947, Johnson amended his petition by reasserting ground (1) supra in slightly different terms and adding that the testimony of the "coerced and intimidated witnesses was material, resulted in his conviction and in truth and fact was wholly false and perjured, as the prosecuting authorities well knew." In the view that we take of this case it its unnecessary to pass upon ground (3), supra.

In the court below the petitioner supported the allegations of ground (1) by his own testimony and those of ground (2) by his own testimony and by that of other witnesses, all of whom, save one, were escaped convicts from Georgia who happened to be lodged in the Allegheny County jail. The remaining witness was a former officer in the Army of the United States who had spent a portion of his service in Georgia and who was then confined in the Allegheny County jail having previously escaped from detention in Pittsburgh following his arrest for an alleged felonious assault. The testimony of these witnesses as well as that of the petitioner established that it was the custom of the Georgia authorities to treat chain gang prisoners with persistent and deliberate brutality at or about the time the petioner was suffering punishment and for some years thereafter, certainly as late as May in the year 1946. There was also evidence which showed that Negro prisoners were treated with a greater degree of brutality than white prisoners though it is difficult to make fine distinctions as to degrees of brutality. A copy of the magazine Life, issue of November 1, 1943, in particular an article entitled "Georgia Prisons," with a subtitle "State Abolishes Old Abuses," pages 93–99, and a copy of the magazine Time, issue of September 13, 1943, in particular an article entitled "Prisons" with the subtitle "Georgia's Middle Ages," pages 23–24, were introduced in evidence. Certain other newspaper articles were introduced also but these with one exception, PM's Picture News, Magazine Section, November 2, 1947, which reports in full the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, are not in the record.[6] Several of the petitioner's witnesses in support of the petition for habeas corpus testified that the conditions described by the articles in Life and Time correctly represented certain conditions but the witnesses stated in substance that the articles did not go far enough. Irrespective of whether or not articles in magazines of national circulation are admissible as evidence, the contents of the articles referred to were employed by some of the witnesses as a basis of comparison for conditions in Georgia camps personally known to them. Because of this we may consider the contents of the articles as did the court below. Counsel for the respondent urged in the court below that the article in Life proved that the abuses of the Georgia prison system had been obliterated by the Georgia Act of 1943, Special Sess.; Title 77, Georgia Code Annotated, 1935, § 358 et seq. but this assertion, as we have stated, was contradicted in major part by certain of the petitioner's witnesses. No testimony was offered on behalf of the State of Georgia or by the respondent.

The law

As to the Alleged Coercion and Intimidation of a Witness or Witnesses

The court below in its opinion reviewed the proceedings for habeas corpus had on behalf of the petitioner in the Pennsylvania State courts and, with a reference to the limited jurisdiction conferred upon the justices and judges of the United States to enlarge a prisoner by writ of habeas corpus under sections 451, 452, and 453 of title 28, United States Code, 1940 edition (now superseded by section 2241 of revised title 28, U. S. Code), and to the cases of Mooney v. Holohan (294 U. S. 103), Pyle v. Kansas (317 U. S. 213), and Lawk v. Olson (326 U. S. 271), concluded that if the facts as alleged in the petition were shown to be true, Johnson "would be entitled to the remedy set forth in Mooney v. Holohan." The learned trial judge stated, however, "There is no evidence in this case that witnesses, who testified at his trial in the State court in Georgia were compelled to do so; there is no evidence that they gave perjured testimony, nor is there any evidence that the State of Georgia or its officers or agents, knew that perjured testimony was used against the relator." This statement of the trial court was erroneous. There was Johnson's own testimony to support his contentions in regard to the alleged perjured, coerced testimony of a witness at his trial for murder and to the knowledge of the State of Georgia through its officers in this regard. The court below may have found Johnson's testimony incredible but the learned trial judge did not say so. But in the view which we take it is unnecessary to resolve the question whether a witness was intimidated at Johnson's trial in Cobb County, Ga.

As to the Application of the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States by Implementation Under the Fourteenth Amendment

As to the second ground raised by Johnson the court below stated, "There is evidence that Johnson received cruel treatment after he had been convicted of murder and while he was serving his sentence therefor. However, such treatment would not entitle him to his liberty as it does not constitute a custody of relator in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States (28 U. S. C. 453). The eighth amendment is not a limitation upon the States (Collins v. Johnston) (237 U. S. 502, 510–511))." We deem the first sentence quoted in this paragraph to constitute a finding by the court below that Johnson had been subjected to cruel treatment following his conviction. It is obvious also that in using the phrase "cruel treatment" the court below was referring to the cruel and unusual punishment provision of the eighth amendment.

Without regard for minutiae of conclusion in the trial court's opinion, we think it misinterpreted the ruling of the Supreme Court in Collins v. Johnston, supra. While it is true that the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States limits and was intended to limit Federal action, it is the modern view, and, we feel, the correct one, that where the right protected and guaranteed under the Bill of Rights (amendments I to VIII) of the United States Constitution is "basic" and "fundamental" to the rights of life and liberty, recognized and guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, then the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from abridging or denying the right in question.

In so holding, we are not unmindful of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly declined to adopt the view that the fourteenth amendment was intended to make secure against State invasion all the rights, privileges, and immunities protected from Federal violation by the Bill of Rights (Chambers v. Florida (309 U. S. 227, 235–236, note 8); see also e. g. Twining v. New Jersey (211 U. S. 78, 98–9), Mr. Justice Harlan dissenting, 114; Maxwell v. Dow (176 U. S. 581, dissent 605, 606); Palko v. Connecticut (302 U. S. 319, 323, 325, 326); Hague v. C. I. O. (307 U. S. 496)).

But in numerous cases the Supreme Court has held that where the right invaded by the State is a basic and fundamental one, the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment include by implementation those guaranties of the Bill of Rights. E. g. freedom of speech, Saia v. New York (334 U. S. 558, 560); freedom of religion, Cantwell v. Connecticut (310 U. S. 296, 303); Marsh v. Alabama (326 U. S. 501, 508–509); freedom of the press, Lovell v. Griffin (303 U. S. 444); freedom of speech and assembly, Hague v. C. I. O., supra; the right to counsel in criminal prosecutions of those individuals, who, by reason of age, ignorance, or mental capacity, are incapable of representing themselves adequately in a prosecution of a relatively simple nature, Wade v. Mayo (334 U. S. 672, 684); and see also Powell v. Alabama (287 U. S. 45); Betts v. Brady (316 U. S. 455, 461; [8] Palko v. Connecticut, supra (302 U. S. at pp. 324–325)[9] and in particular see Francis v. Resweber (329 U. S. 459, 463), where the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Reed indicated, without expressly deciding, that violation of the principles of the fifth and eighth amendments as to double jeopardy and cruel and unusual punishment would be violative of the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment.[10]

We are not called on to decide, nor do we decide, whether the clauses of the eighth amendment relating to imposition of excessive bail, or excessive fines, fall within the ambit of the fourteenth amendment. But we entertain no doubt that the fourteenth

[5] We attempted to supplement the record brought to this court by the parties by our order of August 11, 1948, directing the clerk of the district court to transmit all records of the court below in the instant case to this court.

[6] Their absence is not adequately explained.

[8] The Court said: "The sixth amendment of the National Constitution applies only to trials in Federal courts. The due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment does not incorporate, as such, the specific guaranties found in the sixth amendment, although a denial by a State of rights or privileges specifically embodied in that and others of the first eight amendments may, in certain circumstances, or in connection with other elements, operate in a given case to deprive a litigant of due process of law in violation of the fourteenth."

[9] The Court said: "In these and other situations immunities that are valid as against the Federal Government by force of the specific pledges of particular amendments have been found to be implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, and thus, through the fourteenth amendment, become valid as against the States."

[10] Mr. Justice Burton, dissenting, stated for himself, for Mr. Justice Douglas, Mr. Justice Murphy, and Mr. Justice Rutledge: "We believe that if the facts are as alleged by the relator the proposed action is unconstitutional." Mr. Justice Frankfurter concurred in the majority opinion but did not commit himself to a definition of the reach of the fourteenth amendment.

amendment prohibits the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment by a State (Francis v. Resweber, supra). Compare Weems v. United States, (217 U. S. 349); In re Kemmler (136 U. S. 436, 447). We are of the opinion that the right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment at the hands of a State is as "basic" and "fundamental" a one as the right of freedom of speech or freedom of religion. And it should be pointed out that actions of the employees of the prison system of Georgia must be deemed to be those of the State of Georgia. The fact that a State officer acts illegally cannot relieve a State of responsibility for his acts (Screws v. United States (325 U. S. 91)).

We come then to the question as to whether the actions of Georgia prison authorities described by Johnson and his witnesses constituted cruel and unusual punishment. It will be remembered that the court below found that there was "evidence that Johnson received cruel treatment after his conviction of murder and while serving his sentence * * *." The learned trial judge did not expressly state that he found this evidence to be credible though, as we have said, the statement made by the court below in its opinion and heretofore referred to constituted a finding that Johnson had been subjected to cruel and unusual punishment following his conviction.[11] In any event upon appeal in a habeas corpus case all questions of law or fact arising upon the record, including the evidence, are open to consideration by the appellate court and the trial court has no authority to make conclusive findings of fact as in the ordinary action, Johnson v. Sayre (158 U. S. 109), and we are not bound by the conclusions of the trial court (Carruthers v. Reed, 8 Cir., 102 F. 2d 933, 937). The hearing before this court is technically de novo. It is our conclusion upon careful consideration of the record in the court below that Johnson was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment following his sentence and that this holding is in accordance, and not at variance, with that of the court below. Indeed no other conclusion would be possible in view of the known facts concerning the working of the Georgia penal system at the time of the petitioner's sentence and in consideration of the circumstance that the State of Georgia offered no testimony whatsoever in contradiction to that given by Johnson and his witnesses.

We now come to the question as to whether the treatment which Johnson alleged he received while a convict constituted cruel and unusual punishment. This question must be answered in the affirmative in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in In re Kemmler and Weems v. United States, supra. Weems, under section 56 of the Penal Code of the Philippine Islands, Act of July 1, 1902, had been guilty and had been sentenced inter alia "to the penalty of 15 years of cadena together with the accessories of section 56 of the [Philippine] Penal Code * * *." The cadena consisted of a chain at the ankle hanging from the wrists to be worn at all times. The accessories of section 56 would have deprived Weems almost completely of personal and familial rights and subjected him to constant surveillance by the authorities. The Supreme Court of the United States, by Mr. Justice McKenna, decided that the punishment was a cruel and unusual one. Accordingly the judgment was reversed and the trial court was directed to dismiss the proceedings. Though the Supreme Court has not set down any precise standard as to what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment, Wilkerson v. Utah (99 U. S. 130, 135–136), we conclude without hesitation that if Johnson was treated by the prison authorities of Georgia in the manner which he alleges,[12] he was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment by the State of Georgia. We know of no way in which degrees of cruelty may be measured coldly as if upon an altimeter, so much for the heights of cruelty, so much for the depths thereof.

The obligation of a State to treat its convicts with decency and humanity is an absolute one and a Federal court will not overlook a breach of that duty. The Supreme Court so held in effect in the Weems case though the punishment of the cadena had been imposed by a Territorial Court of the Philippines. The obligation not to inflict cruel and unusual punishment laid upon a State by the Constitution of the United States must be deemed to be positive and binding. In the Weems case cruel and unusual punishment reasonably was to be anticipated under the sentence. In the instant case, cruel and unusual punishment already has been inflicted on Johnson as the court below found. History is as potent a force as anticipation. It follows, therefore, that Johnson must be set at liberty, for the State of Georgia has failed signally in its duty as one of the sovereign States of the United States to treat a convict with decency and humanity. It must be pointed out also that she has failed also to observe the explicit mandates of her own constitution[13] which pointedly, as if the very evil here under consideration was in mind, go as far, if not farther, than those of the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

No Necessity To Exhaust State Remedies

The doctrine of exhaustion of State remedies in habeas corpus cases does not apply to extradition. This court in United States v. Superintendent of County Prisons ((1940), 111 F. 2d 409, 411, cert. den. 311 U. S. 662), stated: "The right of the State of California to demand the rendition of the relator from the State of Pennsylvania is found in Article IV, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States. This clause is not self-executing but is made effective by act of Congress [then sec. 662 of title 18, U. S. C., 1940 ed., now sec. 3182 of title 18, U. S. Code]. The Supreme Court has construed this act as placing the burden upon the governor of the asylum State to determine, before complying with the demand, whether the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime and whether he is a fugitive from justice. This determination may be made by the governor without a hearing, but if the alleged fugitive considers himself aggrieved by the order he may obtain hearing by a writ of habeas corpus. The writ may be allowed either by a State or Federal court." Citing upon the last point referred to Roberts v. Reilly (116 U. S. 80), Drew v. Thaw (235 U. S. 432), Biddinger v. Commissioner of Police (245 U. S. 128), and Hogan v. O'Neill (255 U. S. 52). It was held by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Meyering (75 F. 2d 716, 718), that if a petitioner had begun a proceeding in a State court for habeas corpus he could nonetheless discontinue that proceeding and file his petition for relief in a Federal district court. See also Twenty-second American Jurisprudence, Extradition, section 54, page 293, where it is stated: "After the governor causes, by his warrant, the arrest and delivery of a person charged as a fugitive from justice from another State, the prisoner, since he is held under color of authority derived from the Constitution and laws of the United States, may invoke the judgment of the Federal, as well as the State, tribunals on the lawfulness of his arrest and imprisonment." See also 135 A. L. R. at page 985.

In a per curiam opinion in the case of Powell v. Meyer ((1945), 147 F. 2d 606, 607), this court overruled its decision in United States v. Superintendent of County Prisons sub silentio relying upon the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Sanderlin v. Smyth (138 F. 2d 729). The Sanderlin case, however, was not in point for in that case the application for habeas corpus was made to release the petitioner from a sentence imposed by a State court and the usual rule of exhaustion of State remedies necessarily applied. As we have said, the rule of exhaustion of State remedies does not apply where habeas corpus is sought to avoid extradition. We adhere to the rule which we announced in United States v. Superintendent of County Prisons and overrule our decision in Powell v. Meyer. It follows that Johnson had the right to maintain the proceeding in the district court in the instant case and we entertain no doubt but that he is entitled to his liberty.

Accordingly the judgment of the court below will be reversed and the cause will be remanded with the direction to issue the writ and to discharge the petitioner.

O'Connell, circuit judge, concurring in part, dissenting in part:

I agree with my brethren that, just as the eighth amendment forbids the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment by the Federal Government, the fourteenth amendment includes a similar prohibition against States. Regardless of his guilt or innocence of the murder charge lodged against him, Johnson never lost—and still has—the absolute right not to be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment wherever the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law.

Further, I agree that habeas corpus may be here utilized to vindicate Johnson's constitutional right. It is not without reluctance that I reach this conclusion, however; for (1) I remain keenly aware that, because Georgia chooses to disregard the mandates of the eighth amendment and of its own constitution, this court turns loose a convicted murderer among the law-abiding citizens of Pennsylvania, a State which has expressly refused to harbor him; (2) also, I entertain considerable doubt whether an impenitent Georgia administration would be deeply grieved by a decision which permits Georgia to utilize the other 47 States as penal colonies [11] At the reargument of this case before the court en banc one of Dye's counsel, an assistant district attorney of Allegheny County, Pa., conceded that if Johnson had been subjected by the State of Georgia, following his conviction, to cruel and unusual punishment he was entitled to be discharged from custody and to go free. The assistant district attorney, however, did not concede that the court below had made a finding that Johnson had been subjected to cruel and unusual punishment.

[12] We shall not set out in this opinion the revolting barbarities which Johnson and his witnesses state were habitually perpetrated as standard chain-gang practice. To perpetuate these atrocities in an opinion is to be unfair to the American scene as a whole and to reflect little credit on this generation for posterity. It is enough to state that leg irons and most frequent beatings were among the minor constant cruelties.

[13] Article 1 of the Bill of Rights of the Georgia Constitution of 1877, readopted without amendment in 1945, provides, "Bail; fines; punishments; arrest; abuse of prisoners. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; nor shall any person be abused in being arrested, while under arrest or in prison."

for its "escaped" prisonsers.[1] I nevertheless bow to the exigencies of the situation; better it be that a potentially dangerous individual be set free than that the least degree of impairment of an individual's basic constitutional rights be permitted.

An initial difficulty with which the opinion of the majority confronts me, however, is that it not only substitutes its own finding of fact for an inconclusive statement of the court below, but also deems no conclusion possible other than that Johnson suffered cruel and unusual punishment prior to his flight from Georgia. True, several witnesses testified to "the known facts concerning the working of the Georgia penal system at the time of the petitioner's sentence"; but, in the court below, only one witness professed to actual knowledge of how Johnson, and not chain-gang prisoners in general, was treated: Johnson himself. I think that Johnson may well have told substantial truth when he described his chain-gang ordeals; and I think the district court had ample basis for making such a critical finding of fact; but I see no reason why this court should invade the province of the court below and insist that credibility be attached to Johnson's testimony. It must be recalled that the burden of proof of his allegations lay with Johnson, whose testimony is to be viewed in the light that he has a vital interest in the outcome, and who has been disbelieved by other courts.[2] The case at bar seems to me one particularly appropriate for adherence to the usual procedure of leaving the finding of facts to the court of first instance.

If I assume nevertheless that my brethren are correct in holding that Johnson did receive cruel and unusual punishment in Georgia, I believe that this alone should not be assigned as the reason for Johnson's enlargement. The record before this court contains other factors which seem to me essential to consider and pertinent to our decision. The Johnson whose fate we are determining is more than a convicted murderer in the eyes of Georgia officialdom. He is a Negro who has broken imprisonment and who has made virulent accusations against the white officials and guards of the Georgia public-works camp. In the absence of persuasive evidence of effective steps toward reform in Georgia, I think it would be ingenuous to expect those Georgia authorities to accord to Johnson's constitutional rights greater respect than this court finds was conceded to Johnson during his Georgia imprisonment. This court is in a position, therefore, where it need not, and should not declare that the drastic remedy here announced is one which will lie whenever there has been, in the past, an infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. I deem it sufficient that we invoke our power to release an individual who not only has suffered cruel and unusual punishment but also faces grave and imminent danger of like abuse and very possibly even death by extralegal means, if he is returned to Georgia.

If, nevertheless, this court must choose between past and prospective violation of a basic constitutional right as the ground for release of an individual, I should prefer to place reliance upon the latter. I think the cases support this view. Thus, in Francis v. Resweber (329 U. S. 459 (1947)), the Supreme Court of the United States entertained writs based upon the claim that execution of that petitioner would constitute cruel and unusual punishment and thereby deny him due process; and, while the court was not unanimous in either reasoning or result, all its members seem to me to have endorsed the concept that the courts may prevent threatened violations of a constitutional right like that here involved.[3] Likewise, in Weems v. United States (217 U. S. 349 (1910)), the Supreme Court, reversing a judgment because the sentence violated the bill of rights, placed great stress upon the punishment which the sentence would impose upon Weems in the future; see 217 United States at pages 366, 373, and 381. The logic of invoking the judicial power to eliminate a threatened invasion of a basic constitutional right seems to me irresistible.

As my foregoing comments indicate, I have grave doubts whether past infringement of Johnson's constitutional right would of itself entitle him to release. Were the State of Georgia actually in loco penitentiae, it might well be expected that criminal and civil sanctions could and would be applied, by effective legal process in that State, against those responsible for the cruel and unusual punishment visited upon Johnson. (Cf. In re Birdsong (39 Fed. 599 (D. C. S. D. Ga., 1889), and Howard v. Arizona (28 Ariz. 433, 237 Pac. 203, 40 A. L. R. 1275 (1925).) As far as I can see, however, it is not contended that crudities of the Georgia authorities were the equivalent of a pardon for the murder of which Johnson was convicted. For the purposes of the petition before us, the guilt or innocence of Johnson is not in issue. Also, it seems clear that the sentence of the Georgia county court, unlike that involved in Weems v. United States, supra, was not so erroneous as to entitle Johnson to discharge on habeas corpus. Consequently, still outstanding against him, and only incidentally affected by the treatment he has received, is a valid determination by properly constituted authority that Johnson be imprisoned for life. Could this penalty be served, with observance of those constitutional rights which prisoners retain (cf. Coffin v. Reichard (143 F. 2d 443, 445 (C. A. 6, 1944)), I think it would be both unwise and improper for this court to restrain Pennsylvania from honoring a request by Georgia for his extradition.

My position may be readily illustrated by a hypothetical case. Let us assume that two individuals, X and Y, are indicted on a charge of murder, that the trial judge erroneously compels them to take the stand and answer incriminating questions, and that both X and Y are convicted. Shortly thereafter, X escapes to another State, while Y appeals and obtains a reversal of the conviction. Under the majority ruling as I interpret it, X is spared the possibilities of extradition and a new trial, since a fundamental constitutional right was denied him; while Y must face trial again. Is not this an incongruous result? If the fact be added, however, that it seems likely that X or Y will be required at a new trial again to testify against himself, I can see sound reasons for a court to intervene, on behalf of either X or Y, and forbid the step which makes it possible for the fresh constitutional violation to be consummated.

For the reasons stated, I believe the judgment of the court below should be vacated and the cause remanded for a determination whether Johnson has suffered cruel and unusual punishment and would be reasonably likely to undergo similar abuse if he were returned to Georgia, the disposition of his petition to be dependent upon those critical findings.

[1] It should not be assumed too quickly that Georgia is zealous in guarding its prisoners and vigorously pressing for their extradition when they escape and flee into other States. As indications of the attitude of Georgia, I cite the following:

(a) The court below stated that about 175 other prisoners had escaped at the same time as Johnson.

(b) One of those who testified in the court below concerning the treatment given Georgia chain-gang prisoners was one Moreland, also a fugitive from Georgia justice. Judge Samuel A. Weiss, of the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County, Pa., in an opinion granting Moreland's petition for habeas corpus, recited this testimony of Moreland: "* * * that the warden observed his [Moreland's] departure and made no objections; that he proceeded to the town of Thomasville, Ga., where he received medical attention in the local jail under supervision of the chief of police. He then was released and proceeded to Atlanta, Ga., his bus fare having been paid by the chief of police."

(c) As the majority opinion notes, Johnson's other witnesses, except for one, were also escaped Georgia convicts who happened to be in the Allegheny County jail.

(d) The State of Georgia failed to express its position as to Johnson's petition, not only in the district court, but also at both hearings in this court, although in the order directing rehearing this court specifically invited the attorney general of Georgia "to appear amicus curiae and to file a brief herein if he so desires."

[2] At his murder trial in Georgia, Johnson limited his defense to his written statement alleging that the homicide was accidental; but the jury found him guilty of murder. As to Johnson's testimony in his habeas corpus hearing in the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County, the Superior Court of Pennsylvania stated that the record "affirmatively shows him to be an untrustworthy witness" (49 A. 2d at p. 197).

[3] "* * * if the proposed punishment amounts to a violation of due process of law under the Constitution of the United States, then the State must find some means of disposing of this case that will not violate that Constitution." COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 226, Rept. 652), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4567) to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include testimony given today by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and also the plan of action of the American Medical Association on the pending national health program. This may briefly exceed the statutory limit, but I ask unanimous consent that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GRANT, from May 20 to May 26, 1949, on account of official business.

To Mr. BREEN (at the request of Mr. WAGNER), for May 20, 1949, on account of official business.

To Mr. HAYS of Ohio (at the request of Mr. MCGUIRE), for May 20, 1949, on account of official business.

To Mr. YATES, for May 20, 1949, on account of official business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1535. An act to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, with respect to housing accommodations in hotels; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 23, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 23, 1949

Rev. Frederick V. Poag, minister, Second Presbyterian Church, Alexandria, Va., offered the following prayer:

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, to these servants who guide our Nation the honor of humility. Grant that they may know they not only pass judgment, but also that they are under the judgment of the Eternal.

Clarify their sense of right so that they may be able to establish the difference between constituent and conscience, between selfish determination and duty.

Grant that they may keep their faith in people. Remind them that a man can be not only shallow and despicable, but that a man is life's only expression of allegiance, love, and worship.

Restore to Thy servants the radiance of a high call so that duty will not become burdensome and monotonous routine will not supplant the ideal which holds them steadfast in their striving for Thy purpose.

These blessings we pray in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 20, 1949, was dispensed with.

REPORT OF PERSONNEL CEILINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report of personnel ceilings for the quarter ended March 31, 1949, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

WORLD FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—RESOLUTION OF NORTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, relating to a world federal government with limited powers adequate to assure peace.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 37

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States concerning certain proposed constitutional amendments authorizing the United States to negotiate with other nations relating to a world federal government with limited powers adequate to assure peace

Whereas war is now a threat to the very existence of our civilization, because modern science has produced weapons of war which are overwhelmingly destructive and against which there is no sure defense; and

Whereas the effective maintenance of world peace is the proper concern and responsibility of every American citizen; and

Whereas the people of the State of North Carolina, while now enjoying domestic peace and security under the laws of their local State and Federal Government, deeply desire the guaranty of world peace; and

Whereas all history shows that peace is the product of law and order, and that law and order are the product of government; and

Whereas the United Nations as presently constituted, although accomplishing great good in many fields, lacks authority to enact, interpret, or enforce world law, and under its present charter is incapable of restraining any major nations which may foster or foment war; and

Whereas the Charter of the United Nations expressly provides, in articles 108 and 109, a procedure for reviewing and altering the charter; and

Whereas in 1941 North Carolina was the first of many States to memorialize Congress, through resolutions by their State legislature or in referenda by their voters, to initiate steps toward the creation of a world federal government; and

Whereas several nations have recently adopted constitutional provisions to facilitate their entry into a world federal government by authorizing a delegation to such a world federal government of a portion of their sovereignty sufficient to endow it with power adequate to prevent war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That application is hereby made to the Congress of the United States, pursuant to article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a convenion for the sole purpose of proposing amendments to the Constitution which are appropriate to authorize the United States to negotiate with other nations, subject to later ratification, a consitution of a world federal government, open to all nations, with limited powers adequate to assure peace, or amendments to the constitution which are appropriate to ratify any world constitution which is presented to the United States by the United Nations, by a world constitutional convention or otherwise; and be it further

Resolved—

SEC. 2. That the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress, to the Members of the said Senate and House of Representatives from this State, and to the presiding officers of each of the legislatures in the several States, requesting their cooperation.

SEC. 3. That this resolution be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

In the general assembly read three times and ratified this the 20th day of April 1949.

H. P. TAYLOR,
President of the Senate.

KERR CRAIGE RAMSEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEIZURE OF STATE LANDS BENEATH NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a letter I have received from Attorney General of the State of Maine, and a memorial adopted by the legislature of that State, relating to Federal seizure of State lands beneath navigable waters, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and memorial were referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Augusta, May 18, 1949.

Hon. MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: On April 22 a joint resolution was passed by the ninety-fourth legislature, endorsing the legislation pending in Congress relating to the Federal Government's quitclaiming to the several coastal States' rights to the submerged lands within the 3-mile limit; and the Secretary of State informs me that he has sent you an authenticated copy with the great seal of the State thereon. I am wondering if you would be willing to have same placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If you feel that you do not want to do this, would you suggest to Robert Hale, who is very much interested in the tidelands legislation, to do so?

Walter R. Johnson, who represents the National Association of Attorneys General in Washington, wrote to me as a member of the executive committee of that association, on May 2 that he had not seen a copy in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and suggests that I contact you, asking you to put it in.

There is more interest in this matter at the present time in Maine than there has been at any time since this controversial question has been pending before Congress and the United States Supreme Court. Richard Hallet, of the Gannett papers, was in my office this morning and spent considerable time going over this proposed legislation with me and over the background of the States' rights to the tidelands.

It is a fact that our coastal States now fear that the title to their own tidelands may be clouded by the fate of those of California. As you know, the Federal Government has been granted leave by the United States Supreme Court to file actions against the States of Texas and Louisiana similar to that brought against the State of California, which was decided in June 1947; and there is no telling when an action may be filed against the State of Maine, claiming title to all our resources in the sea within the 3-mile belt, which would include lobsters, clams, and other fisheries along our Maine coast. The decree of the Supreme Court has encouraged opinions which may upset acquired titles and old procedures all along our coast.

As you know, Maine citizens and corporations have invested their capital and energy not in one but in scores of phases of our national economy, and the necessity for some action by the Congress was intimated by the court itself in its opinion in the California case, so that the adoption of the legislation now pending would not reflect in any way upon the prestige or authority of the Supreme Court of the United States, nor would it set up any new precedent.

I feel that Raymond Moley's article in Newsweek, May 2, entitled "Fair Deal Under the Sea," is a fair presentation of his opinion of the 200 Supreme Court decisions and the recognition by the United States of Texas as a Republic when it was admitted to the Union in 1845.

With best wishes and kindest personal regards,

Sincerely,

RALPH W. FARRIS,
Attorney General.

Joint resolution relating to Federal seizure of State lands beneath navigable waters

To the Members of the Maine Delegation in Congress:

Whereas the State of Maine owns and possesses more than 2,175 square miles of land beneath navigable waters within its boundaries, subject only to the Federal powers over navigation, commerce and national defense; and

Whereas State ownership of this property has been and will continue to be an important source of revenue for our State, the loss of which would be a great injury to the State and our people for whom it is held in trust; and

Whereas after over 100 years of recognized State ownership without interference with the delegated Federal powers, certain Federal officials are now suing other States for similar property and advocating Federal seizure of the lands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Maine (the senate concurring):

That the State of Maine favors continued State ownership and control, subject only to the delegated Federal powers, of lands and resources within and beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of the respective States, and requests Congress to pass suitable legislation to that end;

That the members of our delegation in Congress are hereby requested to give their active opposition to all pending and proposed measures which would create Federal ownership or control of lands, fish, or other resources beneath navigable waters within State boundaries;

That the members of our delegation in Congress are hereby requested to give their active support to legislation which would recognize and confirm State ownership of such property; and

That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each member of our delegation in Congress.

House of representatives, read and adopted, April 21, 1949; sent up for concurrence.

HARVEY R. PEASE,
Clerk.

In senate chamber, April 22, 1949, read and adopted, in concurrence.

CHESTER T. WINSLOW,
Secretary.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL MILITARY EXPENDITURES—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN TURNER DISTRICT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from Fred L. Bartels, secretary of the Wisconsin Turner District, Madison, Wis., a copy of a resolution adopted by the eighty-fourth annual convention of the Turners held in Milwaukee on May 7 and 8. The resolution urges reduction of Federal expenditures for military purposes. Naturally, I too would like to see military expenses reduced to the greatest possible extent consistent with adequate preparedness. In other words, we want to squeeze out unnecessary funds being used for wasteful purposes such as have recently been exposed by the Hoover Commission.

At the same time, of course, we want to be sure that adequate provision is made for our country's defense.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Turners' resolution be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WISCONSIN TURNER DISTRICT,
Madison, Wis., May 19, 1949.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We request you as our representative in the Congress of these United States to give earnest consideration to the following resolution passed by our eighty-fourth annual convention held in Milwaukee on last May 7 and 8:

"Whereas the United States Government has set up a budget for the next fiscal year in which over $30,000,000,000 is allocated for the past and present military expense; and

"Whereas history abundantly illustrates that overgrown military and naval establishments are a menace to our own liberties and the peace of the world: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Wisconsin Turner District call upon the Congress to reduce the expenditures for military purposes to a more reasonable proportion of our national income."

Respectfully submitted.

WISCONSIN TURNER DISTRICT,
FRED L. BARTELS, Secretary.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 23, 1949, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating Memorial Day 1949, as a day for a Nation-wide prayer for peace.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOEY:

S. 1914. A bill to provide funds for cooperation with the public school authorities of Person County, N. C., in the construction, extension, and improvement of public school facilities; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. MUNDT:

S. 1915. A bill for the relief of Viktor A. Kravchenko; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUCAS:

S. 1916. A bill for the relief of Edna A. Bauser; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (by request):

S. 1917. A bill to authorize the conversion of the Panama Canal to a sea-level waterway; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INVESTIGATION OF NEEDS OF SAN FRANCISCO BAY AREA, CALIFORNIA

Mr. DOWNEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 119), which was referred to the Committee on Public Works:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Works, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the needs of the San Francisco Bay area, California, for additional transportation arteries, bridges, causeways, and other facilities designed to advance the commerce, navigation, national defense, land reclamation, and residential and industrial development of the area, including, but not limited to, (a) the extent to which such facilities may be utilized to expand, or be combined or coordinated with facilities for expansion of, the fresh water supply of the area; (b) the extent to which such additional facilities will contribute to the national defense, navigation, flood control, irrigation of agricultural lands, the repulsion of salinity and other authorized Federal functions; (c) estimated costs of such works. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR EXECUTIVE AND SUNDRY INDEPENDENT OFFICES—AMENDMENT

Mr. LUCAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4177) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ESPIONAGE AND SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a letter which I have received from John Gilland Brunini, editor of Spirit magazine, and foreman of a recently convened special Federal grand jury of the southern district of New York.

The letter, which was accompanied by an enclosure, is self-explanatory. I ask that this letter and the enclosure transmitted with it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

This material should be of particular interest to Senators in view of the efforts now being made to secure enactment of legislation to tighten up our laws against espionage and against subversive activities of all kinds.

There being no objection, the letter and enclosure were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPIRIT,
New York, N. Y., April 27, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: You may know that the special Federal grand jury of the southern district of New York, of which I am foreman, yesterday handed up a presentment which primarily recommended legislation to tighten espionage laws. The New York Times published the presentment in full this morning. The grand jury particularly wished you to be sent a copy.

This is because we are aware of your speech in the Senate of Monday in which you also spoke very effectively of the need for such legislation.

The grand jury voted on the points made by it a number of weeks ago, and it considers that the publication yesterday might be a valuable assist to you both before your committee and the Senate itself. It would be gratifying to the grand jury if this should prove the case and if you should see fit to insert the presentment in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN GILLAND BRUNINI.

PRESENTMENT

To the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York:

Whereas the undersigned constitute all the members of the December 16, 1948, special Federal grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York impaneled to inquire into espionage and subversive activities; and

Whereas there has been presented for the past 4 months, and is being presented, before this special Federal grand jury a volume of testimony concerning activities of both foreigners and American citizens which are directed from within and without against the security of the Nation; and

Whereas this testimony and evidence have led this special Federal grand jury to certain conclusions it deems proper and imperative to be brought to the attention of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the United States Government for such action as may be necessary or appropriate, the undersigned members of this grand jury respectfully show and allege as follows:

1. The grand jury is of the unanimous opinion that the safety of this country and its institutions is being jeopardized because—

(a) increasing efforts, since the United States of America has been forced by events to take a dominant position in world leadership, have unlawfully been and are being made by those inimical to the Nation to obtain information relating to the national defense and security—information which could be used to the Nation's injury and to the advantage of foreign nations; and because;

(b) existing laws, applicable to activities aimed at unlawfully obtaining such information, are inadequate and unrealistic in view both of the Nation's position in world affairs and internal menaces from those zealously activating a philosophy hostile to our constitutional form of government.

2. This conviction was arrived at by the grand jury after hearing, over a period of 4 months, the testimony of a large number of witnesses who, irrespective of their widely differing relations to the problems under consideration, have been able to aid its investigations. Many of these witnesses have been summoned by the Department of Justice and some by the grand jury itself acting independently under its own authority as the anciently established representative of the people. They have been examined in that secrecy which is designed not only to determine those who may have violated Federal laws but to protect the rights and the reputations of the innocent.

Among these witnesses have been men charged with ferreting out violations of Federal laws and others who should be classed as Government witnesses.

Others, men and women whose integrity and innocence have not been questioned but who have had valuable information to give, have proven entirely cooperative in the grand-jury inquiries.

Still others—and the number has proven surprisingly large—themselves believed to be guiltless of direct violation of the law as it now exists, have invoked their constitutional rights to refuse to give information they indubitably possess concerning knowledge of violations by others. It has been a matter of grave concern to the grand jury that there are in this category of witnesses certain lawyers who, despite the fact that they are by virtue of their profession officers of the court, have refused to answer questions put to them by the Federal attorneys and the grand jurors on the grounds that the answers will tend to degrade or incriminate themselves. This such witnesses have unquestionably done because they have been alerted through the publicity given by other investigating bodies to the circumstances which the grand jury must examine in secrecy.

Lastly, there have been a certain number of witnesses who the grand jury is convinced, either by their own confessions or by the incontrovertible evidence of others, have violated Federal laws, but who are protected by the operation of the statute of limitations. The grand jury is powerless to indict such an individual so that he can be given a fair trial before a judge and jury with all the safeguards of such legal procedures.

3. The grand jury has been provided with many object lessons of the looseness with which laws governing espionage, the practical application of which it must determine, are at present drawn. In the light of the situations it has had to face, it believes that the safety and welfare of this country require either the enactment of new legislation or the amendment of existing legislation.

4. The grand jury, without making detailed recommendations, is nevertheless convinced that the espionage statutes themselves should be amended and tightened without meanwhile infringing on those civil rights constitutionally guaranteed our citizens. It recommends, therefore, that laws defining espionage be designed to cover all unauthorized transmission of information relating to the national defense which could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation. It further recommends provision be made that those engaged in such transmission can be prosecuted if they know the information may be used for such purposes.

The grand jury holds the crime of acting against one's own country is of such gravity and of such abhorrence to the American people that those so guilty should not be protected in any manner not provided by their constitutional rights. Accordingly it strongly recommends that provision be made to indict at any time any individual guilty of transgressing espionage statutes, now existing or to be enacted, without regard to any statute of limitation as in the case of treason.

Convinced that, despite the vigilance and the efficiency of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, increasing efforts will be made to acquire and transmit information injurious to the Nation, the grand jury holds that persons trained in espionage or sabotage by any foreign country should be required to register under the Foreign Agents Registration Act; and that failure to register under the act shall be considered a continuing offense for which the statute of limitations will not be operative. It recommends legislation to this end.

The grand jury is aware of the legislation on these and related subjects which has been proposed on the recommendations of Attorney General Clark. These recommendations were prepared in close consultation with the Interdepartmental Intelligence Committee, composed of representatives of the intelligence divisions of the Army, Navy, and Air Departments and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It urges the careful study of this proposed legislation by our legislative authorities with the view that laws be passed to achieve these objectives in the proper constitutional framework.

Having seen at first hand the difficulties in arriving at the truth concerning espionage violations when witnesses have been alerted by publicized charges and counter charges, the grand jury recommends that all investigating bodies conduct their inquiries into espionage in secret.

The grand jury further recommends that an investigation be made by the proper authorities, by bar associations and other similar bodies, to determine those measures that may be taken to disbar from practice in the courts any lawyer who, appearing before any grand jury, refuses to answer questions on the grounds of self-incrimination. It is obvious that if such grounds exist the lawyer is not of that integrity which the American people should demand of all officers of the court.

Now, therefore, the grand jury respectfully petitions the court to accept this presentment and order it filed, authorizing the foreman and the secretary of this grand jury to send copies of it to the Members of Congress and to the proper officers of the executive department of the Government, and to permit such other use as may properly be made of this document.

APPRECIATION OF GI BILL OF RIGHTS—LETTER BY WILLIAM M. RAINES

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, a few days ago I received a letter from a young man who is graduating this year from the Nebraska College of Engineering, in which he expressed his eternally grateful appreciation of what his Government had done to assist him in getting a college education. While addressed to three members of the Nebraska congressional delegation, it is equally appropriate to all Members, for the GI bill of rights was sponsored by many of us and supported by practically all Members. The letter comes from Mr. William M. Raines, living in Huskerville, a portion of Lincoln made available to former servicemen and their families while attending school.

The letter is very short, and with the permission of the Senate I should like to read it into the RECORD. It is dated May 19, 1949, from apartment 307–C, Huskerville, Lincoln, Nebr. The letter is addressed to Senator HUGH BUTLER, Senator K. S. WHERRY, and Representative C. T. CURTIS, Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C., and is as follows:

DEAR SIR: I do not know how to express my appreciation to all the Members of Congress for the GI bill of rights, nor do I remember which Congress it was which, while I was overseas, passed this bill. I do want to express my gratitude to my own Congressmen at this time in the hopes that they will express these sentiments to the other Congressmen responsible.

On June 6 this year I will be graduated from the University of Nebraska College of Engineering. Without the benefits which the GI bill provided I would have been unable to finish my college work, since I had been married during my military service.

This letter is merely a testimonial to the effect that I am eternally grateful to my Uncle Sam.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM M. RAINES.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. HUMPHREY asked and obtained consent for a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service to meet this afternoon.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE FORMER SECRETARY OF DEFENSE, JAMES V. FORRESTAL

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the whole Nation has suffered a great degree of shock in learning of the untimely death of James Forrestal, recently our first Secretary of Defense. Mr. Forrestal came to Washington, I believe, just prior to our entry into World War II, as Under Secretary of the Navy, when the Honorable Frank Knox occupied the position of Secretary of the Navy. From the very beginning he devoted himself with intelligence, comprehension, tenacity, and patriotism to the duties that are inherent in our national defense.

With the passing of Secretary Knox he became the Secretary of the Navy, and both as the Under Secretary and as the Secretary he visited many of the theaters of actual fighting during the course and conduct of the war, and by his contact with the men in these areas and by the knowledge he gained there, rendered unusual and outstanding service in the direction of the Naval Establishment toward the great successes which crowned its efforts in bringing our enemies to defeat.

When it became advisable, after the war was over, to take new stock of our defense set-up, and when in pursuit of that objective the Unification Act was passed by the Congress, the President sought far and wide for a man who could discharge the extraordinarily difficult duties of this new approach to our national defense. Finally Mr. Forrestal, because of his record, because of his knowledge, and because of his particular talents, was designated to be the first Secretary of Defense and to preside over the initial undertakings of the unification of the armed services.

There was more title than there was power in the original Unification Act. The people assumed all that was needed to achieve unification had been incorporated in that law. This was an erroneous assumption. Naturally the services themselves wanted to be cautious in embracing a new procedure for the defense of our country. So the original Unification Act was largely a matter of give-and-take and compromise. The new Secretary of Defense did not have the authority which the public assumed he had to take many of the necessary steps. But even under those handicaps James Forrestal performed a magnificent service in gradually bringing about much of the unification we have come to know, in the temperate, judicial, and yet hard-hitting manner which was characteristic of all his activities.

This morning I talked with his successor, Mr. Louis Johnson. He indirectly paid Mr. Forrestal a great compliment. He said that since he had been Secretary of Defense, succeeding Mr. Forrestal, he had become aware of many acts which Mr. Forrestal had performed, and many policies he had promulgated, which had never been given publicity, but which in their nature were of great benefit in the unification of the armed services, in the gradual increase of efficiency therein, and in the ability of the armed services to work together in the common defense of the country. He said that Mr. Forrestal kept those things to himself; that while he performed many fine acts, many of them were never made known to the public. I think that is a great tribute to the modesty of a man who occupied one of the highest positions in our Government, who performed outstanding service, and who nevertheless was content to let the service speak for the work he had done, rather than to proclaim that work by his own lips.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee during all the time he served as Under Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Defense, I had many opportunities to work with and observe Mr. Forrestal. He was kindly and patient, never bitter, determined only when determination was essential to the accomplishment of a worthy purpose. He had a sensitivity that few ever gave him credit for. He was part poet and part warrior. From many angles he was one of the most misunderstood men I have ever seen in public life. He was supposed to have had a rather hard-boiled nature, when in truth he was extremely sensitive. He was always considerate of others, and had a degree of kindness for friend and foe alike that I do not believe I have encountered in any other public servant in my lifetime.

His monument, of course, will be the foundation stone which he himself laid, upon which will be erected, I hope, in this session and in other sessions, a more secure America, which will protect all our people and shed its benign influence over the oppressed, wherever they may be all over the world, giving them hope that, however dark the days they are passing through, whatever burdens they may be carrying, the great, strong, vital United States of America, largely brought to that state by the untiring and patient efforts of James Forrestal, offers promise of a new day and a new concept of the dignity of the ordinary man all over the globe.

Mr. President, I cannot begin to express, I know, what is in the heart of every Member of Congress who had the happy privilege of knowing Mr. Forrestal; the depth of our sorrow, our sense of immeasurable personal loss, and the sympathy which goes out to his wife and son in their great bereavement. But I do feel that with the passing of time, in spite of the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" which bedeviled him, particularly in his later years, in the form of unwarranted carping and quite often uninformed criticism, through the mist of prejudice, and perhaps jealousy, the shining example of a man fighting modestly with courage and patriotism to serve his country will emerge in its true proportions, and that more than ever in the passing days we shall come to look upon James Forrestal as not only a great American, but one who contributed in the fullest measure all that he had of talent, heart, and experience to the greatness of the country he loved so much.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I deeply mourn the death of James Forrestal. Although I had known him before the war, I came to have a particularly deep appreciation of his public service when I was sponsoring legislation in 1947 to establish a commission on the organization of the executive branch. At that time I was struck, perhaps more than I have been before or since, by one man's knowledge of government, and was greatly aided by Mr. Forrestal's help to me on that measure. In fact, the testimony which was presented at that time showing the extreme difficulty of controlling expenditure in the individual departments of Government was entirely the result of his analysis and help.

There is tragic irony in the fact that the new provisions for budgetary control which are in the pending bill relating to the armed services, and of which we rightly expect so much in the way of economy, are in a very real sense the product of Mr. Forrestal's thinking.

His work in the Navy Department was in every way superior. As Secretary of Defense he accomplished many fine things, many difficult, challenging things, and laid the groundwork for other fine things to come. In fact, even a bare enumeration of just a few of his achievements as Secretary of Defense is impressive.

He was a man of great intelligence, of extraordinary powers of analysis and penetration. He had courage and vision, rare warmth, unselfishness, and sweetness of nature. By every human standard he was a great success.

My sympathy goes out to his family. The country has lost a brilliant and useful public servant, and I have lost a valued friend.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is with the greatest difficulty that I speak of my dear personal friend who has so tragically crossed the Great Divide.

His was a precious soul, which loved the finest things of spiritual culture, and which reveled in the idealism which are our priceless inheritance. His was a brave and humble soul, courageous always in facing the difficult duties he so ably administered—humble always in his mild and gentle relationships with his fellow men. He was a great and reliable public servant, who literally lived his patriotic creed of faithful citizenship, and who literally died for his country.

With eternal affection and respect, and with gratitude for the privilege of his intimate friendship, I bid him hail and farewell. His eternal monument is in our hearts, and in the destiny of his country.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to add a very brief word of tribute to the memory of James Forrestal.

I first became acquainted with him when I was in the War Production Board in 1942. I met him at weekly conferences. I saw him vigorously supporting the views of the Navy Deupartment—but not vigorously in the sense of being narrow-minded. Not only in connection with the problem of the armed services, but in connection with the general problem of supply which developed, I saw him become preeminently the man in those conferences who took the point of view of the whole problem with which we were faced.

I met him later in certain special assignments with which he honored me in connection with the work of the Navy Department. The relationship continued since I have come to Washington. The acquaintanceship was close. I feel it not too much to say that from my standpoint, at least, and I believe from his, it ripened into friendship.

I wish to add to what has been said here my testimony to the fact that this man, who appeared to be a scrappy little fighter—which he was—was also a man of very great sensitiveness. It can be no surprise to anyone who knew him to learn that his last act before death was to copy a passage from one of the tragedies of Sophocles. That was in the nature of the man.

I, too, believe, and wish to put on record my firm conviction, my firm knowledge, that this man gave everything he had to his country, and drained himself dry in the process. More than that, no man can do.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington does not consider himself to have been an intimate or family friend of the late James Forrestal; but we were good friends, and I am deeply distressed by his untimely passing. I shall always consider him to have been a noted American who was endowed with a singular and full measure of character, capacity, and courage. My brief time in the Nation's Capital has been made more worth while, enlightened and possessed of purpose because I was so fortunate as to have been reasonably close to Mr. Forrestal.

In this magnetic and magnificent city of Washington, D. C., which is in fact the Capital of our world and in which is blended a mixture of integrity and insincerity, courage and cowardice, character and shallowness, honest words and muck raking, faith and godlessness, purpose and futility, purity and venom, Jimmy Forrestal stood forth in the rigid strength of his character as a giant among pigmies. His patriotism and his devotion to the needs of his country were as unsoiled and without blemish as similar virtues possessed by any American who has ever lived.

Our future is the more promising and secure because of the unselfish contributions which Jimmy Forrestal offered so fully and freely to his Government, which is but a reflection of us all. Jimmy Forrestal was a leader who produced and inspired leadership from others. He was a total man in every conceivable way.

Mr. Roscoe Drummond, chief of the Washington Bureau of the Christian Science Monitor, recently wrote about the case of James Forrestal. This article is warm and sympathetic, but disinterested and objective in treatment. It seems to me that as we think about the future without James Forrestal, we should reflect on the past in which he played a role which was positive and clear. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Drummond's reflections, which may provide a slight degree of satisfaction to a grieving family, be included in my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CASE OF JAMES FORRESTAL

(By Roscoe Drummond)

WASHINGTON.—It is gratifying to be able to report that James Forrestal is making substantial progress toward recovering from the job fatigue which he experienced following his resignation as Secretary of Defense.

The case of Mr. Forrestal may well help all Americans to a better understanding—indeed, to a somewhat fuller gratitude—for public officials who make great sacrifices to serve the Government and are rewarded in large part by an inverse ratio of abuse and criticism.

It is the most commonplace remark today to say that the American Government is the unquestioned leader of the free world, that its position is one of eminence, that its responsibilities were never so many and so vast.

But what is less appreciated is that it takes leaders to produce leadership; that it takes able, talented administrators to enable the Government to do its job well in justice to itself and in justice to the world. Eminence cannot be maintained in a vacuum.

James Forrestal was one of those administrators who helped the Nation win the war and who helped to give the Government the talent and the intelligence and the drive to enable it to meet the test of postwar leadership which was thrust upon it.

Along with other Washington correspondents, I have watched Mr. Forrestal at pretty close range from the day he became Secretary of the Navy when the Allied war effort was hardly under way in 1942 until he left the President's Cabinet a month ago to take a well-earned vacation and return to private business. During this period I know of no high official who devoted himself to serving the Government more competently, more tirelessly, more selflessly than Mr. Forrestal. He worked too hard, he worked too long; and when he came to retire, he didn't know how to let up.

Mr. Forrestal would be the last to consider himself a martyr. He enjoyed his job and he found the rewards of accomplishment thoroughly compensating. But through it all Mr. Forrestal was the target of a great deal of purposeful criticism, unsupported, as too many of our public officials are, by any genuine, public appreciation of what it means to serve the Government.

And then, after suffering an acute breakdown following his resignation, one broadcaster, whose voice is heard by millions, crassly circulated the rumor that Mr. Forrestal was insane during the latter weeks of his service and that the safety of the Government requires that his decisions be promptly investigated.

Readers of State of the Nation know that I have had my disagreements with the Secretary of Defense and that, therefore, I am not interested in defending any particular actions which Mr. Forrestal may have taken.

What I want to report is that, after the most thorough first-hand investigation, I find no basis whatsoever for the accusation and rumor that Mr. Forrestal's subsequent break-down was reflected at any point to any degree in any of the decisions, actions, or policies which he authorized during the strenuous several months before he felt it necessary to step down.

During these months he worked in close and almost continuous relationship—and harmony—with his successor, Louis Johnson. During this period there is no doubt that Mr. Forrestal grievously overworked himself, remaining at his office from early morning until after midnight day after day in his earnest desire to leave matters as well advanced as possible upon his retirement.

Mr. Forrestal did sacrifice himself—but he did not disserve his Government. Today some underlings in the armed services, responding to the rumor circulated in the broadcast, are insinuating that Mr. Forrestal's latter decisions, which they happened not to like, should be reviewed—in the hope that they can get them reversed to suit their purposes. Such tactics will get nowhere with Secretary Johnson, who is quick to sense what is behind them and who, furthermore, was intimately aware of every action that was being taken in the Department for many weeks before he took over.

Now, Mr. Forrestal will survive his critics and their criticism. What makes his case important is that there is every reason to consider it in degree a symptom of one of the real problems in Government today. The pressure, the strain, the tension are tremendous and, as Mr. Churchill remarked in his MIT address, the nerves of our leaders must remain calm and strong if we are to win the battle of the peace.

Spiritual-minded people are aware that our public officials need and deserve our support in the faithful discharge of their office. This is not a partisan duty; it is a human and humane duty. This is the duty which the founder of this newspaper, Mary Baker Eddy, counseled should be discharged when she urged all to pray that the divine presence should "guide and bless our Chief Magistrate, those associated with his executive trust, and our national judiciary; give to our Congress wisdom, and uphold our Nation with the right arm of His righteousness." (Christian Science versus Pantheism 14:14.)

The need for such support is great today.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, a feeling of tranquillity, contentment, and peace has come at long last to Jimmy Forrestal; and I, in company with his many many admiring and devoted friends, am glad. The poisoned pens and unclean suspicions of those who were mean and little, uninformed and jealous, unpatriotic and destructive, will be heard no more. Those who live like vultures on the red blood of men who are true patriots must look elsewhere now for a new victim. Jimmy Forrestal has left for them, and for our Nation and our world, his legacy of a public record of achievement and good which is wholly unassailable. Jimmy Forrestal has left behind him his friends whose privilege it will be to keep the record straight and untarnished for all time. Jimmy Forrestal has gone to a paradise which no man is better qualified to enter, or more deserving of membership. Those who bid him welcome will find him to be a companion worth having, and better yet, worth knowing.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, while driving home yesterday afternoon from a visit to a friend in Maryland, I noticed that the flag at the United States Naval Hospital at Bethesda was flying at half mast. I was shocked when I learned that it had been lowered as a tribute to the memory of a great American, former Secretary of Defense Forrestal.

Shortly after James Forrestal came to Washington and assumed his duties as Under Secretary of the Navy, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] gave a breakfast, one Sunday morning, to which he was good enough to invite me. There, for the first time, I met Jim Forrestal. I was attracted to him. My next contact with him was when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in behalf of the Renegotiation Act. I heard all the witnesses who appeared in behalf of the first Renegotiation Act before those of us who were members of that committee; and realizing from my previous study of taxes how difficult and technical it was, I was deeply impressed with the grasp of the subject exhibited by Under Secretary of the Navy Forrestal.

Throughout the period of the war I had more contacts, both officially and socially, with James Forrestal, of the Navy, and John McCloy, of the Army, than with any other two men connected with the war effort. It will be recalled that Assistant Secretary of the Army McCloy was in charge of the training program for the Army. He directed the training of what is now conceded to have been the greatest Army that any nation in all history put on the field of battle. By the same token, Mr. President, James Forrestal, first as Under Secretary of the Navy and then as Secretary of the Navy, helped to develop for us the greatest Navy the world has ever known. Those two branches of our military force, supplemented, of course, by the Air Force, which was not then an independent unit, fighting against what at times seemed to be insuperable handicaps, won for us the greatest war in which we have ever been involved.

For me the raising of the flag on Iwo Jima symbolizes the type of courage and skill which our Navy and our Marine Corps manifested, as well as the great hardships they endured, during the campaigns of the Pacific. I have seen that battle-scarred flag. I have met two of the Marine sergeants who helped to raise that flag on Iwo Jima. I keep a reproduction of it on the mantlepiece in my office so that I may never forget, so long as I serve in the Congress of the United States, that our freedom was purchased at a price. I shall never forget the Sunday morning when, without knowing what the program was going to be, I tuned in my radio and heard James Forrestal speaking from Guam after we had raised our flag on Iwo Jima. I was thrilled, that Sunday morning, immediately after the successful landing, to hear what he had to say. It showed the spirit of the man, Mr. President—a man who had become a leader in the financial world and independently wealthy before he was 40 years old, a man who had come to Washington to devote his splendid talents, without thought of what it might do to him physically, to the winning of a great war, and to a program to make peace a reality, after the fight for peace that had been waged on the battlefield.

As an evidence of the spirit of the man, of his willingness to give to others credit for an achievement which his leadership had made possible and of the fact that his ambition was merely to excel in service to his day and generation, I ask unanimous consent that James Forrestal's address over the radio that morning, February 25, 1945, from Guam, may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Up the precipitous side of a 600-foot extinct volcano, so precipitous that it seemed almost vertical, went a platoon of American marines. Even through a glass they seemed tiny figures scrambling skyward against a background of blue. And then a few minutes later, from the thousands of throats, upon ships, on land and on the sea came the sudden cry, "There goes the flag."

That was how the Stars and Stripes went up in the first island of Japan's outer rim of island defenses. It was at 11, Friday, February 23, 9, Thursday night, New York. We saw that flag going up halfway on the journey to shore with Lt. Gen. Holland Smith, of the United States Marines. It was the high point in a week of hard fighting, fighting which continues and will continue for some days to come. The Japs don't want to lose Iwo Jima. It's the first step in a sequence of doom for their homeland. They have put into it every kind of defense and they have had years to plan that defense.

As you know by now, Iwo Jima is a tiny island 5 miles by 2½, coming to a tapering point at its southern end. Its terrain, unlike that of some other atolls we have taken, rises some distance from the sea, Mount Suribachi, where our flag went up on Thursday, being its highest point. Its beaches are soft volcanic ash, so loose and crumbling that one marine said it was like trying to dig a fox hole in a bag of wheat.

The Japs took full and skillful advantage of that terrain and of the fact that there could be no technical surprise as to where an enemy would land. We had to land on the beaches and it had to be a frontal assault. They had planted mortars, rocket-gun emplacements, and artillery all over that grim and barren island, so that there were streams of converging fire at the beachhead on which the marines had to come scrambling in from the sea.

Iwo Jima had had a powerful working over even before the 800 ships of Vice Admiral Turner's expeditionary force launched their attack 1 week ago today. It had been hit by the bombers of the Army Air Force for 70 days in succession. Three days before D-day our battleships, our cruisers, and our destroyers pounded the island with naval gun fire. Each day since then they have poured thousands of tons of 16-, 14-, 8-, 6-, and 5-inch shells into its defenses. Even the 40-millimeter antiaircraft guns have been employed against that shore line. The escort carriers put on air strikes with torpedo planes, dive bombers, and rockets, sometimes as many as 20 missions a day. And just to help out in between their missions of bombing Japan the planes of the fast carriers of Admiral Spruance's Fifth Fleet, as well as some of the battleships of that same aggregation of power, joined up after their first raid on Japan to contribute to the pounding. All of this tremendous weight of metal thrown at Iwo Jima did not extinguish its defenses.

The Japs, as they had done at Tarawa and at Kwajalein and at Saipan and Guam, had deep burrows under the shelving ridges of Mount Suribachi and caves along the rising shore line to the north. Some of these caves had connecting galleries and they will be taking dead Japs, and some live Japs even, out of them probably for many weeks to come.

But in spite of all the skill of the Japanese defenses, the marines went ashore and they have exacted since a 4-to-1 toll in death from our enemies.

Let me interject here that the tremendous stream of metal thrown on Iwo Jima sharpens again the necessity for the continued output of munitions in our plants at home. Only because of that rain of metal could the island be reduced at all. Because of it our ratio of losses is far less than it otherwise would have been.

As Fleet Admiral Nimitz has said, it was our policy in the past to have an unstoppable margin of power in these attacks—a steam roller, as he puts it. That steam roller saves us many lives. It will take the output, however, of many factories and hard work by all hands in those factories for months to come if we are to keep that edge of power.

I came from Iwo Jima by destroyer to this island of Guam—now, you might say, the Times Square of the Pacific. In the 7 months since we landed Guam has been transformed. The Seabees have built 150 miles of roads. They put in airfields; they built hospitals, and are now building a naval drydock. The Navy has restored the native villages and 20,000 of these amiable people have trouped back from the hills to take up life again in villages that have been made available to them by the Americans. And churches have been reestablished; 6,000 of their children are attending schools with native teachers. They are violently pro-American.

America is on the march in the Pacific—a march back to civilization, order, and decency. You can see it in islands like Guam and Saipan; you can see it in the glad and serene faces of the natives who again are clean and well fed.

The way back is being cleared by fighting men from every State in our Union—bluejackets, marines, soldiers, and airmen. You can be confident of them (of naval airmen who have done a tremendous job in this Iwo Jima operation, of the Marines, of the Army forces. And you can be confident of their leaders—of men like Fleet Admiral Nimitz, Vice Admiral Turner, Lieutenant General Harmon, Lt. Gen. Holland Smith, Major General LeMay, of the Twenty-first Bomber Command, and finally of that glorious aggregation of fighting men, the Fifth Amphibious Corps of the Marines, which, under Lt. Gen. Harry Schmidt's direction, is leading the fighting at Iwo Jima.

It's a great team, and Americans can be proud of it and of the country that produced them.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I share the sorrow, Mr. President, of all who knew Jim Forrestal. We do not have enough men like him. His memory always will be green and fresh in my heart. I mourn his untimely passing. Yes; it was a great team, and he was its captain.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, it is very difficult to add to what has already been so well and ably said by my colleagues about James Forrestal. But as one who knew of him through mutual friends long before I had the honor of meeting him, I admired the manner in which he educated himself through his own hard work and intellectual capacity, the manner in which he built himself up to a position of responsibility in the business world, and finally, the manner in which he performed his great work as a public servant in one of the most difficult times in the history of our country.

I first met James Forrestal when he came into the office of the Governor of Massachusetts in Boston on business connected with the Navy, the work of Navy procurement. One thing that has not been mentioned that can be added to his record is the initiation by him and Judge Patterson of the so-called Army and Navy E award in the field of procurement, a simple award which in itself cost the Government nothing but which gave so much honor and prestige to the workers and management of factories, and which added much impetus to the procurement of war material when it was most needed.

After coming to Washington I came to know James Forrestal as a friend and to him I went many times for advice and for his confidential judgment. As a member of the Committee on Armed Services I noticed, with admiration, how unobtrusively but effectively he performed the highly important public duties entrusted to him. I noted his fine judgment and his power of decision.

Mr. President, in the death of James Forrestal not only have we, as Members of the Senate, lost a man whom we respected and admired but one whom we had come to know as a personal friend.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I had never known Mr. Forrestal until he came to Washington, which I think was about 1940. I believe I have never met a finer man. From the very beginning of our friendship, which existed down to the time of his untimely death, he was courteous always, kindly always, helpful always, thinking only of his country, thinking only of doing good to his country and to his fellow men.

As it always seemed to me, the two outstanding characteristics of James Forrestal were, first, perhaps, his courage, and, second, his perfect gentlemanliness. He was a gentleman without fear and without reproach, if there ever was one. I am proud that I knew him in this life. He was a great statesman, he was a great Secretary of Defense. He was a remarkable man. I take the greatest pleasure in saying I feel that I have lost a great friend, a man whom I admired greatly, a man who was an American all the way through. I am deeply sorry at the loss of such a man.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should feel remiss if I did not avail myself of this opportunity to make public profession of my own tribute to the memory of Jim Forrestal. As the President has so fittingly suggested, another gallant soldier has fallen with his face to the foe, in the service of his country.

I am proud that I could call him friend. If it be not an abuse of confidence, Mr. President, I might say that I am especially proud that not so very long before he left his high office as Secretary of Defense he honored me with the request that I incorporate in the RECORD a refutation of some of the unjust charges which had been made against his integrity and his public service. I was honored to tell him that I would gladly do so, for no man with justice could impugn the integrity, the fidelity, or the patriotism of Jim Forrestal.

Mr. President, it is the happy consolation of our faith that now, on the other side of the River, under the shade of the trees, Jim Forrestal has the tender care of a loving Father, the joyful company of spirits kindred to his sensitive soul, and, finally, peace from his torment which he so eagerly sought.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, America has lost its foremost guardian of our national defense. It has lost the man who forced the welding of foreign policy and military preparedness. It has lost the man who has done the most to thwart the march of men who dreamed of world conquest. It has lost a man who has done the most to remove the threat of war and make possible the groundwork for realistic peace based upon mutual respect, rather than surrender by appeasement. It has lost James V. Forrestal, preeminent patriot.

An editorial in the March 30, 1949, issue of the Portland (Maine) Evening Express admirably summarizes the great record of James V. Forrestal as the first Secretary of Defense. I ask unanimous consent that it be included with my remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORRESTAL'S GREAT RECORD

The ground has been well prepared for America's new Secretary of Defense, Louis A. Johnson, by the able, hard-worked and hard-working man who has just relinquished that post—James V. Forrestal.

Mr. Forrestal, in his 18 months as Defense Secretary, did his job well despite the needlings of petty critics whose sum total of calumnies added up to one of the most virulent smear campaigns directed against any man in public life in recent years.

The yammer boys worked themselves into terrible fits of spite against Forrestal, smearing him as a "Wall Streeter," as an "international banker," as an opponent of many phases of the New Deal—not that there is anything necessarily evil about being any of those things; yet the fact that Forrestal had indeed done some international banking, that he had undeniably been a "Wall Streeter" and that not all phases of New Dealism filled him with joy and gladness made him a convenient whipping-boy for the more blatantly Russophile of his commentator-columnist critics.

But what were the solid achievements of this much-smeared "Wall Streeter" during his 18 months as Secretary of Defense? The record shows the following outstanding accomplishments:

1. The working out of a unified procedure for handling defense legislative matters, giving control to the Office of Defense.

2. The issuance of orders abolishing the separate public-relations branches of Army, Navy, and Air Force, and the substitution, for them, of a single office under the Defense Secretary.

3. The ground work laid for a single budget and spending-control system for all branches of the armed forces.

4. The merging of all armed forces' air transport. (The consolidation of sea transport is being effected and similar plans for land transport are making progress.)

5. Good progress has been made toward joint procurement of supplies for all branches of the service.

6. A modern code of military justice for all of the services has been prepared and is currently before Congress.

7. A comprehensive civil defense system has been worked out.

8. A new pay system for the armed forces, basing compensation on responsibility rather than on length of service, has been drafted.

9. A top-level board, under the Defense Secretary, has been set up for the independent evaluation of new weapons and weapon systems sponsored by any one service.

10. There have been the Key West and Newport conferences, to assign roles to the armed forces—as that of responsibility for strategic bombing, to the Air Force, and for antisubmarine warfare to the Navy.

11. A start has been made in the direction of a realistic integrated Reserve program for the armed forces.

12. Army, Navy, and Air Force have been rebuilt from the weakened condition into which they had been permitted to lapse following demobilization. And there has been a healthy soft-pedaling of the West Point-Annapolis old-school-tie rivalry and an emphasis upon replacing that attitude with a broader and deeper loyalty: to the armed forces of the United States.

13. Finally, there have been the recommendations for strengthening the Unification Act, and the recalling of General Eisenhower to serve as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. Forrestal, while the hate-mongers and two-bit critics were busily trying to smear him, was, for his part, doing a great job for our country. The above record speaks for itself. It provides a solid foundation upon which his successor may build.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I should like to add just a word with regard to the late Secretary of Defense, inasmuch as I served with him in the President's Cabinet for 3 years. It happened that during two of those years I sat side by side with him at Cabinet meetings. I met him on many other occasions, because we had the habit of meeting at the White House for luncheon on Mondays and meeting in a small group again on Thursdays. I can testify that he was not only a brilliant man, but he was a kindly man and a gentleman. I remember many occasions when we were on the river together, and other occasions when we were meeting in conference. I like to remember the pleasant side of him, because if anything happened in a meeting which had even the slightest possibility of developing a smile, I can remember his turning to me and exhibiting a side of him which reflected the brilliance of his mind and the readiness of his wit.

Mr. President, it is too bad that a man like that should have been subjected to some of the things to which he was subjected.

It happened that on the other side of me sat the former Secretary of Labor, Mr. Schwellenbach. I think I can say to the Senate that I saw Lou Schwellenbach die, not suddenly, as did the Secretary of Defense, but slowly, day by day, as he worked at his task. He died of a broken heart, watching the Department of Labor, which he loved, dismembered and scattered around the Washington landscape.

The passing of Mr. Forrestal was quite different. I think, when full evaluation can be made of the manner in which he approached his duties, the belief he had that people would be brought together in unity when they realized the importance of their combined tasks, that in the judgment of history he will be given the great place in the record of these years of war and peace which I am sure he deserves.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I can hardly add anything to what has already been said in tribute and respect to our departed friend and a great American statesman. I became acquainted with Mr. Forrestal after I came to the Senate, and at a time when I was serving as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Mr. Forrestal was then Secretary of the Navy. I quickly formed a very high opinion of his qualities and character. This opinion soon grew into a strong personal admiration which has continued to this time. After he became Secretary of Defense, and after the act was passed, creating the Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, it was my pleasure to serve with him on that Commission, which has recently concluded its work. In those positions, in which I had opportunity to observe and work with him, I was able to recognize his extraordinary qualities, his great depth of capacity, and his comprehensive knowledge of affairs of state. I know of no one in the executive branch of the Government, occupying a similar position, who, I feel, has made a greater contribution to our Government during the period in which he served it.

I simply add this for the RECORD, because I have said it on a number of occasions to friends, and I have said it in public addresses, that I regarded James Forrestal as one of the most able men in the executive branch of our Government, and one who was wholly devoted and consecrated to his duties and responsibilities as an able and faithful public servant.

I shall miss him. I regret deeply and sorrowfully that he will no longer be with us. But, Mr. President, the work he has done will live on. James Forrestal was a great patriot, a sterling American, and, truly, Mr. President, as was expressed by the President of the United States, he gave his life in the service of his country.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to join with my colleagues, especially those who were the personal friends of James Forrestal, in the tributes which have been paid to him this morning. I also wish to extend to his family my deepest sympathy.

I should like to add just a few words. It seems to me that when the future history books of America shall be written, the life of James Forrestal will occupy a place of glory. He was not only a great statesman and a great public servant, but a great American. Many fine things have been said about his work as an official and his qualities of statesmanship.

I should like to say a few words regarding James Forrestal as a man. After all, it is in our everyday living that we come close to each other, and, therefore, from that aspect I wish to pay tribute to him.

I knew James Forrestal before I came to the Senate. I knew him as one who was in the Government's procurement service. I think scarcely a week went by that the chairman of the Small Business Committee and the Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation did not contact his office with reference to some small-business man, in trying to help him to keep his business alive during the period of the war. On all those occasions I was treated with great courtesy by James Forrestal. He never was irritated. He was most cooperative. He gave us great consideration even though the heavy duties which were confronting him required all his time. I considered him then and have since considered him a man of the highest integrity, who was loyal to his convictions. He had deep convictions, which he applied in his daily life. More than that, Mr. President, he was absolutely honest. When James Forrestal gave his word, it was as good as his bond.

Remembering the very fine thoughts expressed by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], let me say today that all is well with James Forrestal. He is in that land of the Great Beyond, and his capacity to enjoy the things of Heaven has been increased because of the personal service he has rendered not only to the administration of the Government of the United States, but the entire American people, in the life and service he has given. He gave his all.

Mr. President, that is my tribute to James Forrestal, and, as I said in the beginning, I should like to be associated with those who extend to his family our deepest sympathy. Our country has lost a faithful, able, courageous leader, but his spirit continues as a beacon to others.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have been inexpressibly shocked and grieved at the passing of our distinguished friend, James Forrestal. It was my good fortune to know him rather intimately. I had a great admiration for his ability and for his administrative capacity in the various high stations which he occupied.

James Forrestal possessed many personal qualities which endeared him to those with whom he was intimately associated. He was a great Cabinet member. He was not a publicity seeker. He gave unstinting devotion to the duties which came to him, and he discharged them admirably and with great ability.

He was a man who made his own way in the world regardless of the criticisms which were directed at him from some quarters. He came from the great middle class, and before he became an officer of the Government he had attained distinction and great prominence in his chosen field.

I wish to pay my tribute to the memory of James Forrestal. I express my deep and abiding sympathy for his family, and I say these few words in tribute to a great man, a splendid citizen, a loyal and devoted friend, one whose memory will be cherished by millions of people in the United States and beyond its borders.

Mr. President, I lay a wreath on the tomb of James Forrestal.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I cannot add to the beauty of the tributes which have already been paid to James Forrestal, but I did not feel that I could let this occasion pass without saying that I, too, had occasion to work with him during his public career, and that I never came in contact with a more intelligent, a more hard-working, a more honest man in public life.

The record of James Forrestal will speak for itself. My great regret at this time is that the beautiful tributes which have been paid him today were not made at a time when he could have known about them, and known what the people and the Congress of the United States really thought about him and about his work.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in times of great crisis, our country has been fortunate enough to produce great servants of the people—men and women who have given their hearts and their energies to keep the United States of America in the forefront of mankind. Our way of life is strong and secure, because of the service and the sacrifice of those who have carried the terrible burdens of responsibility.

One of the finest of these great servants of our country was James Forrestal, whose life of toil and achievement came to a tragic conclusion early yesterday. He gave everything he had, every ounce of his energy and every thought that came from his brilliant mind, to keep America safe and protected in a chaotic world.

Mr. President, I am moved by a personal grief, because it was my privilege to know Mr. Forrestal during his years of service here in Washington. I first met James Forrestal at the home of William Donovan, who then resided in Georgetown. It came about when the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed the late Frank Knox to be Secretary of the Navy. I was called into conference by Mr. Donovan and Mr. Knox, to decide upon the plan of strategy for Knox's confirmation in the United States Senate. It was at that meeting that the late Secretary Knox called for the counsel and advice of James Forrestal. I shall never forget that day. I shall never forget the wisdom of some of the decisions Mr. Forrestal made as we discussed the confirmation of Frank Knox. From that day until the day of his death James Forrestal was my intimate and close friend.

Mr. President, James Forrestal was a man who won the affection and admiration of every one in the Government who knew how much devotion and determination he brought to his tasks. He was a man who set the highest standards for his personal and public life, and he lived by those standards.

In September of 1947, James Forrestal took the oath of office as the first Secretary of Defense in the history of the United States. Because of his high ability and his magnificent record, he was selected by President Truman to carry out the immense tasks of unifying the armed forces.

He wrestled with problems no other American had ever faced. He had to decide the ways in which the Navy, the Army, and the Air Force could be pulled together into a single team. He had to have the broad vision and the deep understanding necessary to comprehend the vital importance of each branch and the mission to be fulfilled by each.

James Forrestal was compelled to make heart-breaking decisions. He was under fearful responsibilities affecting the safety and security of the country he loved. Because of that, he exhausted himself in his efforts to be absolutely comprehensive, absolutely thorough, absolutely informed of all the ramifications and repercussions involved in the problems he handled. All these grave decisions were made in the interest of universal peace for all mankind.

No man could have done more than James Forrestal did. No man could have weighed the issues more carefully. No man could have listened more patiently to the views of his advisers and consultants. No man could have shown more bravery as he remained completely silent in taking the criticism heaped upon him.

As Members of the Senate, we know what complex and difficult problems we have before us. We know the agony of heart and soul inflicted upon those who serve the people, and strive to make wise decisions which will bring satisfaction to our fellow Americans.

We know the enormous dangers which surround us on every side. We know that the power of science is changing our world almost beyond recognition. We know that there are unknown forces and unknown weapons which make our age the most dangerous era of mankind.

Mr. President, James Forrestal was shaken and injured by the storms which sweep our world. He fought on, to the last limit of his strength, thinking of the millions of Americans who depended upon him, thinking of his duty to the President and the Congress. He came to the end of his strength, and he could not go on any longer.

Mr. President, the tragic termination of the life of this great man adds another casualty to the long honor roll of those numerous Americans who gave their all in defense of the country they loved. Every heroic soul will mourn his untimely death, because in James Forrestal they found a copatriot and a friend.

To his bereaved widow and other members of his grieving family, I extend my sincere and deep sympathy.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF LAND ADJOINING LEAVENWORTH PENITENTIARY

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not know that I am in order, but I wish to say that from the Committee on the Judiciary there was ordered reported this morning Senate bill 1730, and that I shall ask for unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the bill. The situation dealt with by the bill is as follows: An option has been taken by the Department of Justice on 600 acres of land adjoining a Federal penitentiary. The appropriation will expire the last day of June. There will probably not be another call of the calendar between now and then. The amount of the option is $50 per acre for 600 acres of land adjoining the present prison farm. The authorities of the prison claim, and the Department of Justice says, that the land in question is essential for the welfare of the institution, to be used for farm purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1730, which I am reporting from the Committee on the Judiciary, may be laid before the Senate for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1730) to authorize the purchase of additional farming land for Leavenworth Penitentiary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask what it the necessity of placing this bill ahead of the call of the calendar.

Mr. McCARRAN. Inasmuch as there are many Senators on the floor at this time, I thought it would be well to make the request for consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, still reserving the right to object, it was not my intention when the Senate adjourned on Friday last to permit the call of the calendar from the beginning. Had I known it was the intention of the majority leader to have the calendar called from the beginning, I would have asked him if he would not reconsider, and begin the call of the calendar at the point where the Senate left off on the last call of the calendar. I understand it is the purpose of the majority leader that the call of the calendar today be from the beginning.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the able minority leader that that is the intention of the majority leader. However, I should like to state that I hope we can consider only those bills which are unobjected to, because if a Senator desires to move to take up a bill which is controversial, he can occupy the time remaining in the 2 hours. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider only bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite satisfied that there will be objection to most of the bills on the calendar previous to the point where the last call was completed. I shall not object to giving Senators the opportunity to go back to the beginning of the calendar; but if that is to be done, I feel that there should be a quorum call, because Senators might not know that we are going back to the beginning of the calendar, and would not be here to object. They should be given an opportunity to be present.

If a quorum call is had, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Nevada that his unanimous-consent request should be renewed after the quorum call. At that time I shall not object to consideration of the bill in which he is interested.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nebraska. Let me say to the Senate that we shall start from the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the Senator from Nevada withdrawn his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McCARRAN. I withdraw it at this time, but I hope to renew it after the quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is concluded.

The next order of business is the call of the calendar under rule VIII.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hunt	Mundt
Anderson	Ives	Neely
Baldwin	Jenner	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Bricker	Johnson, Tex	Reed
Butler	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Byrd	Kem	Russell
Capehart	Kilgore	Saltonstall
Chapman	Langer	Smith, Maine
Cordon	Lodge	Stennis
Donnell	Long	Taft
Ecton	Lucas	Taylor
Ferguson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Flanders	McCarthy	Thye
Frear	McClellan	Vandenberg
Gillette	McFarland	Wherry
Graham	McKellar	Wiley
Green	Malone	Williams
Hendrickson	Martin	Young
Hoey	Millikin
Holland	Morse

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTSON in the chair). A quorum is present.

Does the Senator from Nevada desire to renew his unanimous-consent request to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1730?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; at this time I renew my unanimous-consent request to have the Senate consider Senate bill 1730. I wish to explain it again.

Mr. WILEY. Will the Senator please state the number on the calendar?

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill has no calendar number, because it was voted on in the Judiciary Committee only this morning, and was ordered reported by the committee to the Senate only this morning.

The bill provides for the acquisition by the Federal Government, through the Department of Justice, of 600 acres of land adjoining a Federal penitentiary, for the purpose of augmenting the land used for penitentiary purposes for farming, so that the inmates of the penitentiary may farm, and thus help to sustain the institution.

I am informed by the Department of Justice that there is an option which expires on May 30—or rather, June 30. It is feared that if the option expires, the price of the land will be increased, and thereby a loss will be sustained by the Government.

For that reason I am requesting unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time, out of order; and if that is done, I shall hope that the bill will be passed at once so that the Department of Justice may exercise the option.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether I correctly understood him to say that the option expires May 30.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is June 30. If I stated May 30, I was in error.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, I notice that in the letter from the Attorney General, which accompanies the report, November 1 is given as the date of expiration of the option. Will the Senator from Nevada check, to ascertain which date is the correct one?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not so understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The report says:

> The United States presently has an option which expires November 1, 1949.

Therefore, I do not see the need for hurry in this instance.

Mr. McCARRAN. If that be true, I would not insist upon my unanimous-consent request; but I have been informed by word which has come to me from the Department of Justice, by telephone, that the option expires June 30, I shall withdraw the report and check that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I withdraw the request.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed to call the calendar, under rule VIII.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 130) to provide for the demonstration of public library service in areas without such service or with inadequate library facilities was announced as first in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 206) relating to the immigration status of the lawful wives and children of Chinese-treaty merchants was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 88) to amend section 60 of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DONNELL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 196) for the relief of James G. Smyth was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I object, by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

COMPENSATION TO THE SWISS GOVERNMENT FOR WAR DAMAGE

The bill (S. 612) to provide for the payment of a sum not to exceed $10,607,000 to the Swiss Government as partial compensation for damage inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is on the calendar a companion bill, House bill 4392, Calendar 354.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senate bill should be substituted for the House bill, and the House bill should be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill?

Mr. LODGE. No; I wish to strike out the House bill and substitute the language of the Senate bill for the language of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First of all, is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 612), which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments, on page 1, in line 7, before the word "compensation," to strike out "partial"; and on page 2, in line 2, after the word "neutral", to strike out "rights." And insert "rights (which have thus far been adjudicated) in principal amounts as follows:

"(a) Crash-landing claims, arising out of 46 incidents as listed in the report of the Army Claims Mission dated April 26, 1946, Swiss francs 1,107,017;

"(b) Bombing claims, arising out of 28 incidents as listed in exhibit 3 of the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated February 12, 1947, Swiss francs 34,868,468.48;

"(c) Bombing claims arising out of seven incidents as listed in the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated August 4, 1947, Swiss francs 107,249.25;

"(d) Bombing claims arising out of three incidents as listed in the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated October 22, 1947, Swiss francs 9,277,963.98;

"In all, Swiss francs, 45,360,698.71";

so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State is authorized to pay to the Government of Switzerland the sum of $10,607,000 which the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of the Army and/or the Secretary of the Navy, has determined to be due to the Government of Switzerland as compensation for losses and damages inflicted on persons and property in Switzerland during World War II by units of the United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights (which have thus far been adjudicated) in principal amounts as follows:

(a) Crash-landing claims, arising out of 46 incidents as listed in the report of the Army Claims Mission dated April 26, 1946, Swiss francs 1,107,017;

(b) Bombing claims, arising out of 28 incidents as listed in exhibit 3 of the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated February 12, 1947, Swiss francs 34,868,468.48;

(c) Bombing claims arising out of seven incidents as listed in the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated August 4, 1947, Swiss francs 107,249.25;

(d) Bombing claims arising out of three incidents as listed in the report of the Theater Chief of Claims, dated October 22, 1947, Swiss francs 9,277,963.98;

In all, Swiss francs, 45,360,698.71.

SEC. 2. Appropriations are hereby authorized to carry out the purpose of this act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a bill to provide payment to the Swiss Government as compensation for damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by the United States armed forces.

Mr. TAFT. What is the number of the bill we are considering?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senate bill is S. 612, Calendar 64; and the companion House bill is H. R. 4392, Calendar 354.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senate that the facts of this claim are not disputed by anyone, I believe. The proposed legislation has been reported unanimously from the appropriate committee of each House. The difference between the House bill and the Senate bill is as follows: The Senate bill provides for the payment of approximately $10,000,000, and the House bill provides for the payment of approximately $16,000,000. The Senate bill gives a detailed itemization of the various claims.

I think the facts are definitely established, and there is an unquestioned obligation on the part of the United States Government.

So I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. What bill is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 612, Calendar No. 64.

Mr. LODGE. That bill should be passed, and the House bill should not be.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to inquire about the procedure. The usual way to proceed in such cases, it seems to me, is to have the Senate proceed to consider the House bill, and thereafter strike out all the language of the House bill following the enacting clause, and substitute therefor the language of the Senate bill, and send to conference the House bill as thus amended.

On the other hand, if we pass the Senate bill, each House will have passed a separate bill, and it may not get anywhere.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, that is a matter of procedure.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; that is what I meant.

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill be reconsidered, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4392, Calendar No. 354.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4392) to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I now move that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out, and that the language of Senate bill 612, as proposed to be amended by the committee, be substituted therefor.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now that the House bill has been amended by inserting the language of the Senate bill as proposed to be amended by the committee, if there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 612 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar of bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Nevada has requested that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar of bills to which there is no objection. Does the Senator mean the bills on the calendar in order; or just what else does he propose to do?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the request was that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar, to take up the bills on the calendar in order; and if objection is made to a bill it will be passed over, and the Senate will proceed to the next measure on the calendar.

Mr. MORSE. I thought that was the business with which we were engaged.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

The bill (S. 45) for the relief of the owners and operators of certain gold mines which were closed or the operations of which were curtailed by War Production Board Limitation Order L-208 was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 11) to broaden the cooperative extension system as established in the act of May 8, 1914, and acts supplemental thereto, by providing for cooperative extension work between colleges receiving the benefits of this act and the acts of July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1890, and other qualified colleges, universities, and research agencies, and the United States Department of Labor, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Missouri present. Although this is my bill, and I should like to see it passed, I know he wants to object.

Mr. DONNELL. I very much appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon. I was momentarily at the desk. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

TRANSFER OF LAND IN ROBINSON REMOUNT STATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 314) authorizing the transfer of a certain tract of land in the Robinson remount station to the city of Crawford, Nebr., and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by myself and my colleague the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. It has been objected to in the past by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] because it did not include the phrase that has been included at his suggestion in a number of similar bills heretofore. I therefore propose an amendment to the bill, to conform with the suggestion of the junior Senator from Oregon, on page 2, line 8, at the end of section 1, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That the city of Crawford shall pay 50 percent of the appraised fair market value of the property as determined by the United States Department of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to transfer by quitclaim deed to the city of Crawford, Nebr., the following-described tract of land lying within the Robinson Remount Station, Fort Robinson, Dawes County, Nebr.: Beginning at the northwest corner of the tract of land conveyed to the city of Crawford for public-park purposes by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1906 (34 Stat. 461); thence west along the north line of the said station a distance of one thousand one hundred and seventy-five feet; thence south three hundred and six feet; thence south twenty-seven degrees fifty-two minutes east to the westerly boundary line of the present park, the point of intersection being approximately two thousand six hundred and fifteen feet south of the starting point; thence north two thousand six hundred and fifteen feet to point of beginning, containing an area of approximately forty-three and fifty-seven one-hundredths acres: Provided, That the city of Crawford shall pay fifty percent of the appraised fair market value of the property as determined by the United States Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. Said Secretary is hereby authorized to grant to the city of Crawford, Nebr., a permanent easement across the lands of the United States comprising the Robinson Remount Station, Fort Robinson, Dawes County, Nebr., for a pipe line to carry water from the White River to the filters and purification plants of the city, which easement shall include all rights and privileges now enjoyed by the city under a revokable license to maintain such pipe line across such lands of the United States.

SEC. 3. The tract of land authorized to be transferred by the first section of this act shall be used by the grantee for purposes of a public park and recreational site or golf course or for similar and related purposes. If the grantee shall fail or cease to use such tract for such purposes, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 249) to diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2663) to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency, established pursuant to section 102, National Security Act of 1947, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 498) to increase rates of compensation of the heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROCEDURE ON JOINT RESOLUTIONS PROPOSING CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McCARRAN. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, again I call the attention of the Senate as I did on former calls of the calendar, to the joint resolution proposing constitutional amendments. It is not at all fair that a Senator should be required to rise and object to these resolutions when they come up on call of the calendar. They are of vital importance. They require a two-thirds vote of both Houses, and they must be submitted to the States for approval. It seems to me there should be a rule or an understanding that when a resolution is on the calendar calling for a constitutional amendment it should automatically go over, to be taken up on some special occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1124) to provide for the appointment and compensation of counsel to impoverished defendants in criminal cases in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 734) to provide for the appointment and compensation of counsel for impoverished dependents in certain criminal cases in the United States district courts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2660) to prohibit the parking of vehicles upon any property owned by the United States for postal purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1878) for the relief of Ben Luke Pond, Shao Hung Pond, and David Yeh Wei Pond, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. On behalf of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER Objection is heard and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 528) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I make the same objection, in behalf of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 988) to extend the benefits of section 1 (c) of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to employees who were involuntarily separated during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947, after having rendered 25 years of service but prior to attainment of age 55, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will indulge me for a moment, I should like to state that the bill will entail very little if any cost. It relates to the annuities of persons under the age of 60. It is applicable to persons who lost their positions not by reason of any misconduct but because of lack of employment opportunity. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill, for there is very little if any cost entailed in it. It is designed to help persons who have been thrown out of employment by the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill (S. 1359) to repeal the provisions of the Alaskan Railroad Retirement Act of June 29, 1936, as amended, and sections 91 to 107 of the Canal Zone Code and to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to officers and employees to whom such provisions are applicable, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PECOS RIVER COMPACT

The bill (S. 1309) to grant the consent of the Congress to the Pecos River compact was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, Senators are aware of the fact that there has been some objection to this bill in the past, on the part of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I am happy to say he assures me that, if he were here, he would not object, but he does feel that the Pecos River compact should be considered first.

To show my good faith, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of Calendar 400, House bill 3334, to grant the consent of the United States to the Pecos River compact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3334) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, the title was amended so as to read: "An act to grant the consent of the Congress to the Pecos River compact."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1309, a companion bill to House bill 3334, is indefinitely postponed.

REHABILITATION OF FORT SUMNER IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 276) to authorize a project for the rehabilitation of certain works of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of providing water for the irrigation of approximately 6,500 acres of arid lands on the Pecos River in New Mexico, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to rehabilitate, operate, and maintain in accordance with the Federal reclamation laws (act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto) the irrigation system of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico and to construct all necessary works incidental thereto: Provided, That the project shall not be initiated until contracts satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior shall have been executed with—

(a) an irrigation or conservancy district, satisfactory in form and powers to the Secretary and embracing the lands of the project as determined by him, obligating the district, among other things, (i) to repay to the United States without interest the cost of rehabilitating and constructing the project, the terms to be such as will secure repayment as rapidly as, in the judgment of the Secretary, the district can reasonably be expected to make repayment and, in any event, within the useful life of the project; (ii) to pay for or otherwise provide adequate operation and maintenance, including replacements, of the project works during the period of the contract; and (iii) to furnish the Secretary with such control over and access to project works which are owned by or within the control of the district as he may require in order to safeguard the investment of the United States in the project; and

(b) the holder or holders of at least 90 percent of the outstanding general obligation bonds of the Fort Sumner irrigation district providing for such refinancing or cancellation of those bonds and scheduling of payments of principal and interest called for thereby as the Secretary believes necessary in order to insure fulfillment of the obligations required under (a) above.

BILLS AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual good-faith delivered-price systems and freight-absorption practices, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2023) an act to regulate oleomargarine, to repeal certain taxes relating to oleomargarine and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 878) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 997) to extend the benefits of section 1 (c) of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to employees who were involuntarily separated during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947, after having rendered 25 years of service but prior to attainment of age 55, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 20) to amend the act of August 1, 1947, as amended, to authorize the creation of 10 professional and scientific positions in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. On behalf of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) suspending legislative budget pending further study, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the resolution will be passed over.

BILL PLACED AT THE FOOT OF THE CALENDAR

The bill (S. 266) removing a limitation affecting the pension, compensation, or retirement pay payable on account of an incompetent veteran without dependents during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not see the distinguished Senator from Georgia or the distinguished Senator from Maine, but this bill was approved by the Finance Committee. I suggest that it be placed at the foot of the calendar and called again when we reach that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over and will be placed at the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. That is quite satisfactory.

SIMPLIFICATION OF PROCUREMENT, USE, AND DISPOSAL OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY, ETC., BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1809) to simplify the procurement, utilization, and disposal of Government property, to reorganize certain agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LANGER. I object, on behalf of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I was asking for recognition. I wanted to be heard on this bill. Did the Senator from North Dakota ask that it go over?

Mr. LANGER. I withhold the objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Indiana wished to have time in which to study the bill. I talked with him about it. I was going to ask that it go over. I want to make a brief statement about the bill. The bill was reported by the committee on May 9. It is a measure of considerable importance, a bill to undertake the reorganization and to transfer agencies of the Government. It is one that each Member of the Senate should endeavor to study. I desire to make a brief statement about the bill.

Mr. President, the need for an efficient, businesslike system for procurement, property and records management in the Federal service has long been recognized. The Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch and students of government have recognized this and have recommended that centralized direction be placed over supply, records management, and the operation and maintenance of public buildings.

The pending bill, Senate bill 1809, Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, was drafted by the staff of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and the legislative counsel, in collaboration with representatives of the Federal Works Agency, General Accounting Office, Bureau of the Budget, and other interested agencies.

I may say, Mr. President, that it undertakes generally to follow the recommendations of the Hoover Commission with respect to those agencies.

The bill proposes to establish a General Services Agency at the head of which will be an administrator appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator will be directly responsible to the President and will be vested with broad jurisdiction over procurement of supplies and materials, property management, including identification and cataloging of material on hand, disposition of surplus property, records management, and other related activities which affect the internal operation of all departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

The bill further provides for transferring the Bureau of Federal Supply and the Office of Contract Settlement from the Department of the Treasury, the Federal Works Agency, National Archives, and the affairs of the War Assets Administration, for liquidation, to the General Services Agency.

It is believed that substantial savings will be effected by combining the functions and activities of these agencies into a central service organization which will have clear-cut lines of authority over Federal property because permanent legislation is contained in this bill for the disposition of personal property, including the donation of certain property for educational purposes, and at the same time permit decentralization over the disposition of certain properties such as agricultural products, surplus vessels, and other material to those agencies best suited or which have specific legislative authority to make such disposition.

No changes will be made with respect to the disposition of foreign excess properties; however, this bill does provide for the repeal of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, except sections 13 (a), 13 (g), 13 (h), and sections 28 and 32 (b) (2). Under the terms of this act the priorities and preferences for transferring surplus real property to educational institutions, to public health and hospital institutions, surplus airport facilities to States and political subdivisions, property for public recreational facilities, and the foreign scholarship program will be retained as permanent legislation.

Mr. President, I am not insisting that the bill be passed today. I invite the attention of the Senate to it so that Senators may familiarize themselves with it. I hope, Mr. President, that the bill will pass on the next call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

The clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, under existing law, the Attorney General is authorized to suspend deportations. When he suspends them he must report the suspensions to the Congress. If the Congress, by action of both Houses, agrees to the suspension, it goes into effect. We have been passing similar measures right along. I am not advocating them. I look upon them with a great deal of concern, and have so looked upon them; but we are constantly receiving these suspended deportations from the Department of Justice. The Committee on the Judiciary must act on them, must either report them to the Senate or let them die. We have been reporting them to the Senate, and the Senate has been passing them. I do not like the law or the way it operates, but it is the law, and what I have stated is all we can do about it.

Before the committee reports to the Senate a suspension of deportation it is screened as well as possible, with such facilities as are at hand. Each individual whose deportation is suspended is considered. These are persons who are in this country and who are subject to deportation. Their deportation is suspended by action of the Department of Justice, under a specific law passed by the Eightieth Congress. Therefore on each call of the calendar one of these lists will be found. In this instance, I think approximately 60 deportations are suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress favors the suspension of deportation in the case of each alien hereinafter named, in which case the Attorney General has suspended deportation for more than 6 months:

NORTHWEST MISSOURI FAIR ASSOCIATION

The bill (S. 1054) for the relief of Northwest Missouri Fair Association of Bethany, Harrison County, Mo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DONNELL. I object.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection, so that I may make a short explanation of the bill?

Mr. DONNELL. I withhold my objection.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to reimburse the Northwest Missouri Fair Association in the sum of $25,000 for the value of buildings destroyed by fire on September 13, 1931. On the day before the fire occurred the premises were occupied by a detachment of field artillery of the United States Army moving from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to Fort Des Moines, Iowa. The possession of the fair grounds was delivered to the Army, quoting from the statement on behalf of the fair association appearing on page 5 of the report, "under a promise that the property would be returned to us in as good or better condition on the following Monday than when received on Saturday, September 12."

The occupation occurred on Saturday. On Sunday a baseball game was arranged between the members of the armed force and a team from a neighboring town. While the baseball game was in progress a fire broke out in the grandstand on the fair grounds. It spread very rapidly to a larger building known as the Liberal Arts Building. The officer in charge immediately ordered the evacuation of the troops, with their fieldpieces. They moved fieldpieces including trucks and tractors over the hose which was laid down to fight the fire damaging the hose and making it impossible to continue efforts to put out the fire. As a result, as I understand, substantially all the buildings of the fair association were destroyed.

The purpose of this bill is to reimburse the fair association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES A. GORDON

The bill (S. 1080) for the relief of James A. Gordon, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That James A. Gordon, of Columbia, S. C., is hereby relieved of liability for payment to the War Department of the sum of $861.25, such sum having been charged against the said James A. Gordon by the War Department as a result of the theft of public funds in his custody, without fault or neglect on his part, while he was on active duty as a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States.

DIXIE MARGARINE CO.

The bill (S. 1086) for the relief of the Dixie Margarine Co., a Tennessee corporation, of Memphis, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I gladly withhold the objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is not a margarine tax bill, but it involves a case where the particular company involved paid a tax for a number of years, and later another company brought suit for the imposition of the same kind of a tax. The Supreme Court held that the tax was absolutely illegal, and awarded judgment in favor of the taxpayer.

Mr. President, this case is exactly on all fours with the one decided by the Supreme Court. This company paid an illegal tax, and it is so stated in the report. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection, because it is a claim which the Government really should pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, this claim does not seem to have been filed in time. There seems to be evidence in the record itself of neglect and carelessness in filing it. I should like to look into the matter a little further.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with and conclude the consideration of measures on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the next order of business on the calendar.

JOHN W. CRUMPACKER

The bill (S. 1138) for the relief of John W. Crumpacker, commander, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John W. Crumpacker, commander, United States Navy, the sum of $135.60, which sum represents the amount which it would have cost had shipment been made at Government expense of certain of his household effects from Accomac, Va., to Michigan City, Ind., following the evacuation of his dependents from Tutuila, American Samoa, in January 1942: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BANK OF KODIAK, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 580) for the relief of the Bank of Kodiak, Kodiak, Alaska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I should like to have a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to pay the sum of $3,000 to the Bank of Kodiak, Kodiak, Alaska, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for reimbursement in the loss of mutilated currency on board the steamship Yukon on February 4, 1946.

It appears that the Bank of Kodiak withdrew mutilated currency from circulation and consigned it to the Treasurer of the United States, for redemption, and after the steamship Yukon, on which the shipment was moving, sank on February 4, 1946, the bank made claim on the Post Office for reimbursement. The Post Office Department notified the bank that inasmuch as no registry fee was paid for the shipment, no indemnity was payable under the regulations of the Department.

Inasmuch as the currency in this case was shipped by the Bank of Kodiak for its own account and without authorization or direction by the Treasury, the bank was advised that there was no action that the Treasury could take to reimburse it for the amount of the lost currency. Therefore the bill seemed to the committee to have merit.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Why is there an absence of any sworn proof in the record as to this loss? There is an indication that two or three of the inspectors saw the packages, but no sworn proof, nothing to bear out the claim.

Mr. McCARRAN. The letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, which we take to be authentic, without its being under oath, sets forth the details.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I wonder if we should not have a record from the Postmaster General supporting the claim.

Mr. McCARRAN. The committee did not think it was necessary. We thought we had sufficiently authentic evidence to warrant approval of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Was the committee unanimous in its opinion as to the merits of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I would say yes, according to my recollection, the committee was unanimous.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 585) for the relief of Jacob A. Johnson, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE A. KIRCHBERGER

The bill (H. R. 650) for the relief of George A. Kirchberger was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, Mr. Kirchberger, when he made application for employment with the War Department, stated that he was a citizen of the United States and that he was born in St. Louis, Mo. He worked for the War Department from March 1941 until September 1945. In September 1945 he was appointed to the Treasury Department by transfer from the War Department as a commercial accountant. An investigation into his character and for other purposes by the latter Department revealed that at the time of appointment he was not a citizen of the United States. Consequently, the salary paid to Mr. Kirchberger was in contravention of the applicable statute. Accordingly, Mr. Kirchberger was suspended from duty on September 11, 1946, and separated on October 6, 1946. A demand has been made upon Mr. Kirchberger to refund these sums to the Government.

The issue simply stated: Should this former employee, because of a misstatement made at the time of application for employment, which the Department concerned considers quite understandable under the circumstances, be required to refund the salary earned? Your committee believes he should not be required to do so. The Department concerned is satisfied that the claimant was guilty of no willful falsehood.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada if it is true that the party concerned in the bill filed a false statement with his application for appointment?

Mr. McCARRAN. It is so alleged.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

LEGAL GUARDIAN OF GEORGE GENERAZZO

The bill (H. R. 681) for the relief of the legal guardian of George Generazzo was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH THOMPSON

The bill (H. R. 692) for the relief of Joseph Thompson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE S. TREMAYNE AND A. I. LANG

The bill (H. R. 761) for the relief of Catherine S. Tremayne and A. I. Lang was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL GUARDIAN OF ANDREW FERDINAND DEWITT III

The bill (H. R. 1098) for the relief of the legal guardian of Andrew Ferdinand DeWitt III, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HOPE IRENE BULEY

The bill (H. R. 1300) for the relief of Mrs. Hope Irene Buley was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to pay the sum of $7,912.50 to Mrs. Hope Irene Buley, of Bozeman, Mont., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries, medical and hospital expenses, and loss of earnings sustained as a result of an accident occurring as a consequence of the discharge from a gun of a member of the military police, acting within the scope of his employment, at the Oasis night club, Black Eagle, Mont., on December 25, 1942.

In the early morning of December 26, 1942, two military policemen, while acting within the scope of their employment, became involved in a fight with a group of civilians at the Oasis, a night club near Great Falls, Mont. Badly beaten and reasonably apprehending mortal danger, they drew their pistols. It appears that they attempted to fire into the floor and ceiling to forestall the necessity for further combat. In the resulting melee four civilians were shot, including Miss Hope Irene Dotseth (now Mrs. Hope Irene Buley). Miss Dotseth was struck by a bullet in the upper right arm, which caused a compound comminuted fracture of the right humerus and severed the radial nerve, paralyzing her right arm.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. May I ask the distinguished Senator whether the committee was unanimous in approval of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. The committee was unanimous.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAL W. CLINE

The bill (H. R. 1597) for the relief of Hal W. Cline was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM PRICE

The bill (H. R. 2089) for the relief of William Price was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVA C. NETZLEY RIDLEY, WILLIAM G. STUFF, LOIS STUFF, AND HARRY E. RIDLEY; AND THE ESTATES OF CLYDE C. NETZLEY AND SARAH C. STUFF

The bill (H. R. 2261) for the relief of Eva C. Netzley Ridley, William G. Stuff, Lois Stuff, and Harry E. Ridley; and the estates of Clyde C. Netzley and Sarah C. Stuff was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should appreciate very much an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, Clyde C. Netzley and Sarah C. Stuff were fatally injured, and Eva C. Netzley Ridley, William G. Stuff, and Lois Stuff were severely injured, in a collision between the automobile driven by Clyde C. Netzley and a National Park Service truck, on Illinois State Highway No. 54. The sole occupant of the truck was the driver, who was uninjured.

The collision occurred when the driver of the truck, without giving a signal, undertook to make a left-hand turn, from the right-hand lane of the highway, onto a dirt road which crosses the highway.

It appears that the collision was clearly caused by the negligence of the driver of the truck.

The negligence of the driver of the truck is supported by various statements presented to the committee. I refer especially to the letter of Peyton Ford of the Department of Justice who wrote:

Whether the bill should be enacted presents a question of legislative policy concerning which the Department of Justice prefers to make no recommendations.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Again I ask whether the report of the committee on the bill was unanimous.

Mr. McCARRAN. The report of the committee was unanimous. If the Senator means by his question whether all members of the committee were present I would have to answer in the negative. But there was a legal quorum present, and those present were unanimous in their recommendation to report the bill favorably.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator, and withdraw any objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I notice that the accident took place in 1935. I wonder why the claim has been delayed.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill has been before Congress previously, but for one reason or another has not been passed. It got into the jam at the close of the last session of Congress and failed of passage then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2261) for the relief of Eva C. Netzley Ridley, William G. Stuff, Lois Stuff, and Harry E. Ridley; and the estates of Clyde C. Netzley and Sarah C. Stuff, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST L. WEATHERLY

The bill (H. R. 2268) for the relief of Forest L. Weatherly was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2474) for the relief of Frank E. Blanchard, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there is a matter pertaining to the bill which I should look into, and for the time being, that is for the call of the calendar today, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF MARION MILLER

The bill (S. 1167) for the relief of the estate of Marion Miller, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Treasury Department has recommended against the bill I should like an explanation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it appears that Pfc Marion Miller, Army serial No. 10600851, served with the Canadian Army prior to his service with the Army of the United States. As an incident of that service, certain sums were due and owing to him by the Canadian Government. This sum—$66 Canadian currency, at the then rate of exchange, $59.58 in United States dollars—was, along with amounts due from the Canadian Government to other enlisted men in the United States Army, paid to this Government by letter of credit dated February 27, 1943.

Apparently faulty identification by an Army finance officer resulted in the sum involved being paid to one Pvt. Milton Miller, who had since been discharged from the Army.

Pfc Marion Miller was killed in action on July 28, 1944.

While it is clear that the estate of Marion Miller is entitled to the amount in question, the Comptroller General states that the payment has not been made because there is no appropriation or fund available from which to pay it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1167) for the relief of the estate of Marion Miller, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment on page 2, line 6, after the word "claims," to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on acount of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim or claims for payment of the amount due the estate of Marion Miller, private, first class, Army of the United States, deceased, incident to his service in the Canadian Army which amount was paid to the United States by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, February 27, 1943, for his credit but which was erroneously paid by a United States finance officer to another individual of a similar name, and to allow in full and final settlement of the claim or claims not to exceed $59.58. There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $59.58, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of such claim or claims: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES CODE RELATING TO UNLAWFUL CONVERSION OF MOTOR VEHICLES AND AIRCRAFT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1483) to amend title 18, United States Code, sections 2312 and 2313, so as to include thereunder motor vehicles and aircraft which have been embezzled, feloniously converted, or taken by fraud, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "taken", to insert the word "feloniously", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 18, United States Code, sections 2312 and 2313, are amended by inserting after the word "stolen" wherever it appears in such sections a comma and the following: "embezzled, feloniously converted, or taken feloniously by fraud."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, sections 2312 and 2313, so as to include thereunder motor vehicles and aircraft which have been embezzled, feloniously converted, or feloniously taken by fraud."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of certain officers and members of the crew of the steamship Taiyuan was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I would offer a number of objections to the bill. It does not seem to be soundly drawn, to begin with. It calls for the payment of a claim to a man whose whereabouts is unknown. I suspect there are some other faults about it. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK J. PATZKE ET AL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1299) for the relief of Frank J. Patzke, Archie Mitchell, J. L. Shoemaker, Einar Engen, and N. L. Gifford, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Dakota", to insert "and Bertha Myrtle Patzke, of Bly, Oreg."; on page 2, line 2, after the word "of", to strike out "his" and insert "their"; and in line 3, after the word "and", to strike out "his" and insert "their."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "An act for the relief of Frank J. Patzke and others."

CONTINUATION OF NURSERIES AND NURSERY SCHOOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 3967) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1950, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1950. There is only one amendment to the House bill. That amendment restores the amount to $150,000, from $50,000.

The committee is of the opinion that the work of the nurseries and nursery schools fills a vital and needed part in a general program, and that it should be continued with an adequate appropriation until some other provision is agreed upon. With this action the committee recommended that the District Columbia officials confer with the representatives of the various civic organizations in an effort to bring in a recommendation for the care of this group of children at the end of this term. Such a meeting has already been called for June 6, and it is the hope of the committee that the parties may get together and bring in a recommendation to take care of this matter after 1950.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the Senator from Maine. I have no objection.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask if this type of service, which I know about, is rendered by the public-school systems in others cities, or is it carried on privately?

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. This program is what remains of the Lanham Act plan, I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts. The question is whether the service should come under education or under welfare. I think there is a difference in various cities. I believe some cities take care of it under the educational program and some under the welfare program.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Under both systems it is done with public funds?

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3967) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1950, which has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 3, line 9, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARKANSAS RIVER COMPACT

The bill (S. 1448) to grant the consent of the United States to the Arkansas River compact was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). Calendar No. 385, House bill 4151, is a companion bill. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4151) to grant the consent of the United States to the Arkansas River compact was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1448 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill his enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the pending business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL CAPITAL SESQUICENTENNIAL

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) to authorize the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission to proceed with plans for the celebration and commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the seat of the Federal Government in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like a brief explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, does the Senator desire an explanation?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Yes. What is the amount of salary to be authorized for the director of the Commission?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, no salary is fixed, because no appropriation has yet been made. The question whether or not there will be a Federal appropriation is now before the Subcommittee on District of Columbia Appropriations of the Appropriations Committee. There has been a previous appropriation of only $15,000, with which all the preliminary plans, with which most Senators are familiar, have been made. In the event there should be an appropriation, no salary will be paid by the Commission in excess of $15,000. However, there is nothing in the pending measure which appropriates for salaries to anybody. It merely continues in existence the Commission which was authorized by the Eightieth Congress, and directs it to proceed with the plans which it has heretofore made.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. In the event this program should operate at a loss, who would bear the loss?

Mr. McGRATH. The distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is in charge of the bill.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, it is anticipated that there will be no loss. However, the only loss that could be sustained would be limited by the extent of the appropriation.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. But if there should be a loss, who would assume that loss? Would Congress assume it?

Mr. FREAR. I presume that if there were a loss, probably a deficiency appropriation would be requested.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. I may say that there is no liability on the Federal Government beyond that which it takes unto itself by an appropriation, which we hope will be made. Therefore any loss would be limited to the amount of the appropriation.

This question has been gone into very thoroughly by the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. I believe that when the District appropriations bill is before us there will be ample time then to discuss the financial soundness and prospects of the Sesquicentennial celebration. The pending joint resolution does nothing more than permit the continuation of the Commission and permit it to go ahead with its plans. In the event we should approve an appropriation with which to operate the Sesquicentennial celebration, the pending joint resolution gives sanction for leasing authority, the taking over of land, and other things that are necessary in that connection.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I feel constrained to object unless the joint resolution provides for the contingency of loss. There is no certainty that there will not be a loss, and I think we ought to provide squarely to meet that contingency should it arise.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I do not believe that this joint resolution is the place to make such a provision. The joint resolution does not give the Sesquicentennial Commission authority to incur any obligations which could possibly run against the Federal Government. The time to make such provision is when and if we decide to appropriate any money for this purpose. In the meantime any obligation which might be incurred would be simply an obligation as between the Commission and those with whom it might contract.

This is not the place to put a limitation on liability. In my opinion, the time to do that is when the appropriation bill is before the Senate. If the Senate sees fit to approve a $3,000,000 financing of this project, it can very well declare its purpose that that shall be the limit of authority of the Commission. This is not the place to impose such a limitation. In effect, this is nothing more than an authorization. Of course, an authorization is of no value unless it is followed by an appropriation.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I point out that it is an authorization which firmly establishes a commitment.

Mr. McGRATH. I do not quite understand what the Senator means by his last reference.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I mean simply that it is authorization which establishes a commitment on the part of the Congress.

Mr. McGRATH. The only commitment that is established is a commitment that the Sesquicentennial Commission, already established by the previous Congress, shall be permitted to proceed with its work of conducting the sesquicentennial celebration, and that it shall have the necessary power to deal with the authorities of the District of Columbia in conducting the sesquicentennial fair. There is no authority to spend any money or to commit the Government to the spending of any money whatsoever. The Commission will not have such authority unless the Congress sees fit to make an appropriation.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. If the Senator will turn to page 4, line 22 of the joint resolution, he will find an explanation of the situation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL rose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me?

Mr. McGRATH. I do not believe I have the floor. I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] has the floor. With his permission, I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, as a member of the Subcommittee on District of Columbia Appropriations of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I should like to ask a question.

Do I correctly understand the Senator from Rhode Island to mean that the joint resolution would merely continue the Planning Commission, and that the Planning Commission must cut its cloth along the lines of any appropriation which later may be made by the Congress? In other words, if we appropriate half the money which the Commission requests, it must make its plans accordingly.

Mr. McGRATH. Yes; it must make its plans in accordance with the appropriation.

I may say that according to the plans for the sesquicentennial celebration, the total budget anticipated for the sesquicentennial celebration will be in the neighborhood of $9,000,000. A great many projects are planned, including the erection of buildings, the rental of space for scientific displays, admission charges, and so forth. The plan of the Commission is a business venture, in which it is anticipated that the Government will receive back something in excess of the total cost. What is to be asked of the Appropriations Committee is an appropriation in the form of a banking loan of $3,000,000, all of which, under the plans, will come back to the Treasury. In addition to what comes back to the Treasury in this form there will be returns from Federal taxes as a result of the operation of the Sesquicentennial Fair.

To answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts fairly, we are dealing with a proposal which, in terms of dollars, will be a $10,000,000 show, which we shall ask the Federal Government to guarantee to the extent of $3,000,000, all of which we hope and trust will be returned.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So to answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey, theoretically, at this time at least, so far as we can foresee, the ultimate loss to the Federal Government would not exceed $3,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. McGRATH. That is correct, but we do not expect that there really will be any loss to the Federal Government. Instead, we anticipate that there will be a profit to the Government. The $3,000,000 is being requested in the form of an appropriation, although in a sense it is to be a loan to the Sesquicentennial Commission, for the purpose of permitting it to erect the buildings and to get the celebration under way by enabling the Commission to spend the money which must be expended before any income can be established. The Commission has no place to go to obtain such backing except the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. In other words, neither the residents of the District of Columbia nor the business people of the District of Columbia nor the Government of the District of Columbia are putting up any money at all in this connection?

Mr. McGRATH. No. This project is not to be understood as a project of the District of Columbia. It is the sesquicentennial celebration of the founding of the Capital of the United States, and it is being conducted by a commission authorized by the Congress of the United States. It is not a District of Columbia project. It is to be called "The Freedom Fair," in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the seat of the Federal Government here in the city of Washington. It is a national affair, and is not to be understood as a function of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Has any effort been made to raise money for this purpose from business firms throughout the United States?

Mr. McGRATH. Yes. Space in the exhibition buildings will be leased to large industrial firms throughout the United States, on an industry-wide basis; and many of them have already shown a very keen interest in leasing space.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But no advance payments have been made. Is that correct?

Mr. McGRATH. No advance payments have ben made, and none will be received until the buildings are erected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGER obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me on that point, I should like to follow the argument which has been made by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island by reading from page 10 of the bill, where it is said:

Provided, That all revenues received by the Commission from such source shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation to be made pursuant to the authority contained herein and may be expended and shall be accounted for in the same manner as other funds authorized for expenditures by the Commission.

Mr. McGRATH. That is correct. Every dollar taken in will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LUCAS. And it is the belief of the Senator from Rhode Island that the moneys which will be accumulated from the concessions which will be leased and from other means of raising funds, will be sufficient to prevent the Federal Government from sustaining any expense whatsoever in the final analysis. Is that correct?

Mr. McGRATH. Not only will the Federal Government have no expense in the final analysis, but it is anticipated that the Government will make considerable money from the operations of the Sesquicentennial Freedom Fair.

Furthermore, let me point out that under the plans which the Commission now has, there will be left in the city of Washington, as a permanent improvement, a very beautiful amphitheater, which is planned as the first building to be erected, along with the group of buildings to compose the so-called fair grounds. The amphitheater will be a building of considerable value and will be a permanent as well as a very needed improvement in the District of Columbia.

Moreover, as I have previously pointed out, it is expected that many million people will come to Washington during the 2 years which it is anticipated the Freedom Fair will run. It is expected to have as the central theme of the fair the freedoms which we enjoy here in the United States of America.

I wish to point out how essential it is in these times that we do not lose the opportunity of celebrating an anniversary such as this one, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Federal Government in the city of Washington.

We read last week in the trade magazines that for the city of London the British Government has recently appropriated the equivalent of $15,000,000 for the running of a fair whose purposes do not begin to be commensurate with the great things the Federal Government stands for in the District of Columbia. It seems to me that if Great Britain under its austerity program, and requiring the help it is receiving from the United States, believes it can afford to devote $15,000,000 to a celebration of that kind, then certainly here in the United States we can well afford to advance $3,000,000 in order to help bring home to all the world the great freedoms which are enjoyed by those who live in the United States, and which are symbolized here in the city of Washington.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, so long as the Senate understands that if there is a loss, the Congress of the United States will not have to meet it, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Rhode Island for the very fine explanation he has made of the joint resolution.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether a loss was sustained from the celebration which was had 50 years ago, on the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Federal Government in the city of Washington?

Mr. McGRATH. I was not here at that time, so I do not know. [Laughter.]

Let me say that a list has been prepared of the contributions the Federal Government has made to fairs of this kind in the United States within the past several decades. As one example, I can refer to the World's Fair at New York. The Congress of the United States appropriated in excess of $3,000,000 as an outright contribution to that fair.

So we can go down the long list of similar celebrations to which contributions have been made by the United States Government. Those contributions range from $700,000 to more than $3,500,000.

Thus it seems to me that if the Congress can make such contributions for the St. Louis Fair, the New York World's Fair, and the Brooklyn Bridge celebration, the Congress should be able to take this step in connection with the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Nation's Capital.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether there was a Federal Government appropriation for the St. Louis Fair.

Mr. McGRATH. I believe there was a Federal Government appropriation for the St. Louis Exposition. I believe it was called the Electrical Exposition—at St. Louis, in 1903, as I recall the date. I think a Federal Government appropriation was made for that purpose, but I do not recall the exact amount.

Mr. LANGER. Can the Senator tell me whether a Federal Government appropriation was made for the Chicago Fair?

Mr. McGRATH. I am sure there was a Federal Government appropriation for that purpose. If the Senate will excuse a brief delay, I have sent the clerk to the committee to obtain the list which I had prepared for presentation to the Appropriations Committee. I think it will be brought to the floor in a few minutes.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator from Rhode Island think that $3,000,000 is a great deal of money, just for a celebration?

Mr. McGRATH. No; $3,000,000 is not a great deal of money for this celebration, when one takes into consideration the things we have to celebrate and the emphasis which can be placed on our democracy and our freedoms.

The theme of the Freedom Fair and what we are going to try to demonstrate to the world by means of the fair are the things we enjoy here in the United States of America and the reasons why our way of life is better than the way of life of people elsewhere in the world. The celebration is to be known as the Freedom Fair. It is not to be commercialized in the sense that it is hoped to have a Coney Island midway or anything of that sort. It is to be a fair which will demonstrate the educational, scientific, industrial, and governmental progress of the United States during the 150 years since the National Capital was established here on the Potomac.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the joint resolution has been passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been passed.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I shall object until I find whether there was such a fair 50 years ago, how much the Federal Government contributed at that time, and whether any of its contribution was eventually returned.

In the present case, if there is assurance that there will not be a loss to the Federal Government, I shall not object; but I do not believe the people of the United States should pay $3,000,000 to have a fair here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I hope we do not lose sight of the fact that the joint resolution we are presently considering does not appropriate $3,000,000. There will be ample opportunity to debate the question of whether $3,000,000 should be appropriated.

All the joint resolution now before us does is authorize the continuation of the planning. The question of whether the actual expenditure will be made will be placed before the Senate when the appropriation is requested.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I wish to say that the practice of making Federal contributions for such purposes is not new.

The Senator from North Dakota has asked whether there was a celebration of this sort 50 years ago. I do not remember as to that, but I remember that there was one 100 years ago. At that time there was a decision to build a great memorial, and stock was generally sold for the construction of the George Washington Monument. I happen to possess one of the original stock certificates which was sold for that purpose. Of course, the Washington Monument could not be built on that basis, and the Federal Government had to step in and complete the construction of it.

I hope the Senator from North Dakota will withhold objection, because I am satisfied that the opportunity to thresh out the matter before the Appropriations Committee will be sufficient and satisfactory.

The Senator may recall that at one time I was a director of a United States exposition, and in that connection an authorization was obtained. After it was obtained, an appearance was made before the Appropriations Committee, to request funds. I believe that procedure should be followed in this case.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the Senator a question: If we make the authorization at this time, when the request for an appropriation subsequently comes to us, will it be contained in a general appropriation bill, or will it be presented by itself?

Mr. McGRATH. We can ask the Appropriations Committee to report it as a separate item. The matter is being considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know just what the procedure would be, whether the committee would report it as an item in one of its general appropriation bills or report it separately. But I assure the Senator that, regardless of how it may come before the Senate, the item can be given separate consideration.

Mr. LANGER. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1557) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the juvenile court of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. McGRATH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota withhold his objection?

Mr. LANGER. I may state that the only reason I object is that the bill does not provide that the judge shall be appointed from the District of Columbia. Under the bill the judge could be brought in from anywhere in the United States. It seems to me the lawyers of the District are entitled to have the judge appointed from the District of Columbia to deal with matters which come before the juvenile court.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, it is provided that the judge must be appointed from the bar of the District of Columbia. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LANGER. I was talking this morning to a representative of the local bar association. I have not seen the bill myself.

Mr. McGRATH. I may say for the benefit of the Senator there are two bills pending for the appointment of judges of the juvenile courts, which were before the Committee on the District of Columbia. One is in the nature of a permanent bill which would eventually create two judges for the juvenile court. The pending bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] merely attempts to take care of a very dire emergency situation. The juvenile judge for the District of Columbia—and there is only one judge of the juvenile court—has been incapacitated and confined to a hospital for a period of almost a year. There is no hope that that judge can return to her duties. There is no provision of law by which the office of that judge can be vacated. There is no provision of law by which she can be forced into retirement.

The bill merely provides temporary relief. It permits the appointment of a juvenile court judge for the remainder of the term of the present judge. At the expiration of that term, then the authority which is hereby granted for the appointment of an extra judge will terminate. There is before the Committee on the District of Columbia another bill, upon which hearings are being held, by which it is hoped that we can provide permanently for two judges. That will eventually come before the Senate. The pending bill is merely an emergency measure to put a judge upon that bench, where a judge is very badly needed. The Senator is completely misinformed about the question of residence in the District, or as to being a member of the District bar, because the proposed law does not make any change with respect to the qualification of the judge to be appointed. The law at the present time provides that the judge must be a person of experience in social work, and must be drawn from the membership of the bar of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota is not misinformed. He has the bill before him, and will read it:

That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, for a term of 6 years, or until his successor is appointed and confirmed, one additional judge for the juvenile court of the District of Columbia. The position occupied by the present judge of such juvenile court shall be abolished when a vacancy shall occur in said position or at the expiration of the present 6-year term of said judge, whichever shall first occur.

The Senator will see there is no provision which limits the appointment to a resident of the District of Columbia. In other words, the judge could be appointed from anywhere in the United States. Without objection, I should be glad to propose an amendment at the end of the bill—that is, in line 10—to add a semicolon and the words "Provided, That said judge shall be a resident of the District of Columbia."

Mr. McGRATH. I may say to the distinguished Senator that the pending bill must be read in the light of existing substantive law. We have substantive law which provides that juvenile-court judges appointed in this manner shall be drawn from membership of the bar; so that while the bill does not spell it out, it does not exempt this judgeship from the provision of already-existing law. I have no objection to the Senator putting an amendment on the bill, if he sees fit, but it is entirely unnecessary, because the judge appointed under this authority must be appointed in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

Mr. LANGER. If it adds nothing to it, it at least would do no harm to adopt the amendment. We might as well adopt it.

Mr. McGRATH. I have no objection whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. Unless there is language in the pending bill which incorporates by reference the existing law—and it is an independent statute which stands on its own footing—I think the legal point of the Senator from North Dakota is well taken.

Mr. McGRATH. I disagree with the distinguished Senator from Oregon in his interpretation of the statute, but, be that as it may, it is not the intention to change the existing provisons of law with respect to the appointment of this temporary judge, and I should be very happy to accept the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota in order to make sure that the substantive law applies to this particular appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a question at that point, I understood the amendment to provide that the appointee shall be a resident of the District of Columbia. My understanding of the present substantive law is that it requires him to be a member of the District bar. There are members of the District bar who might live just over the line, but who practice in the District exclusively. I am wondering whether the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is not in conflict with the present substantive law.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to read the existing provisions of the law governing this case. It is from title XI, Judiciary and Jurisdiction, paragraph 11–920, entitled "Appointment, Qualifications, Oath, and Salary of Judge." It reads as follows:

The judge of the court—

Meaning the juvenile court—shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, for a term of 6 years, or until his successor is appointed and confirmed. To be eligible for appointment as judge—

Meaning, judge of the juvenile court—

a person must be a member of the bar, preferably of the District of Columbia, and have a knowledge of social problems and of procedure and an understanding of child psychology. The judge shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take the oath prescribed for judges of the courts of the United States.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. Did I hear him read the language "preferably a member of the District bar?"

Mr. McGRATH. Yes, that is the language of the present statute. It is not sought to change that language at all by the bill under consideration.

Mr. MORSE. Even the present statute does not meet the objection raised by the Senator from North Dakota, and there is nothing in the pending bill that incorporates the language of the present statute. Under the circumstances, the bill would stand on its own footing.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, we are merely trying to meet an emergency situation, and it hardly seems desirable to prescribe one set of qualifications for a temporary position, in order to take care of this emergency caused by the inability of the person holding the office to fulfill the duties.

It hardly seems consistent that there should be one set of qualifications for the incumbent and a different set of qualifications for a person temporarily appointed to fill the position.

I should be very happy to accept an amendment incorporating into the pending bill the provisions of paragraph 920 of section 11 to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I still object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from North Dakota for a moment. Will the Senator from North Dakota withhold his objection, so that I may offer an amendment?

Mr. LANGER. Yes; I will withhold my objection.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

After the words "District of Columbia", in line 6, insert the words "who shall, at the time of appointment, be a resident of the District of Columbia."

Mr. LANGER. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the words "District of Columbia.", it is proposed to insert "who shall at the time of appointment, be a resident of the District of Columbia."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask how long it takes to become a resident of the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator what is the law with respect to other judges in the District of Columbia. Are they required to be residents of the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCARRAN. In the municipal court bill we made provision for a certain number of judges to be selected from residents of the District of Columbia, though there were exceptions made, so that the President could reach into the metropolitan area, as it were, and select them. The reason for that is that a great many lawyers practice law in the District of Columbia and live in Maryland or Virginia, outside the District line. So, if we tie it down too close to the District line we are likely to exclude many who are really residents of the District of Columbia but who happen to live outside the District line.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will permit me, this is what I have in mind. I can well understand that for the position of juvenile court judge it might be entirely appropriate, and, in fact, desirable, that the occupant of the office be a resident of the District of Columbia and familiar with conditions in the city of Washington. But I do not want a general precedent established whereby all judicial officers have to be residents of the District of Columbia. I think any citizen of the United States generally should be eligible for general judicial assignment and appointment in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator would not want that to apply to his own State, would he?

Mr. PEPPER. No; but the District of Columbia, I believe we will all admit, has a different status. It belongs to the people of the country to a degree to which individual areas outside the District do not belong to the whole country. But do I correctly understand the Senator to say that all judicial officers in the District are not required to be residents of the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCARRAN. They are not required, I am sorry to say. If I had my way, I would write into the law, in indelible language, that they must be residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PEPPER. It is certainly appropriate in this case.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my idea, and that is why I offer the amendment in this particular case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, for a term of 6 years, or until his successor is appointed and confirmed, one additional judge for the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, who shall at the time of appointment, be a resident of the District of Columbia. The position occupied by the present judge of said juvenile court shall be abolished when a vacancy shall occur in said position or at the expiration of the present 6-year term of said judge, whichever shall first occur.

UNIFORM LAW CONCERNING COMMON-TRUST FUNDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1580), concerning common-trust funds and to make uniform the law with reference thereto.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I know something of this bill. It is a good bill. It is to provide a greater diversification of investments than is practicable in cases where sums of small trusts are invested separately. But I think the bill can be improved by a brief amendment. The bill provides on page 2, lines 2 to 8, for the investment of such funds by fiduciaries or cofiduciaries, and this provision would be strengthened by inserting, before the word "consent", in line 8, the word "written."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMON-TRUST FUNDS

SECTION 1. Any bank or trust company qualified to act as fiduciary in the District of Columbia may, subject to such rules and regulations as may be promulgated from time to time by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System under the provisions of section 11 (k) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (12 U. S. C. 248 (k)), pertaining to the collective investment of trust funds by national banks, establish common-trust funds for the purpose of furnishing investments to itself as fiduciary, or to itself and others as cofiduciaries; and may, as such fiduciary or cofiduciary, invest funds which it lawfully holds for investment in interests in such common-trust funds, if such investment is not prohibited by the instrument, judgment, decree, or order creating such fiduciary relationship, and if, in the case of cofiduciaries, the bank or trust company procures the written consent of its cofiduciaries to such investment.

COURT ACCOUNTINGS

SEC. 2. Unless ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction the bank or trust company operating such common-trust funds is not required to render a court accounting with regard to such common-trust funds; but it may, by application to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, secure approval of such accounting on such conditions as the court may establish.

UNIFORMITY OF INTERPRETATION

SEC. 3. This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of the District of Columbia with the law of those States which enact the Uniform Common-Trust Fund Act.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the "Uniform Common-Trust Fund Act."

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 5. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect the other provisions or applications of the act which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this act are declared to be severable.

REPEAL

SEC. 6. All acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

TIME OF TAKING EFFECT

SEC. 7. This act shall take effect July 1, 1949, and shall apply to fiduciary relationships then in existence or thereafter established.

REMOVAL OF WEEDS FROM LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 885) to provide for the removal of weeds from lands in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. Any person violating the first section of this act shall be punished by fine not exceeding $25.

And in line 6, to change the section number from "4" to "3", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That weeds of a height greater than 4 inches are hereby declared to be a nuisance injurious to health, and it shall be the duty of every owner, occupant, and agent in charge of land in the District of Columbia to keep such land free and clear of such nuisance.

SEC. 2 The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, acting through such agency or agencies as they shall designate, may, upon the failure of any owner, occupant, or agent in charge of land to perform his or its duty prescribed in section 1 of this act, enter on such land and destroy or cause to be destroyed, the weeds upon such land by cutting, by applying chemicals, or by other means.

SEC. 3. The act entitled "An act to cause the removal of weeds from lands in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1899 (30 Stat. 595), is hereby repealed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? From the way in which it reads, if a resident of the District of Columbia fails to weed his garden, until the weeds are 4 inches in height, the District authorities will weed it for him.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, the health authorities feel that weeds are accountable for the spread of certain illnesses, such as hay fever. There is provision at the present time for the destruction of weeds on all public property, but there is no provision by which the District authorities can enter private land and destroy weeds of this nature. The bill merely gives permission to the District authorities, when it is determined that weeds growing on private land constitute a nuisance, to give notice to the owner to have the weeds destroyed. If the owner fails to act within a reasonable period of time, the District authorities may themselves treat the property so as to destroy the weeds. There is no obligation on the landowner whatsoever. The bill merely gives permission to the District authorities to do the work in order to improve the health of the residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, what is the Senator's definition of a weed?

Mr. McGRATH. Noxious plants which are determined to be likely to spread hay fever and other human ailments.

Mr. AIKEN. The bill is not intended to apply to ordinary weeds, is it?

Mr. McGRATH. No. The Health Department must determine that the weeds are of such a nature as might spread human inconvenience or diseases which would be injurious to health.

Mr. AIKEN. Would it be safe to assume that the bill would apply only to such weeds as ragweed, poison ivy, and weeds of that nature?

Mr. McGRATH. Yes; weeds of that nature.

Mr. AIKEN. The reason I asked the question is that it would appear that the District had authority to remove all weeds over 4 inches high from citizens' gardens. With the explanation given by the chairman of the District Committee, I have no objection.

Mr. McGRATH. There are many absentee landowners. A great deal of land is owned by persons who do not reside here, and they, of course, pay no attention to the land, because they seldom come here. The weeds on such land become a nuisance. The bill would permit the District authorities to clean up such land and destroy the weeds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF TOWER TO THE INTERNATIONAL PEACE GARDEN, INC.

The bill (S. 1384) to authorize the transfer of a tower located on the Lower Souris National Wildlife Refuge to the International Peace Garden, Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, in 1935 there was erected on the Lower Souris National Wildlife Refuge near West Hope, N. Dak., a steel fire tower. As a matter of fact, it has not been used for several years. The cost of removal to some other location is $1,000, and the Fish and Wildlife Service officials think they can build a new tower for approximately that amount of money.

The International Peace Garden Park, situated on the boundary between the United States and Canada; operated by both Governments, want this tower, and will pay the cost of removal. The bill has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suppose this bill approaches the de minimis in regard to the matter of giving away Federal property. However, I cannot see my way clear to make an exception even of a piece of property which may be valued at only $1,000. This piece of property obviously has some value, or the particular private organization named would not be seeking it. If I am going to continue to object, as I shall object, to the giving away of very valuable pieces of property, I must as a matter of principle object to small gifts also.

After all, I think it is very important that we establish a clear precedent in this body that we are not going to give Federal property to municipalities, States, or counties, or private welfare groups, even for public purposes, without some return to the taxpayers of the Nation as a whole.

Therefore, if the Senator from North Dakota wishes to accept an amendment providing that the International Peace Garden, Inc., of North Dakota shall pay 50 percent of the fair market value of the property as determined by the Wildlife Service, I shall not object.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. The International Peace Garden, Inc., is an international organization, founded in peace. It is a nonprofit organization. It is for the benefit of the public in general. As testified by the Fish and Wildlife Service, so far as they know, the tower has practically no value. In their estimation it should be valued practically at cost; but to leave it stand there and rust away would be just a waste of property, in my estimation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, it either has value or it has not. If it does not have value, this organization would not be seeking it, and the Federal Wildlife agency had better be selling it for junk rather than giving it away.

It pains me very much to have to apply my objection to such a de minimis case as this, but I know that by taking this position during the past 3 years I have saved huge sums of money for the taxpayers of the country. I am told in the Senate cloak room that Senators approve of the principle for which I have been standing, and that principle was adopted by a certain subcommittee of the Senate of which the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] was chairman. I have been more or less the runner of the interference in this matter over the years.

I should like to accommodate the Senator from North Dakota, but if this tower is not worth very much, then the Wildlife Service will not get a very high price for it, and if it does not, the purchasers will have to pay only 50 percent of its fair market value.

Only one more word, Mr. President, and I shall be through. I am asking the department which has made assessments during the last 3 years to prepare for me a compilation or report on the assessments it has made, because I serve notice on Federal departments today that I do not make objections of this kind on the floor of the Senate without carrying through with them. I am going to check up to see what sort of assessments the department has been making, to see that the taxpayers are protected. I object.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. This bill merely provides for the transfer of a piece of property practically from one branch of the Government to another. It seems to me it would be different if it were going to a private individual.

Mr. MORSE. The fact is it is not being transferred from one department of the Federal Government to another. It is being transferred from a department of the Federal Government to an agency independent of the Federal Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been heard, and the bill will go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understood that the Senator from Oregon had not objected and would not object if the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon withhold his objection?

Mr. MORSE. I am withholding my objection until my amendment is either adopted or rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will accept the amendment which has been suggested. I realize there is not very much value involved, that the tower is to be transferred to an organization to be used for public service and in the public good. The Wildlife Service has assured me that it would cost more to tear the tower down and move it than the tower is worth. But I see the point of the Senator from Oregon, that he wants to be consistent, and I hope the Senator from North Dakota will accept the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I appreciate the offer, but I should wish first to consult with those interested in the International Peace Garden. I rather believe the tower is so valueless that they would not want it under such considerations.

Mr. MORSE. Under those circumstances, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

EMBLEM DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 62) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim June 20 of each year as Emblem Day was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the 20th day of June of each year as Emblem Day, calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on such day, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the American eagle, the official emblem of the United States, and of the great principles and ideals which it represents and symbolizes, and to renew and rededicate their faith in such principles and ideals.

The preamble was agreed to.

COPYRIGHTS OF FOREIGN WORKS

The bill (H. R. 2285) to amend title 17 of the United States Code entitled "Copyrights" with respect to relaxation of provisions governing copyrights of foreign works, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, this bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Judiciary. I am very happy to give a brief explanation of it.

H. R. 2285 has two parts: One applying to the copyright registration in the United States of all works produced in foreign countries, and the other applying solely to books in the English language.

First. The present United States law requires all foreign authors and publishers to pay a $4 fee and send to the Copyright Office one copy of their book or other work in order to secure copyright registration in the United States. The bill does not change this but gives an option of sending an additional copy of the work and a library card instead of paying the $4 fee.

The matter of the library card was discussed thoroughly in the committee. It is generally accepted that getting the card is worth a great deal more than the $4, because the card itself gives general information which it is sometimes very difficult to obtain unless the card is prepared by the individual who wants to register his book.

As to the second provision, as shown in the report, the present United States law requires all foreign authors and publishers of books and periodicals written in the English language to do two things to obtain copyright in the United States: They must (a) register the book or periodical in the United States Copyright Office within 60 days of publication abroad and (b) manufacture the work in the United States within 4 months thereafter. The bill allows 6 months for registration in the United States Copyright Office and 5 years within which to manufacture in the United States. It also permits the importation into the United States, subject to duty, of 1,500 copies to test the American market.

Mr. President, the advantages of the bill are set forth very fully in the report, and I feel that this is a bill which should be passed.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONOR. Is it not an indication of the need for the legislation that out of some 14,000 or 15,000 books published abroad last year only a hundred-odd were registered in the United States Copyright Office?

Mr. WILEY. That is correct. Fourteen thousand books were published in England alone, yet only 139 written in the English language in England were copyrighted here, as I recall the figures.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask a question, although it may display ignorance.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator never displays ignorance.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What becomes of the second copy of the book that may come in? Does that go to the Library of Congress? Does the Patent Office need to keep two copies, or what becomes of the second one?

Mr. WILEY. One remains in the Patent Office, where it is filed, and one goes to the Library of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2285) to amend title 17 of the United States Code entitled "Copyrights," with respect to relaxation of provisions governing copyright of foreign works, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MURPHY & WISCHMEYER

The bill (S. 1296) for the relief of Murphy & Wischmeyer was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the firm of Murphy & Wischmeyer, of 911 Locust Street, St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $3,323.90, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for increased costs incurred in the performance of its architectural-engineering contract, No. WA-1064, dated January 5, 1942, with the Federal Works Agency, by reason of unavoidable delays on the part of other contractors in the construction and completion of the defense housing project at East Alton, Ill.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JEPTHA R. MACFARLANE

The bill (H. R. 603) for the relief of Jeptha R. Macfarlane, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. G. JONES

The bill (H. R. 636) for the relief of B. G. Jones, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARK B. CRAIG AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 639) for the relief of Mark B. Craig and others, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it appears that on July 5, 1946, there were several blank money-order forms stolen and issued by using fictitious names for both the remitter and payee and the person stealing these forms filled them in and presented to certain post offices to have them cashed. All were of small amounts, as most of them were $100 amounts and one for $300.

It had been the custom to require a payee of money orders to furnish identification before such money orders were cashed. The person who had these money orders presented an Arkansas driver's license and a social-security card; the signatures on these cards were checked with the signatures on the money orders and they were the same, and the claimants have been required to pay the Post Office Department the amount of these money orders.

While the Post Office Department in its report shows that the wrong payments were the result of the employees' failure to secure proper identification before effecting payment of a considerable sum to an unknown person, the Post Office Department does not object to enactment of this bill.

The bill received the unanimous consideration and approval of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 639) for the relief of Mark B. Craig and others, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. REILLY

The bill (H. R. 688) for the relief of John P. Reilly, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MRS. MINERVA C. DAVIS

The bill (H. R. 738) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Minerva C. Davis, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to appropriate the sum of $1,654.30 to the estate of Mrs. Minerva C. Davis in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the amount of check No. 380977, which was made payable to Mrs. Minerva C. Davis, on account of pension due, but arrived at the post office after her death and was returned to the Treasury.

The facts are that Dr. Charles Davis, during his lifetime, was awarded pension under the various service acts, and at the time of his death, he was receiving $50 per month under the act of May 12, 1920. A claim for increased pension was filed by the veteran on September 27, 1920, and was pending at the time of his death. This claim was completed by his wife, Mrs. Minerva C. Davis, and an award covering the period from April 4, 1920, through August 12, 1926, was approved. A check for $1,654.30, the accrued amount due the veteran at his death, was mailed to the widow, but in view of the fact that she died before the check was issued, it was returned and canceled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, can the Senator explain why action on the bill has been delayed for so many years? I notice from the report that 16 years have passed since the initial correspondence between the veteran and the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is no record in the files of the Committee on the Judiciary which could be cited in answer to the Senator's query, if I correctly understood it. It is one of those cases in connection with which a delay took place in filing the claim. The claim now comes to us and has been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was the committee unanimous in its report?

Mr. McCARRAN. It was a unanimous report of the members who were present and constituted a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 738) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Minerva C. Davis, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY OF EL PASO, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 967) for the relief of the city of El Paso, Tex., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL ENSLER AND LOUIS PUCCINELLI

The bill (H. R. 1037) for the relief of Samuel Ensler and Louis Puccinelli, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN KEITH—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1057) for the relief of John Keith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] one or two questions.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not the sponsor of the bill, Mr. President, but I reported the bill on behalf of the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. In this case we have an effort to reimburse a contractor in connection with a 1944 contract with the Federal Works Agency to construct a school in San Diego, Calif. The contractor apparently bid too low and suffered a loss, according to the report, of approximately $19,500, and this particular proposed reimbursement is in the amount of $9,000. It is a little difficult for me to understand how the statement of the Comptroller General to the effect that the error was made by the contractor reconciles with the contractor's computation of his actual loss. I wonder if the Senator from Nevada can explain that.

Mr. McCARRAN. It appears from the report that an error occurred when Mr. Keith in submitting his bid for the contract stated that the sum of $1,000, instead of $10,000, was his bid for one item in the contract. There was the omission of a cipher. That one item of the contract was completed satisfactorily in spite of the loss of $9,000. It is admitted by all who have had to do with this matter that there was a loss to the contractor of $9,000, and that $10,000 was a reasonable and proper bid, and that undoubtedly there had been a mistake, an error in making the bid.

The total of Mr. Keith's bid was $22,000 less than the next lowest bidder, and considerably more than $22,000 less than all other bidders. If this bill is enacted for the reimbursement of $9,000 loss which he sustained his bid would still be $13,000 less than the next lowest bidder. Mr. Keith has submitted a sworn affidavit that he sustained an actual loss as a result of this error.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. In view of the fact that this claim represents a case of a contractor who has received a Government contract by reason of a low bid, and who made a mistake, and now later asks Congress to reimburse him for his error, I ask that the bill go over until I may have an opportunity to study it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JENNIE OLSEN ANDERSON

The bill (H. R. 1076) for the relief of Jennie Olsen Anderson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. LA REE SMOOT

The bill (H. R. 1471) for the relief of E. La Ree Smoot was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. It appears that on November 13, 1943, a building at the Army air base, Madras, Oreg., in which Miss Smoot was employed by the War Department as a clerk-stenographer, caught on fire as the result of the explosion of a flame thrower. In effecting an escape from the burning building Miss Smoot sustained severe burns.

Dr. R. W. Christiansen makes statement dated November 5, 1947, that Miss Smoot was examined by him a few days ago and he found that she had very extensive scars on the regions of the face, body, arms, and hands. The body scars were covered by clothes but those on the forehead, arms, and hands were quite disfiguring. They also cause some disability.

The Bureau of Employees' Compensation recognized liability. However, it could not compensate her for permanent disfigurement. There is no provision in the Employees' Compensation Act to compensate an employee for disfigurement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1471) for the relief of E. La Ree Smoot was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWRENCE REVES

The bill (H. R. 3663) for the relief of Lawrence Reves was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARTERING OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS BY ACT OF CONGRESS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1290) to establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I respectfully request that the able Senator from West Virginia give us an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, this bill rose out of several years' study in the Judiciary Committee, beginning about 1941. Congress is constantly besieged to pass special acts creating nonprofit corporations. Some of them are for good purposes, and some, we have frequently suspected, were not so good. There is no set of regulations in the Federal Government which would govern such nonprofit or alleged nonprofit organizations. As a result, back in 1943 the Judiciary Committee asked that legislation be drafted. A study was made, and this bill, with but two minor changes, was introduced and passed in the Senate in the Eightieth Congress. It went to the House and died in the House because it was not brought to the floor.

The bill would establish a set of regulations under which so-called nonprofit corporations chartered by the Federal Government would operate. It provides for audits of their accounts and for deposit of such audits with the Comptroller General so that they may be studied. If they are actually profit organizations, that fact can be ascertained.

The terms of the bill preclude the utilization of a congressional charter for feathering certain people's nests, or for promoting and obtaining contributions, and things of that kind, without a proper check-up. The bill would provide in the Federal Government what the States have done with respect to the State governments. In the States such corporations are placed under one agency.

The bill provides for an investigation by the Department of Justice of the incorporators and the purpose of the corporation, and a report to the Judiciary Committee upon the introduction of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I inquire of the able Senator from West Virginia whether or not, in the event the Attorney General of the United States should determine that the organization seeking incorporation under Federal charter is a worth-while organization, and makes a favorable report to the Congress, that would automatically mean that the organization would be chartered.

Mr. KILGORE. No.

Mr. LUCAS. What follows after that?

Mr. KILGORE. Then the Congress must act upon the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, which handles such charters. If the Congress decides to go along with the recommendation of the Attorney General and that of the Judiciary Committee, a charter will be granted. If not, it will be refused. Even in the face of an adverse report, Congress might still decide to grant the charter. The report would not be binding upon the Congress. However, the Department of Justice would have the duty of investigating and reporting to the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Congress should be very jealous in granting Federal charters to any organizations, even nonprofit organizations, because once the granting of such charters is begun, there will be no end to the number of applications which will come to the Congress for Federal charters.

After the Attorney General's Office has made a thorough investigation, and a report is made to the committee which is studying the application, and the committee determines that the organization has complied with the regulations laid down by the Congress, I am wondering whether or not the combination of those two facts will be tantamount to the approval by the committee and the Congress of the granting of a charter.

Mr. KILGORE. No, Mr. President. I may say to the distinguished majority leader that that is not the intent and purpose of the proposed legislation. The intent and purpose is, first, to lay down a definite course of action, and to prescribe what the charter must contain and what the application must contain. Then the application is submitted to the department for investigation, to see if the purpose is worthy, and if the sponsors are worthy.

Following that, a report is made to the Congress, which is not in any way binding upon the Congress; nor should it be accepted by the Congress as a guide. This is merely an information-gathering service to enable us to pass upon the question.

I understand the point of the majority leader. We in the Judiciary Committee have been pestered to death. Witnesses have appeared before us who have said, "The reason we want this charter is that we can raise money faster if we have a Federal charter."

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONOR. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois that our subcommittee which handled the bill anticipated that it would have exactly the opposite effect from that which is feared by the distinguished majority leader. Everyone who discussed it with us thought it would have a deterrent effect on indiscriminate applications for Federal charters. One of the purposes of favorable action by the Judiciary Committee is to discourage promiscuous application for such charters.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me say to the distinguished majority leader that while the bill which passed the Senate in the Eightieth Congress was still pending there was a great decrease in the number of applications for Federal charters. Those which were received were in conformity with the provisions of the bill, but even some of those were turned down. Immediately after the Eightieth Congress we suddenly had a flood of applications for charters, none of which were in conformity with the rules laid down in the bill.

The idea is to provide some method by which the granting of Federal charters can be controlled, similar to the method employed in some States for the regulation of organizations which operate under State charters. Under the present arrangement, there is no check-up. We have no way of determining the worthiness of the organization or of its sponsors. Under the terms of this bill, such a method would be provided. Those who contribute to the organization would have a public agency to which they could go for information. There would be a guiding agency. We believe that this legislation would add an additional screen which would eliminate a certain element. We do not believe that it would remove all our difficulties, but it would remove some of the difficulties with which we have been faced.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. If this bill were enacted into law, would not organizations which have made applications in the past and which do not possess the qualifications which the Senator has mentioned, in their enthusiasm to obtain a Federal charter, be able to qualify? If they qualified under these regulations and received the approval of the Attorney General, it seems to me that under those circumstances the Congress would have a very difficult time in vetoing the action of the committee and the Attorney General.

I regret that I must disagree with my friend from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR]. I am still fearful that as a result of this bill we might open the flood-gates for a great number of organizations to apply for Federal charters. They would be able to get the ear of the Congress and the Attorney General, and then would say, "We have complied with the law which you gentlemen have enacted. Here it is in black and white. We have complied with every regulation you have laid down, and the Attorney General of the United States has approved the organization. Consequently we feel that we are entitled to a Federal charter."

The Senator from West Virginia says that, of course, we could still deny a Federal charter. But I am thinking about the pressure which would be brought upon Members of Congress after the conditions had been complied with. I undertake to say that very few Members of Congress would be able to withstand the pressure of such organizations after they had complied with the requirements.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I should like to say, in reply to the Senator from Illinois——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator from Illinois objecting to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LUCAS. I have not objected yet. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KILGORE. The committee does not ask, and the bill does not contemplate, a recommendation of any kind from the Department of Justice and the Attorney General. The bill merely directs that the committee shall submit the application to the FBI for a detailed report as to the proponents, the purpose, and other related matters, and that a report shall then be made.

The Congress still will be faced with the same duties it previously has had. But in the bill we provide that certain things which have not been done in the past must be done, and certain conditions met.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONOR. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that the committee does not feel that the Congress will be relinquishing any of its rights or duties, as a result of the passage of this measure, but still will have as much responsibility as heretofore in respect to the determination of what corporations, if any, shall be chartered.

Under this measure nothing more would be done than under a routine bill calling for the Department of Justice to pass upon the matter involved.

After an investigation is conducted by the Department of Justice, which of course has available to it more adequate facilities than the committee has, as of today, we believe that much more information will be available to the committee members, to enable them to determine whether the organization concerned should be chartered.

In voting unanimously to report this measure, the committee did not have the slightest fear that its enactment would result in encroachment upon the rights or responsibilities of the committee or of the Congress, but, to the contrary, believed that it would aid the committee and the Congress in distinguishing between the various applications for charters which might be made.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me say that after the bill passed the Senate in the Eightieth Congress, three organizations presented the very arguments to which the majority leader has referred. The applications of all three of those organizations were turned down by the committee, which refused to report the bills drawn up in their behalf. The committee took that position because there was some question as to the motives involved.

So the committee still examines the motives, and the responsibility will still rest upon the Congress in general and the Committee on the Judiciary in particular.

However, this measure will cause additional facilities to be provided, and will require an annual audit, which is vitally important, and cannot otherwise be provided. The bill also will establish a repository for such an audit.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I cannot agree with my distinguished friend as to the value of this type of legislation, if under it the responsibilities of the committee will in any way be decreased. The Senator has said that the responsibilities will remain the same, regardless of the fact that rules and regulations will be established and a report will be obtained from the Attorney General. Nevertheless, the Senator has said that he considers that the committee's responsibilities will remain the same as they would be if the proposed legislation were not passed.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me say to the distinguished majority leader that when the Senate created its legislative drafting service, that action did not excuse Members of the Senate for introducing bad legislation, but gave them a facility which was badly needed in connection with the drafting of legislation. Likewise, the Legislative Reference Service was a facility which was badly needed. Similarly, the executive assistants who have been provided for Senators have been badly needed; but their appointment did not decrease the responsibility of Senators. Of course, if we were to infer that all Members of the Senate would lie down on the job, that would be a different matter.

At the present time those who have not served as chairman of the subcommittee charged with the handling of this matter can scarcely appreciate the difficulties involved. The Senator from West Virginia was, unfortunately, for 4 years chairman of the subcommittee, and had a painful and bloody experience in finding out these things.

The bill now before us has been drafted in part for the purpose of permitting whoever is chairman of the subcommittee to obtain the information he will need in making a report to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what would happen to other organizations, under this measure, if enacted.

Section 3 provides that no corporation shall be organized if any part of its income is paid to any of its members. Let me point out, for instance, that the American Legion has some very good persons who serve as its officials.

Mr. KILGORE. But they are paid salaries as employees, not as members of the Legion.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the bill says that no member shall draw any part of the income of the organization, as paid by its members.

Mr. KILGORE. The national commander of the American Legion does not draw a salary.

Mr. ANDERSON. No, but Mr. Taylor does.

Mr. KILGORE. But other Legionnaires may be employed, and they are employees. We feel that that provision would not affect them. I should be glad to have the distinguished Senator from

New Mexico suggest a provision which would protect in that situation. But this measure contemplates that no one shall organize a nonprofit corporation or be a stockholder or member of a nonprofit corporation for his own personal benefit. However, if he becomes an employee of the organization, not an executive of it, he may be paid by the organization.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me refer to the situation relative to the Boy Scouts. I happen to be a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America. The person who administers that organization is a member of the Council. Under this measure, he would be prohibited from receiving pay.

Furthermore, this measure contains a provision that the officers of the corporation must be elected by democratic procedures. Many years ago I was elected president of an organization known as the Rotary International. At that time the election was conducted by democratic methods. However, at the present time that organization uses a system which I do not regard as being democratic by a handful of men who serve on its board. Under the provisions of the measure we are now considering, that organization might be prevented from obtaining a charter.

Frankly, I am afraid of the situation in that respect.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from New Mexico understands that this measure would apply only to future applicants.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand that; but I realize that if this measure had been in effect in the past, the American Legion could not have obtained a charter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3181) to provide for more effective conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THYE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] reported the bill. He does not seem to be present at this moment.

Mr. THYE. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INTERSTATE COMPACT FOR DIVISION OF WATERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The bill (H. R. 2566) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION OF LAND TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, KY.

The bill (H. R. 3259) to add to the Abraham Lincoln National Historical Park, Ky., certain land acquired by the United States for that purpose was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARL PIOWATY AND W. J. PIOWATY—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 478) for the relief of Carl Piowaty and W. J. Piowaty was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the two Piowatys, Carl and W. J., are farmers residing in Orange County, Fla. They were 2 of 50 farmers who planted certain crops for war purposes in the year 1943, and for that purpose they received certain advances from the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

It is my understanding that due to climatic and weather conditions, the crops of the whole group failed; but when it came to obtaining releases from the necessity of repaying the loans—repayment being required under the contract, unless the local war board certified that the losses sustained were not chargeable to poor agricultural husbandry—the other 48 growers obtained acquittals from the war-board members of that county, but these 2 men did not. The members of the local war board refused to certify that these two men had used proper agricultural practices.

The matter went to trial in the Florida courts. It appeared that the members of the local war board had not actually seen the property or visited it, but made their findings upon the report of the field agent of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. Judgment went against these two men—the Piowatys—and was appealed to the Supreme Court of Florida, which divided 4 to 3—4 for sustaining the judgment of the lower court on the ground that these two men had not been shown to have used proper agricultural practices, and 3 for reversal on the ground that the Piowatys had used proper practices.

The claim was brought to the Congress last year.

Now, for the first time, this matter comes to the floor of the Senate.

It was the feeling of the Senators from Florida that these two men, being the only ones out of the 50 for whom cancellation of their remaining indebtedness was not permitted, and the question having been found to be as close as it was by the Supreme Court of Florida, the loan should be canceled, which would mean the cancellation of the judgment based upon the suit as upheld by the supreme court by the 4-to-3 decision I have just mentioned. That was also the finding of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the county war board refused the claim, and it has also been denied by two courts, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

DISPOSITION OF FARM CAMPS

The bill (H. R. 2906) to provide a 1 year's extension of time for the disposition of farm labor camps to public or semipublic agencies or nonprofit associations of farmers, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida one or two questions, if he will yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I wonder why the Secretary of Agriculture has failed to sell these farm labor camps as he was directed to do by Congress some 2 years ago. Why that lapse of time, when the properties could have been sold on a high market?

Mr. HOLLAND. I may say to the distinguished Senator that a great many of the camps have been disposed of, but there are still undisposed of, as shown by the report, a certain number of the camps. The difficulty has been to sell them to cooperative associations or others who will maintain the camps for the original purpose; that is, for the housing of migratory agricultural laborers. It is the feeling of the Secretary of Agriculture, as reported to our committee, that an additional year's time may enable him to make such disposal of the remaining camps. Failure to pass the pending bill would simply mean that he is under mandatory direction from the Congress to dispose of them, however he may, between now and June 30, which did not appeal to the committee as being a reasonable disposition to make of the matter.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, how many of the labor camps were there originally?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have the number in the report, if the Senator will bear with me a moment.

Mr. MORSE. There were 53.

Mr. HOLLAND. There were 53 originally, of which 14 have been disposed of, 39 are not disposed of. I can speak with assurance only of those which are undisposed of in the State of Florida. They are being operated by associations not for profit, which are using them for the original purpose, but which have not been willing to buy the camps at the prices fixed by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, answering further, I should say candidly to the Senator that I understand the Department of Agriculture is endeavoring and proposing to work out an arrangement under which the camps can be transferred to a housing agency for more permanent operation in accordance with the original purpose. This year's extension however will allow one of two things—either the disposal of the camps, under the purpose of the original bill, or if the Congress so decides, meantime, the turning over of these remaining camps to such objective as the Congress proposes, in connection with a permanent housing program for agricultural labor.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to ask a further question. I notice in the report that in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture he says:

> It has been suggested that the remaining farm-labor camps should be dealt with as a part of the low-rent housing of the Nation-wide housing program.

In view of the fact that that law has not been enacted by both Houses of Congress, I wonder whether he is not a little premature in suggesting this as a part of that program.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I am sorry I was unable to hear the Senator's question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was just reading that portion of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture in which he outlines his plan to use these labor camps as a part of the national housing program, and, in view of the fact that that law itself has not yet been passed by Congress, I was wondering whether he was not ahead of himself a little.

Mr. HOLLAND. If the Senator will permit me to say so, I thought I made it clear that this was simply a hope and expectation and recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. The extension of the existing bill for 1 year would leave two alternatives; one, the continuing effort to dispose of the camps, or any of them, under the provisions of the existing law; the other, giving opportunity to Congress—not to anybody else—to carry out these recommendations with reference to the transfer to a housing organization, not yet formed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida accept an amendment limiting this to 6 months instead of a year?

Mr. HOLLAND. If the Senator should insist upon it, of course, I would. But I think the Senator would cut down the opportunity to work out this whole program, because if Congress is to be in adjournment by some time in July, I think it will not allow the requisite time to work out this matter. It was my feeling that the 1 year was the smallest amount of time which would allow a reasonable working out—a working out in two directions, either the sale, the disposition, which has to be one by one, of course, to organized groups of farmers, in the particular localities, of the remaining 39, or the change in policy, which can be effectuated only by the Congress.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. It is true, is it not, that we have already had one extension, because we found it necessary to have an extension not only for the purpose of giving the Department more time to sell the property, but, last year, we had to make use of some of this property in connection with the itinerant-worker problem. I want to say to my good friend, I know the situation on the west coast, and in that area we have been making use of this property to house itinerant workers whom the Congress, in a law which was enacted, authorized us to import, from Florida, for example, to help in the sugarbeet fields and in some of our orchards. I know that at the present time, as the Senator from Florida has pointed out, effort is being made to dispose of these facilities to farm groups, so that they will be available, in the communities in which they are located, for occupancy by transient and itinerant workers. We all know that there is a great need for decent housing for such workers. I may say to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] that I think to prescribe a 6 months' limitation in the bill, in view of what is transpiring in that locality at the present time, would allow too short a time for the equitable disposal of these projects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In view of that explanation, I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2906) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE FOREST FIRE PROTECTION COMPACT

The bill (S. 1659) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate forest fire protection compact, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to an interstate forest fire protection compact, as hereinafter set out; but before any province of the Dominion of Canada shall be made a party to such compact, the further consent of Congress shall first be obtained. Such compact reads as follows:

NORTHEASTERN INTERSTATE FOREST FIRE PROTECTION COMPACT

ARTICLE I

The purpose of this compact is to promote effective prevention and control of forest fires in the northeastern region of the United States and adjacent areas in Canada by the development of integrated forest fire plans, by the maintenance of adequate forest fire fighting services by the member States, by providing for mutual aid in fighting forest fires among the States of the region and for procedures that will facilitate such aid, and by the establishment of a central agency to coordinate the services of member States and perform such common services as member States may deem desirable.

ARTICLE II

This agreement shall become operative immediately as to those States ratifying it whenever any two or more of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts have ratified it and the Congress has given its consent. Any State not mentioned in this article which is contiguous with any member State may become a party to this compact. Subject to the consent of the Congress of the United States, any Province of the Dominion of Canada which is contiguous with any member State may become a party to this compact by taking such action as its laws and the laws of the Dominion of Canada may prescribe for ratification. In this event, the term "State" in this compact shall include within its meaning the term "province" and the procedures prescribed shall be applied in the instance of such provinces, in accordance with the forms and practices of the Canadian Government.

ARTICLE III

Each State joining herein shall appoint three representatives to a Commission hereby designated as the Northeastern Forest Fire Protection Commission. One shall be the State Forester or officer holding an equivalent position in such State who is responsible for forest-fire control. The second shall be a member of the legislature of such State designated by the Commission or committee on interstate cooperation of such State, or if there be none, or if said Commission on interstate cooperation cannot constitutionally designate the said member, such legislator shall be designated by the governor thereof: Provided, That if it is constitutionally impossible to appoint a legislator as a commissioner from such State, the second member shall be appointed by the governor of said State in his discretion. The third member shall be a person designated by the governor as the responsible representative of the governor. In the event that any province of the Dominion of Canada shall become a member of this Commission, it shall designate three members who will approximate this pattern of representation to the extent possible under the law and practices of such province. This Commission shall be a body corporate with the powers and duties set forth herein.

ARTICLE IV

It shall be the duty of the Commission to make inquiry and ascertain from time to time such methods, practices, circumstances and conditions as may be disclosed for bringing about the prevention and control of forest fires in the area comprising the member States, to coordinate the forest-fire plans and the work of the appropriate agencies of the member States and to facilitate the rendering of aid by the member States to each other in fighting forest fires.

The Commission shall formulate and, in accordance with need, from time to time, revise a regional forest-fire plan for the entire region covered by the compact which shall serve as a common forest-fire plan for that area.

The Commission shall, more than one month prior to any regular meeting of the legislature in any signatory State, present to the governor and to the legislature of the State its recommendations relating to enactments to be made by the legislature of that State in furthering the interests and purposes of this compact.

The Commission shall consult with and advise the appropriate administrative agencies of the States party hereto with regard to problems connected with the prevention and control of forest fires and recommend the adoption of such regulations as it deems advisable.

The Commission shall have power to recommend to the signatory States any and all measures that will effectuate the prevention and control of forest fires.

ARTICLE V

Any two or more member States may designate the Northeastern Forest Fire Protection Commission as a joint agency to maintain such common services as those States deem desirable for the prevention and control of forest fires. Except in those cases where all member States join in such designation for common services, the representatives of any group of such designating States in the Northeastern Forest Fire Protection Commission shall constitute a separate section of such Commission for the performance of the common service or services so designated provided that, if any additional expense is involved, the States so acting shall appropriate the necessary funds for this purpose. The creation of such a section as a joint agency shall not affect the privileges, powers, responsibilities or duties of the States participating therein as embodied in the other articles of this compact.

ARTICLE VI

The Commission may request the United States Forest Service to act as the primary research and coordinating agency of the Northeastern Forest Fire Protection Commission, in cooperation with the appropriate agencies in each State and the United States Forest Service may accept the initial responsibility in preparing and presenting to the Commission its recommendations with respect to the regional fire plan. Representatives of the United States Forest Service may attend meetings of the Commission and of groups of member States.

ARTICLE VII

The Commission shall annually elect from its members a chairman and a vice chairman. The Commission shall appoint such officers or employees as may be required to carry the provisions of this compact into effect, shall fix and determine their duties, qualifications and compensation, and may at its pleasure, remove or discharge any such officer or employee. The Commission shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its business. It may establish and maintain one or more offices for the transaction of its business and may meet at any time or place but must meet at least once a year.

A majority of the members of the Commission representing a majority of the signatory States shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of its general business, but no action of the Commission imposing any obligation on any signatory State shall be binding unless a majority of the members from such signatory State shall have voted in favor thereof. For the purpose of conducting its general business, voting shall be by State units.

The representatives of any two or more member States, upon notice to the chairman as to the time and purpose of the meeting, may meet as a section for the discussion of problems common to those States.

Sections established by groups of member States shall have the same powers with respect to officers, employees, and the maintenance of offices as are granted by this article to the Commission. Sections may adopt such rules, regulations, and procedures as may be necessary for the conduct of their business.

ARTICLE VIII

It shall be the duty of each member State to formulate and put in effect a forest-fire plan for that State and to take such measures as may be recommended by the Commission to integrate such forest-fire plan with the regional forest-fire plan.

Whenever the State forest-fire control agency of a member State requests aid from the State forest-fire control agency of any other member State in combatting, controlling, or preventing forest fires, it shall be the duty of the State forest-fire control agency of that State to render all possible aid to the requesting agency which is consonant with the maintenance of protection at home.

Each signatory State agrees to render aid to the Forest Service or other agencies of the Government of the United States in combatting, controlling, or preventing forest fires in areas under their jurisdiction located within the member State or a contiguous member State.

ARTICLE IX

Whenever the forces of any member State are rendering outside aid pursuant to the request of another member State under this compact, the employees of such State shall, under the direction of the officers of the State to which they are rendering aid, have the same powers (except the power of arrest), duties, rights, privileges, and immunities as comparable employees of the State to which they are rendering aid.

No member State or its officers or employees rendering outside aid pursuant to this compact shall be liable on account of any act or omission on the part of such forces while so engaged, or on account of the maintenance or use of any equipment or supplies in connection therewith.

All liability that may arise either under the laws of the requesting State or under the laws of the aiding State or under the laws of a third State on account of or in connection with a request for aid, shall be assumed and borne by the requesting State.

Any member State rendering outside aid pursuant to this compact shall be reimbursed by the member State receiving such aid for any loss or damage to, or expense incurred in the operation of any equipment answering a request for aid, and for the cost of all materials, transportation, wages, salaries, and maintenance of employees and equipment incurred in connection with such request: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any assisting member State from assuming such loss, damage, expense, or other cost or from loaning such equipment or from donating such services to the receiving member State without charge or cost.

Each member State shall provide for the payment of compensation and death benefits to injured employees and the representatives of deceased employees in case employees sustain injuries or are killed while rendering outside aid pursuant to this compact, in the same manner and on the same terms as if the injury or death were sustained within such State.

For the purposes of this compact the term "employee" shall include any volunteer or auxiliary legally included within the forest-fire-fighting forces of the aiding State under the laws thereof.

The Commission shall formulate procedures for claims and reimbursement under the provisions of this article.

Aid by a member State to an area subject to Federal jurisdiction beyond the borders of such State shall not be required under this compact unless substantially the same provisions of this article relative to powers, liabilities, losses, and expenses in connection with such aid are embodied in Federal laws.

ARTICLE X

When appropriations for the support of this Commission or for the support of common services maintained by the Commission or a section thereof under the provisions of article V are necessary, the Commission or section thereof shall allocate the costs among the States affected with consideration of the amounts of forested land in those States that will receive protection from the service to be rendered and the extent of the forest-fire problem involved in each State, and shall submit its recommendations accordingly to the legislatures of the affected States.

The Commission shall submit to the governor of each State, at such time as he may request, a budget of its estimated expenditures for such period as may be required by the laws of such State for presentation to the legislature thereof.

The Commission shall keep accurate books of account, showing in full its receipts and disbursements, and said books of account shall be open at any reasonable time to the inspection of such representatives of the respective signatory States as may be duly constituted for that purpose.

On or before the first day of December of each year, the Commission shall submit to the respective governors of the signatory States a full and complete report of its activities for the preceding year.

ARTICLE XI

The representatives from any member State may appoint and consult with an advisory committee composed of persons interested in forest-fire protection.

The Commission may appoint and consult with an advisory committee of representatives of all affected groups, private and governmental.

ARTICLE XII

The Commission may accept any and all donations, gifts and grants of money, equipment, supplies, materials, and services from the Federal or any local government, or any agency thereof and from any person, firm, or corporation, for any of its purposes and functions under this compact, and may receive and utilize the same, subject to the terms, conditions, and regulations governing such donations, gifts, and grants.

ARTICLE XIII

Nothing in this compact shall be construed to authorize or permit any member State to curtail or diminish its forest-fire-fighting forces, equipment, services, or facilities, and it shall be the duty and responsibility of each member State to maintain adequate forest-fire-fighting forces and equipment to meet normal demands for forest-fire protection within its borders.

Nothing in this compact shall be construed to limit or restrict the powers of any State ratifying the same to provide for the prevention, control, and extinguishment of forest fires, or to prohibit the enactment or enforcement of State laws, rules, or regulations intended to aid in such prevention, control, and extinguishment in such State.

Nothing in this compact shall be construed to affect any existing or future cooperative relationship or arrangement between the United States Forest Service and a member State or States.

ARTICLE XIV

This compact shall continue in force and remain binding on each State ratifying it until the legislature or governor of such State takes action to withdraw therefrom. Such action shall not be effective until 6 months after notice thereof has been sent by the chief executive of the State desiring to withdraw to the chief executives of all States then parties to the compact.

SEC. 2. Without further submission of the compact, the consent of Congress is given to any State to become a party to it in accordance with its terms.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

CARSON NATIONAL FOREST, N. MEX.

The bill (H. R. 55) to include certain lands in the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Was Calendar 385, H. R. 4151, called?

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 4151 was passed when we reached a similar Senate bill, Calendar 353, S. 1448.

SALE OF LAND AT SOUTH NAKNEK, ALASKA, FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES

The bill (H. R. 2812) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land at South Naknek to the Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church of North America, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. May we have an explanation of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon requests an explanation of the bill. The Senator from Wyoming reported the bill. He does not seem to be present.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I do not find the bill at the moment, but I am familiar with it, and I am sure it is a bill to which the Senator would not object, if he had an explanation of it.

Mr. MORSE. I have the bill in front of me, I may say to my good friend from New Mexico, but I do not see anything about the price. It says "that upon the filing of an application and the payment of $10 within 1 year from the date of this act."

How much does the applicant in fact get for the $10?

Mr. BUTLER. He gets sixty-one one-hundredths of an acre.

Mr. MORSE. It provides "that upon the filing of his application and the payment of $10 within 1 year from the date."

How much land is involved in connection with the payment of $10?

Mr. BUTLER. It is sixty-one one-hundredths of an acre.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the practice in Alaska makes the acquisition of title to real estate extremely difficult, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] knows better, I am sure, than does any other Senator on the floor. The bill was drawn to direct the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land there. It was thought proper to provide a complete title, and it was felt there would never be occasion for reversion of this particular piece of land to the Government.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I understand from my good friend from Nebraska that this fraction of an acre of land will be used for cemetery purposes, and I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2812) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2931) to provide for the conveyance by the United States to Frank C. Wilson of certain lands formerly owned by him was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming not being present, all the information I can give is what is contained in the report, which amounts to this, that Mr. Wilson donated to the Government of the United States a certain tract of land, the same tract which it is now proposed that the Government give back to Mr. Wilson. The donation was for the purpose of a wild fowl refuge, but the plan was not successful, and the Fish and Wildlife Service and the Department of the Interior are anxious to get the land off their hands and return it to Mr. Wilson.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Nebraska know how much money has been expended on it?

Mr. BUTLER. Very little money has been expended. I think that is one reason that Mr. Wilson is willing to take the land back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TIMBER OPERATIONS ON MENOMINEE INDIAN RESERVATION, WIS.

The bill (H. R. 3396) to amend the law relating to timber operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS TO ALASKA COUNCIL OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1337) to authorize the sale of certain public lands in Alaska to the Alaska Council of Boy Scouts of America for recreation and other public purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with an amendment on page 2, after line 14, to insert a new section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That such conveyance shall contain the further provision that if the Alaska Council of Boy Scouts of America shall at any time cease to use the property so conveyed for recreation and other public purposes title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CLARIFICATION OF OVERTIME COMPENSATION PROVISIONS OF THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 858) to clarify the overtime compensation provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, as applied in longshore, stevedoring, building, and construction industries, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare with amendments on page 1, line 7, after the word "employee", to strike out "employed in the longshore, stevedoring, building, and construction industries"; and on page 2, after line 19, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. No employer shall be subject to any liability or punishment under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (in any action or proceeding commenced prior to or on or after the date of the enactment of this act), on account of the failure of said employer to pay an employee compensation for any period of overtime work performed prior to the date of enactment of this act, if the compensation paid prior to such date for such work was at least equal to the compensation which would have been payable for such work had the amendment made by section 1 of this act been in effect at the time of such payment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, the bill is not in my book. I have no personal objection to it, but I believe it should be explained or that we should have a copy of it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this bill passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 230 to 7. It is for the purpose of clarifying the Fair Labor Standards Act. Is the Senator familiar with that act?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I know what the bill is now, and I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to clarify the overtime compensation provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended."

LIQUIDATION OF TRUSTS UNDER TRANSFER AGREEMENTS

The bill (S. 930) to provide for the liquidation of trusts under the transfer agreements with State rehabilitation corporations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the bill provides for transferring back to the States approximately $50,000,000 worth of assets, representing money originally granted for rehabilitation purposes in 1934, 1935, and 1936. The funds were granted to the States.

Transfer agreements were entered into between the individual State rural rehabilitation corporations and the administrator of the Resettlement Administration.

The Senator from North Dakota is extremely interested in this bill. He came to the Department some time ago and tried to get a transfer to the States. Some officials feel that the assets should remain in the Federal Government and be given to the Farm Credit Administration. The States believe the money should go back to them and be used for rural rehabilitation within those States. The Senator from North Dakota was very persuasive when he came to see me in another capacity. I tried at that time to get a bill reported, but it did not then seem possible. Since then we have tried to bring the matter to a head and make it possible for the funds to get out of the situation in which they are at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the feeling of the Department?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is against this bill. It feels that the funds should be retransferred to the Farm Credit Administration, but it is the feeling of the Senator from North Dakota and it is my feeling, and I think, the feeling of some other persons, that the funds should be transferred back to the States to whom they were originally granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the Senator is in favor of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection.

The bill (S. 930) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Rural Rehabilitation Corporation Trust Liquidation Act."

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is hereby authorized and directed to take such action as may be appropriate and necessary to liquidate, as expeditiously as possible but within 5 years from the effective date of this act, trusts under the transfer agreements with the several State rural rehabilitation corporations, and is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with responsible officials to that end.

(b) The Secretary, insofar as is necessary to protect the interests of the United States, and the corporations shall proceed forthwith to the conversion to cash of investments constituting the trust assets by sale of real and personal properties, and by collection of loans and accounts receivable according to the tenor of such obligations.

(c) An application for the return of such properties shall be made to the Secretary by the State rural rehabilitation corporation pursuant to appropriate resolution of its board of directors. The application shall contain a covenant, binding upon the corporation when accepted by the Secretary on behalf of the United States, that the corporation will abide by the determinations and apportionments of the Secretary provided for in this act and the payments made by the Secretary pursuant to this act, that the returned assets and the income therefrom will be used only for such of the rural rehabilitation purposes permissible under the corporation's charter as may from time to time be agreed upon by the corporation and the Secretary; and that not to exceed 3 percent of the book value of the corporation's assets will be expended by the corporation for administrative purposes during any year, without the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. If the rural rehabilitation corporation of any State has been dissolved and is not revived or reincorporated or, for any other reason, is unable to make such application or to accept and administer such properties, the application and subsequent agreements may be made by such other agency or official of that State as may be designated by the State legislature. The Secretary may transfer the trust funds or properties of such corporation to such successor agency or official if adequate provisions are made by the State legislature for holding the United States and the Secretary free from liability by virtue of the transfer to such successor agency or official.

(d) Except as hereinafter provided, upon receipt of appropriate application meeting the requirements of this act, the Secretary shall do all things necessary to return to each such applicant all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all cash, real and personal property, or the proceeds thereof, held on the date of the approval of this act by the Secretary as trustee for the account of such State corporation, except that the Secretary may deduct from the funds of each such State corporation the expenses incident to completion of such transfer: Provided, That such transfer shall, insofar as possible, be accomplished in a manner consistent with the provisions of the trust agreement with each State rural rehabilitation corporation.

(e) In the event no application is made, as provided for in this act within 5 years from the effective date hereof or disclaimer or release of interest under the trust transfer agreement by any State through its legislature, the Secretary shall cause all proceeds from assets held under or for the account of the transfer agreement with that State to be covered into miscellaneous receipts in the United States Treasury.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall apply also to all properties and assets of State rural rehabilitation corporations held by Federal agencies other than the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of Executive Order No. 9070, or otherwise. For the purposes of this act the assets of other corporations, derived through the use of Federal Emergency Relief Administration funds, and made available to them through State rural rehabilitation corporations or otherwise acquired by them for rural rehabilitation purposes, shall be considered as a part of the trust property of the State rural rehabilitation corporations in their respective States.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this act, the Secretary shall have the power to—

(a) employ on a contract basis (without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, but the contract shall in each case specify what civil-service and related laws, if any, shall be applicable to the employment after it has been made) such appraisers, accountants, attorneys, and other personnel as he may deem necessary, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to aid in the liquidation and transfer of the properties and assets pursuant to this act, and in the entering into of agreements with the corporations, or other agencies or officials, designated pursuant to section 2 (c) hereof, regarding the rural rehabilitation purposes for which the property and assets shall thereafter be used by them, and in determining that such agreed purposes are being carried out. The fees, salaries, and expenses of such appraisers, accountants, attorneys, and other personnel shall be equitably apportioned by the Secretary among the respective corporations and the amount so determined to be applicable to each such corporation shall be paid by the Secretary from the trust fund of such corporation until the trust is liquidated, and thereafter by the corporation or other agency or official designated pursuant to section 2 (c) hereof. Attorneys so employed, and their fees and expenses, shall be subject to the approval and under the supervision of the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture;

(b) accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services, and, with the consent of the agency concerned, utilize the officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal Government, or of any State, Territory, or political subdivision;

(c) make such rules and regulations and such delegations of authority as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. None of the properties or assets held on the date of the approval of this act by the Secretary as trustee pursuant to trust agreements with the various State rural rehabilitation corporations may be used by the Secretary for any purpose after the effective date of this act, except for the purposes authorized under section 2 (d) of this act, and for loans made prior to July 1, 1949, and to be repaid in full no later than May 1, 1952, but otherwise consistent with the provisions of title II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended (7 U. S. C. A. 1007), where necessary to supplement credit already extended to borrowers from corporation trust funds.

SEC. 6. (a) The determination of the Secretary with respect to the assets to be returned to each State rural rehabilitation corporation or other agency or official designated pursuant to section 2 (c) hereof including, but not limited to interests in properties held jointly for such corporation and the United States, the partition of real property, the expenses incident to each transfer, the liabilities applicable to such properties, and all other phases of the transfer shall be final and conclusive upon each State rural rehabilitation corporation or such successor agency or official designated pursuant to section 2 (c) hereof, and upon all officers and agencies of the United States.

(b) The Secretary shall be saved harmless against any personal liability he may incur in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. Section 2 (f) of the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1062), is hereby repealed.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMPLETION OF ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1754) extending the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1949, was announced as next in order.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, inasmuch as certain phases of this bill are under consideration, may I ask that it go to the foot of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

AMENDMENT TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT OF 1944

The bill (S. 1760) to amend section 101 (b) of the Department of Agriculture Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 734; 7 U. S. C. 429), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 (b) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 734; 7 U. S. C. 429) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with State authorities and with the authorities of the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico in the administration of regulations for the improvement of poultry, poultry products, and hatcheries."

AMENDMENT TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ORGANIC ACT OF 1944

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1749) to amend section 102 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out operations to combat blackfly, white-fringed beetle, and the Hall scale, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment on page 1, line 8, after the word "beetle", to insert "wheat-stem sawfly," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 102 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (act of September 21, 1944, 58 Stat. 735; 7 U. S. C. 147a (a)) be amended by deleting the word "and" immediately following the word "borer"; by adding a comma and the words "citrus blackfly, white-fringe beetle, wheat-stem sawfly, and Hall scale" between the word "weevil" and the immediately following colon; and by adding the words "citrus blackfly," immediately following the comma after the word "fruitflies" in the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 102 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out operations to combat the citrus blackfly, white-fringed beetle, wheat-stem sawfly, and the Hall scale."

TEMPORARY DEFERMENT OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3754) providing for the temporary deferment in certain unavoidable contingencies of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1464) to amend the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act relating to marketing agreements and orders was announced as next in order.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask that this bill go over until the next call of the calendar. I do not know that I shall object to it at the next call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MODIFICATION OF FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT ON THE HEART RIVER, MANDAN, N. DAK.

The bill (S. 1324) to provide for the modification of the Corps of Engineers flood-control project on the Heart River at Mandan, N. Dak., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if we may have a statement of cost in connection with this contemplated modification.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, it would relieve the city of Mandan of a cost of approximately $76,000. The original requirement was much higher than is the case in the usual flood-control project. The Army engineers testified before the Appropriations Committee that over the years this little town of 7,000 persons had suffered damages totaling more than $5,000,000. The average loss and damage since 1943 amounted to $175,000 a year. For the past 3 years and for several years previously the east-west Federal highway has been under water in the town of Mandan for approximately a period of from 10 to 12 days or longer when there has been a flood. There has been water on the main floor of the post office during most of the floods. The city of Mandan is not able to meet the costs. Its levies are limited and its bonds are limited.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1324) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for flood protection at Mandan, N. D., on the Heart River, authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 294, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, by the Flood Control Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 641), is hereby modified to provide that the United States shall construct the necessary works and alterations to provide for interior drainage.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGES, IOWA AND ILLINOIS

The bill (S. 1577) to revive and reenact, as amended, the act entiled "An act creating the City of Clinton Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to acquire by purchase or condemnation and to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa, and at or near Fulton, Ill., approved December 21, 1944, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved December 21, 1944, authorizing the City of Clinton Bridge Commission to acquire, construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges, including approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River at or near the cities of Clinton, Iowa, and Fulton, Ill., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void insofar as it authorizes the construction of a bridge or bridges unless the actual construction thereof be commenced within 3 years and completed within 5 years from the date of approval hereof: And provided further, That section 5 of said act, approved December 21, 1944, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge, or bridges as may be acquired, reconstructed, or constructed, as herein provided, and approaches (including the approach highways, which, in the judgment of the commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary land easements and appurtenances thereto, by an issue or issues of negotiable serial bonds of the commission, bearing interest, payable semiannually, at the rate of not more than 6 percent per annum, the principal and interest of which bonds shall be payable solely from the funds provided in accordance with this act, and such payments may be further secured by mortgage of the bridge or bridges. All such bonds may be registered as to principal alone or both principal and interest, shall be payable as to principal within not to exceed 25 years from the date thereof, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the commission may determine, and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of the bridge or bridges, acquired or constructed, and approaches and the land easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith, when added to any other funds made available to the commission for the use of said purposes. The commission may reserve the right to redeem any or all of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices not exceeding 105 and accrued interest as may be fixed by the commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The commission when it deems it advisable may issue refunding bonds to refinance any outstanding bonds at maturity or before maturity when called for redemption: Provided, That such refunding bonds shall mature within not to exceed 20 years from the date thereof and shall not exceed in principal amount the principal amount of outstanding bonds replaced by such refunding bonds. The commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the commission in respect to the acquisition, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge or bridges, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for the payment of the bonds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law.

"Said bonds may be sold at not less than par after public advertisement for bids to be opened publicly at the time and place stated in such advertisement and at the price bid which will yield the greatest return to the commission for the bonds to be sold. Such advertisement for bids shall be published at least once each week for four consecutive weeks in a newspaper or financial journal having recognized circulation among bidders for bonds of the type and character offered. The price to be paid for the bridge or bridges acquired hereunder shall not exceed the reasonable value thereof as determined by the commission at the time of acquisition. The cost of the bridge to be constructed as provided herein, together with the approaches and approach highways, shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge and for 12 months thereafter, and all engineering, legal, financing, architectural, traffic-surveying, condemnation, and other expenses incident to the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary property, including the cost of acquiring existing franchises and riparian rights relating to the bridge. If the proceeds of the bonds shall exceed the cost as finally determined the excess shall be placed in the fund hereafter provided to pay the principal and interest of such bonds. Prior to the preparation of definitive bonds the commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates without coupons, of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definitive bonds when such bonds that have been executed are available for delivery."

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Three bills went to the foot of the calendar, and the clerk will report the first of the bills.

PAYMENTS ON ACCOUNT OF INCOMPETENT VETERANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 266) removing a limitation affecting the pension, compensation, or retirement pay payable on account of an incompetent veteran without dependents during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That the second proviso of subsection (B) of the first section of the act entitled "An act relating to veterans' pension, compensation, or retirement pay during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1946 (60 Stat. 908), is amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That in any case where the estate of such incompetent veteran derived from any source equals or exceeds $1,500, further payments of such benefits shall not be made until the estate is reduced to $500, but the amount which would be payable but for this proviso shall be paid to the veteran as provided for the lump sum in the preceding proviso but in the event of the veterans' death no part thereof shall be payable:".

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I was not on the floor when this bill was reached on the calendar, and that is why it was put at the foot of the calendar. I shall be glad to give a brief explanation of the bill.

The purpose of the bill is to correct an inequity in the present law relating to payment of compensation to veterans who are mental cases.

Under present law, a veteran who is mentally incompetent and has no dependents does not receive his pension, compensation, or retirement pay while he is hospitalized or cared for by the Veterans' Administration. The same is true for a veteran who is mentally competent but is hospitalized for some physical reason. However, in the case of a veteran suffering physical disability, who is mentally competent, the amounts of pension or compensation withheld during hospitalization are paid to him in a lump sum as soon as he is discharged from the Veterans' Hospital. Under present law, however, the mentally incompetent veteran does not receive the same reimbursement, and if he is discharged as cured, receives nothing at all on account of the pension or compensation withheld during his period of hospitalization.

In some cases, hospitalized veterans who are mentally incompetent have been required to pay certain necessary expenses during the hospitalization period out of their own small savings which may have been acquired prior to their entry into the hospital. In such a case, a veteran who is cured of mental illness may find on his discharge from the hospital that everything he has saved has been absorbed by his personal expenses during his period of hospitalization. None of his withheld compensation would be repaid to him, and he would be forced to make an entirely new start, and without funds.

This bill will correct such a situation, but it is surrounded by safeguards to make sure that the Government is protected against any abuse. Such withheld pension or compensation would be repaid to such a veteran only in the case where the veteran is discharged as mentally competent. No payment would be made in those cases where the veteran dies while still under care. This provision is to prevent sizable estates being built up during a prolonged period of care which would finally go to remote relatives of such a veteran upon his death. Furthermore, the reimbursement would not be paid until the expiration of 6 months following the finding of competency. This waiting period is considered necessary in order to make sure that the discharged veteran is competent, and that no mistake has been made in granting his discharge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill modifying a limitation affecting the pension, compensation, or retirement payment payable on account of an incompetent veteran without dependents during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the second bill passed over, which was Calendar No. 393, House bill 1754.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1754) extending the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1949.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I am requested by another Member of the Senate to ask that this bill go over. I understand there is a time element involved which may require its being voted on soon, but for the time being I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. The clerk will state the next bill which went to the foot of the calendar.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3754) providing for the temporary deferment in certain unavoidable contingencies of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, for the same reasons given in connection with the bill just passed over, I request that this bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. That concludes the call of the calendar.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask that House bill 1211, which is the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate resume the consideration of Senate bill 1843, the bill reported by the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before I explain the bill, I send to the desk two amendments and ask for their immediate consideration. The amendments have to do only with typographical errors, a misspelling of the word "combatant," and insertion of the word "Security" before the words "Resources Board."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendments.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the misspelled word "combatan" and insert in lieu thereof the correct spelling, "combatant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 7, before the word "Resources", it is proposed to insert the word "Security."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, this bill was termed this morning by the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Louis Johnson, as the top priority defense bill requested by the Military Establishment at this session of the Congress. Mr. Johnson made the statement that he considered the bill more important to the Military Establishment, called under the bill "The Department of Defense," than any other single measure sent up by his Department, and I believe he was well within the bounds of good common sense in making the statement.

The bill comes from the committee in its objectivity practically unanimously. It is true that in the committee the vote was 12 for the bill and 1 against it, but the negative vote was not against the bill in principle, but one of the members of the committee felt that we should go even further than the bill goes. So that so far as the philosophy of the bill is concerned, I think I may say with accuracy that the committee is unanimously for it. The difference is as to the degree to which we should go. It comes from the committee with 12 of the 13 members favoring the method provided.

The bill itself is divided into two main parts. The first part has to do with the National Defense Establishment as an institution. We nominate it an executive department, under the terms of the bill. The Cabinet officer who presides over this Department is called "The Secretary of Defense." The executive department itself is called the "The Department of Defense."

Under the Department of Defense, there is the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force. In other words, there are the three separate military departments combined into one executive department presided over by the Secretary of Defense.

Under the Secretary of Defense, as an administrative officer, is the Deputy Secretary of Defense, then under the Secretary of Defense and the Deputy Secretary of Defense is the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or would he prefer that I wait until a little later?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would rather sketch out the bill in its broad outlines, and then we will later fill in the places I have not touched.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

I have stated the basic set-up of the bill, which I am going to present again, in about three sentences, for fear I did not make it explicit the first time.

The bill takes the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force, which we now call the Military Establishment, and puts them all into an executive department of the Government called the Department of Defense. Therefore, hereafter, if the bill shall be enacted, we will have a Department of Defense, with a Department of the Navy, a Department of the Army, and a Department of the Air Force, the three tripods which make up the Department of Defense, which becomes the sole executive agency of the Government in this field.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield after I finish the sentence. As I said, the presiding Cabinet officer is called the Secretary of Defense, and under him is the Deputy Secretary of Defense, and under those two are the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force.

I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, the question I have in mind is with respect to the clarification of the status of the Marines. Where and in what manner will they be fitted into the over-all picture, in order that we may not lose the Marine Corps as an organization and that glorious military unit may not lose its identity in the entire set-up? That is the matter I have in mind.

Mr. TYDINGS. I share the Senator's high regard for the Marine Corps, and, in a sentence, I will say that their status is not touched directly or indirectly by the bill, and cannot be touched directly or indirectly by the bill. Nothing is provided in it that would change the present status of the Marine Corps.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. THYE. In other words, the Marines will continue to maintain their own identity, and it will not be lost. I personally am a former air service man; yet I have a great admiration and respect for the Marines, and I should like to see them continue to retain their identity in some manner so that they will not be lost to the Nation as a great military organization.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can assure the Senator from Minnesota that the identity of the Marine Corps and, indeed, their role and mission will not be lost by this bill. The bill rather removes every reason for fear, and every possible misunderstanding which may have prompted the Senator's question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is proper to ask at this point my first question of the Senator from Maryland, which is, Why do we have the military departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force? Why not have the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force on the same footing with regard to the Secretary of Defense that the Marine Corps has always been to the Secretary of the Navy? Why do we have separate departments at all?

Mr. TYDINGS. In reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, I would say that we have to call the executive function or the administrative function of the Army something, and so, in the over-all picture we call it the Department of Defense and we decided to call the Army, and the Navy, and the Air Force, the Army, Navy, and Air Force, respectively. In the Navy the Marines have their separate department.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that the Marines have done very well without having a separate department of their own?

Mr. TYDINGS. They have a separate administrative head and department.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but they do not have a secretary of the Marine Corps.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but the trouble is that the gentlemen who administer the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force must be called something. What would the Senator call them?

Mr. LODGE. Would it not be enough to have General Bradley administer the Army, Admiral Denfeld the Navy, and General Vandenberg the Air Force, under the Secretary of Defense?

Mr. TYDINGS. No, I would say to the Senator, and I doubt if the Senator would propose it seriously if he had the time to give it more thought, for this reason: that the essence of the bill is to keep the military under the civilian. In this whole bill we have separated with great care the military functions from the civilian functions. We have kept the civilian from telling the military how to make plans for battle, and so forth, and we have stopped the military from telling the civilian how to run the purely administrative features of their establishment.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I quite agree that we ought to keep the military under the civilian, but I think if we have 3 or 4 civilians—I think we have 13 civilians now at the secretarial level—it is much easier for the military to avoid civilian control than if we fix the responsibility in a few individuals, so that the military would not be able to play one civilian against the other if they wanted to do such a thing. That is my thought.

Mr. TYDINGS. I see the Senator's point. But I believe we have eliminated some of the civilian personnel. For example, my recollection is that we used to have a Secretary of War. He is the Secretary of the Army. Then we had an Under Secretary of War. Then we had one, two, or three Assistant Secretaries of War. The witnesses came before our committee and testified that all these Assistant Secretaries were not needed. Therefore we set up a Secretary of the Army and an Under Secretary of the Army and either one or two Assistant Secretaries. Whereas before there were probably one or two more administrative personnel in each department than are provided for under this bill.

I think maybe I can anticipate the point of view the Senator from Massachusetts has in mind, which is a very proper point of view—the elimination of unnecessary personnel—by saying that no witness who appeared before our committee advocated that the Department of the Army should be administrated by the Chief of Staff of the Army, General Bradley. As a matter of fact, General Bradley himself would be opposed to that. I know that from his testimony. What they wanted, however, and what the Senator from Massachusetts wants, and what the committee wants, is when we get down to purely military operations to let the military officers conduct them, without interference from the civilian end, and that, I think, is what the Senator from Massachusetts has in mind.

Mr. LODGE. I notice at the bottom of page 5 of the committee report the statement is made:

> Subsection 201 (b) of the present act is amended to convert the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force from their present status as executive departments to the status of military departments within the Department of Defense. This subsection is regarded as of basic importance, since it retains the three-department concept for administering the services, as opposed to a single-department administration.

Then on the top of page 7 of the committee report appears the following:

> The proviso following paragraph (4) is intended to emphasize the adherence to the three-department principle, referred to in the declaration of policy in section 2 of the 1947 act, by insuring that each of the three military departments shall be administered as departments and not merged into one administrative grouping.

In other words, that statement is asserted and reasserted, and I cannot see the reason for it. If we were to have assistant secretaries to conduct the civilian administrative functions of the departments and were to leave General Bradley, General Vandenberg, and Admiral Denfeld to direct purely military operations, then we would eliminate that whole third wheel which is provided in the bill, and which seems to me to be superfluous.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I understand what the Senator is driving at. I should like to reemphasize again that the military men, General Bradley, General Vandenberg, and Admiral Denfeld have complete and uninterrupted sway over the military functions of their respective branches of the defense establishment without interference in any manner, shape, or form in purely military functions by the civilian personnel therein. However, the three branches, while parts of the national defense establishment, have different roles to perform, different equipment to use, many differences which I shall not take time to hunt out and picture, and therefore the administration has to be different in some respects, while tied into the whole picture.

Insofar as administration is concerned, the military has nothing to do with the administration of the Department per se. When it gets over into the military side, what the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force are to do, and so forth, then the military is supreme in its field. But so far as budgeting and things of that sort are concerned, the civilians are preeminent in that field. That decision is carried down all the way through. That was recommended to us unanimously by Admiral Denfeld, General Bradley, and General Vandenberg. What they wanted to make sure of was that the civilians would not tell them how to conduct a war. And we told them that we certainly were in accord with them on that point. I think it was Admiral Denfeld, speaking for the three chiefs, who said that they wanted civilians to administer the Department, but they wanted the military planning and military direction to be under the chiefs.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Let me say to the able Senator that I think this is a good bill in that it goes in the right direction. It represents a step forward. In particular, I think the last part of the bill, which sets up budgetary control, is a very fine piece of work indeed. It reflects precisely what the Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch wanted to do. It recalls the testimony before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in 1947, which brought to light a very wasteful condition. This bill really provides some machinery to eliminate waste.

As the Senator well knows, 34 cents out of every dollar that goes to the Government goes to the Pentagon. I have seen figures showing that in the case of a stenographer who received $2,000 a year, $68 of her tax went to the Pentagon. I think this bill, in establishing a budgetary control structure, would accomplish a very fine result. So when I ask the Senator these questions, I am looking at things that perplex me, and which may represent defects in the bill; but on the whole I think the bill is a step in the right direction.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will place a pin in his thought for the moment, so that he may carry on as soon as my interruption is completed, I may say that the primary reason for having three Departments for the Department of Defense is, among other things, that the over-all functions of the entire Defense Department are so complex, so varied, so ramified, and so far-reaching that it is necessary to have three branches for proper administartion, just as four infantry regiments, as a rule, are placed in an infantry division, and two or three infantry regiments in a brigade, including the artillery.

Mr. LODGE. There is a triangular division at present.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are three heads for proper administration. That is the reason why we retain the three departments, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. This is not a merger. This is unification. The identity of the three services is maintained, but their general administration is unified into a singleness of purpose.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Am I not correct when I say that the committee considered very carefully the difference between the wording "Secretary of the Army," "Secretary of the Navy," and "Secretary of the Air Force," and the wording in section 204 (a) on page 7, providing for special assistants? As I understand, the special assistants to the Secretary of Defense are the performance men under the Secretary, about whom my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is asking. The purpose of retaining the Secretaries of the three departments, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force—at least in my mind, as one member of the committee—was to provide civilian power over the budgets of the respective forces, as set forth on page 19 of the bill. Furthermore, in my mind at least, it was important to call them Secretaries, because of the prestige involved in other countries. I ask the chairman of the committee if that was not an additional reason?

Mr. TYDINGS. It was one of the reasons.

Mr President, without wishing to be discourteous, let me say to my colleagues that I believe that if they will allow me about 15 minutes without interruption, I can sketch the organization, so that the questions which will then follow will be more in line with what they want to learn about the bill.

I have already stated that henceforth there will be one Department. There will be no Department of the Army, Department of the Navy, and Department of the Air Force, as three separate executive departments. They will be combined—unified, but not merged—into a single executive department called the Department of Defense, administered by the Secretary of Defense. Under him there will be the Deputy Secretary of Defense, with three branches, three military departments—not executive departments—known as the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force, each with a Secretary. They are charged, under the terms of the bill, with administrative duties.

I invite attention to page 4 of the bill, which I believe will clear up, in large measure, the civilian purpose of the bill. I invite the attention of the junior Senator from Massachusetts particularly to the following language:

under the direction of the President, he—

That is, the Secretary of Defense—

shall be responsible for exercising direction, authority, and control over the Department of Defense, including the performance of the following duties:

(1) Establishment of policies and programs for the Department of Defense.

(2) Exercise of direction, authority, and control over the affairs of the Department of Defense;

This is the milk in the coconut:

(3) The taking of appropriate steps, including such coordination, transfers, and consolidations as may be necessary, to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, health, research, and personnel, and in such other fields, as he may deem proper—

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], I invite his attention especially to the following language. This is what he asked me about, and I want him to know that it is specifically in the bill—

but this shall not be construed to authorize the Secretary of Defense to reassign the combatant functions assigned to the military departments by sections 205 (e), 206 (b), 206 (c), and 208 (f) hereof—

The latter having reference to the Marine Corps—

or to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another or to make details or assignments of military personnel in a manner substantially to affect or change such assigned combatant functions.

I merely point that out because I want the Senator to know that we have specifically reemphasized the point which he raised.

Mr. THYE. I had read that language in the bill, but I wanted to be certain to have the question discussed and debated so that there would be no doubt in the minds of those who are vitally concerned with the future of the Marine Corps.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have for the first time given to the civilian administrator power over a variety of activities which I mentioned, such as supply, transportation, storage, health, and research, and so forth. He has never heretofore had such power.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will permit me to proceed and make a note of his question——

Mr. THYE. The Senator mentioned supply. I think it is vitally important that we obtain a complete unification of the service of supply; also the use of runways for both the Army and the Navy. There are a thousand unification problems which must be faced.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. I may say that already, under the impetus of the hearings and the bill, a vast amount of unification is taking place along the very lines indicated by the Senator. Indeed, Mr. Hoover testified before our committee that this bill ought to save the Government $1,500,000,000 a year. Mr. Louis Johnson stated that he believed it would save between $1,000,000,000 and $1,500,000,000 a year. The Senator from Maryland is a little more modest. He will settle for four or five hundred million dollars a year. I believe that that is well within the realm of possibility, without forcing anyone to the wall or cutting out anything that is essential. It can be done in line with what the Senator from Minnesota has suggested.

For example, there is the matter of having three hospitals at a particular point, one for each of the services, with two of them filled and one empty. The continuation of personnel costs and supply costs for all three of them is not good business administration. Other examples could be cited in various fields. This time we are placing in the civilian administration the power to deal with such problems.

For the moment I shall pass over the other civilian functions.

When we get over to the military, on page 7, there is the title: "Creating the Position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Prescribing His Powers and Duties."

There the committee was up against a rather serious proposition. We already have the Chief of Staff for the Army, the Chief of Staff for the Navy, and the Chief of Staff for the Air Force. They are three separate men, each standing in his own particular domicile, so to speak, and beyond the influence of the other two. If they cannot agree on some matter, they simply wrangle, and there is no one to settle the dispute.

We wondered what we could do to expedite the reaching of decisions which might be important to the national welfare. We wondered how that could be done without destroying the relative independence of the Chief of Staff for the Navy, the Chief of Staff for the Army, or the Chief of Staff for the Air Force.

We had the Joint Chiefs of Staff before us. They made this recommendation to us, and we adopted it pretty much in full. They said, in effect, "We have no objection to having a Chief who would preside over the Joint Chiefs; but we do not want him to have military control over us; because if that occurred, there would be one Chief of Staff running all three departments, and he might not like the Navy or the Army or the Air Force, or vice versa, and it might not be a good thing for the country in given circumstances. So give us a certain amount of freedom of action, but put someone in a position to make us be good."

So what we did then was to provide for the creation of a Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, without military control over the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but to be the presiding officer and the representative of the Secretary of Defense or the President, as the case might be, when the Joint Chiefs of Staff had something to decide. If they could not decide, he would have no vote. The vote in the Joint Chiefs of Staff might be 2 to 1, but then the presiding Chief, although having no vote, could take the dispute to the Secretary of Defense or to the President, and could say to either of them, "Here is what went on. Here are the two sides to the controversy." Then the President or the Secretary of Defense would decide the matter. He would say, in effect, "So and so will be the case," and the dispute would be ended.

I understand that heretofore there have been disputes which have gone on for weeks, or even for months in certain cases, and could not be settled because there was no appropriate source for settling them.

In meeting that difficulty, certain men, such as Admiral Leahy, have acted; and after Admiral Leahy, General Eisenhower acted. They served more or less as umpires between the three services, and took such disputes to the President for ultimate decision.

Therefore we now propose the creation of this office, without giving the holder of the office a vote, but making him the presiding officer over the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but with no power to vote in any controversy. Although he would have a high rank, he would be simply a representative of the President, and would take the dispute to the President, and have it settled there. The official we here propose would not be able to settle the dispute himself. In that way we would get away from one-man control of the three branches of the armed services.

This is what the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force wanted. They made out a good case before us, and that is the procedure we adopted.

Moreover, the Joint Chiefs of Staff said to us, "Listen, gentlemen; you expect us to have the Navy and the Army and the Air Force ready for an emergency, don't you?

We said, "Yes, we do."

Of course, Mr. President, I am not quoting the conversation verbatim, but I am giving the gist of it.

They said, "You are holding us responsible for having the necessary weapons available and for having men in readiness who will be trained to use those weapons, and for meeting that responsibility to the best of our ability, in connection with the expenditure of the money you give us for that purpose; and you expect us to have plans prepared in order to be able to meet any reasonable emergency which may confront our country."

We said, "That is right. That is what we expect you to do, and we expect you to do it well."

They said, "All right. In this bill, as introduced, power and authority are given to the Secretary of Defense to appoint the presiding officer of the Joint Staff."

Of course, Mr. President, the Joint Staff is the working organization which prepares all the battle plans, and so forth.

Then they said, "If you are expecting us to make the plans and assume that responsibility, don't you think we are entitled to appoint the presiding officer?"

We said, "You have something there."

So we made that change in the bill, so as to keep the military functions under the military men, and to have the civilian functions under the civilian men.

I think we worked out that problem fairly well; and the Joint Chiefs, I believe, were rather highly pleased with the way we handled it.

We increased the number of officers who would be on what is called the Joint Staff, who are those who work under the Joint Chiefs of Staff and prepare the plans for the organization, and so forth. We increased that number from 100 to 210, with an equal number, perhaps, to come from the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. They are the ones who handle all the problems involving logistics, personnel, planning, and what not, and work them out.

So I think we have a fairly good bill so far as the military side of the problem is concerned.

Now I have finished outlining briefly the general civilian side of the bill and the general military side, without coming to the budgetary features of the bill, which are incorporated in title IV. I hope no Senator will ask me about that part of the bill for the moment, because it should be discussed as a separate subject.

I should like to ask whether there are any questions relative to all other parts of the bill except title IV, before I proceed to describe title IV.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have a number of questions which I should like to ask the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. First, let me say that the able Senator from Maryland has said that no witness was in favor of abolishing the three Secretaries. I think the Senator from Maryland spoke a little hastily, because former Secretary of War Patterson is on record in that respect.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean abolishing the names of those positions or abolishing those offices?

Mr. LODGE. I mean abolishing the executive departments of Army, Navy, and Air Force and abolishing the posts of Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries of those Departments.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think what former Secretary of War Patterson recommended was a change in nomenclature, rather than a complete removal of civilian control of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

In effect, he recommended that the title of what we call "Secretary of the Army" be, in effect—I do not recall the exact recommendation—changed hereafter to "Under Secretary of Defense for Army," and, so far as the other services are concerned, that the titles be changed to "Under Secretary of Defense for Navy," and "Under Secretary of Defense for Air"—thereby carrying the control, by means of a change of nomenclature, back to the single head.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me to do so, I should like to read from a memorandum dated November 9, addressed by Secretary Patterson to Ferdinand Eberstadt, chairman of the Committee on National Security Organization. The memorandum was published at the time. I read a part of the memorandum:

(1) That the three branches of the armed forces be placed in a single executive department (to be called the Department of Defense). The branches themselves would not be merged, but would exist as the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

The abolition of the three executive departments would abolish also the posts of Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries of those Departments.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I just said.

Mr. LODGE. It would abolish the posts of Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. I mention that simply because the able Senator from Maryland said, I think, that no witnesses of repute were in favor of that idea; and I simply wished to state that former Secretary of War Patterson was in favor of it.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; he was not, except in the nomenclature field. He did not advocate the elimination of the civilian heads of the three Departments. All he wanted was for them to be called Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, Under Secretary of Defense for Air, or some similar name.

Mr. LODGE. He favors the abolition—I am quoting—"the abolition of the three executive departments."

Mr. TYDINGS. So do we. In the bill, we make it into one.

Mr. LODGE. And abolishing the post of Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what we did.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has the Secretary in it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Go on and read a little further.

Mr. LODGE. That is his recommendation on that subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. Read on. Let the Senator read what he read before.

Mr. LODGE. I will read it over again.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. It reads:

That the three branches of the armed forces be placed in the single executive department (to be called the Department of Defense). The branches themselves would not be merged, but would exist as the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

The abolition of the three executive departments would abolish also the posts of Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries of those Departments.

Then he goes on, paragraph 2:

That the Secretary of Defense be the head of the Department, with full authority and power to direct activities of the Department—

To the same extent that the Secretary of State directs the State Department, or that the Secretary of the Treasury directs the Treasury Department.

There shall be a Secretary and two Assistant Secretaries. Their duties shall be department-wide, as the Secretary may direct, and they should not be tied to boosting the interesting or pressing the advantage of any particular branch of the armed forces.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can answer the Senator, and I think now I can clarify it a little more, because as he reads the Secretary's testimony, it comes back to me. Here was the difference between the Secretary's recommendations and the provisions of the bill. Secretary Patterson wanted the civilian control all under the Secretary of Defense. He wanted the Secretary of Defense to have such number of Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries as would take orders from the Secretary of Defense for the operation of that Department. What the bill does is not to put them up under the Secretary of Defense, per se. It puts them over each one of the three branches. But the net result is that no matter what system is followed, there is a civilian administration over the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force in the civilian field.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit, if we have a Secretary over there with the Army or the Air Force or the Navy, instead of having him up here with the Department of Defense, he is bound to boost and promote or press the partisan advantage of the particular branch, and he will not have the loyalty he should have to the over-all concept of an over-all integrated American defense.

Mr. TYDINGS. My point is there is a choice there, of course. We were rather unanimous—almost, at least—in having this division as I have outlined it. But what I wanted to make sure is that the Senator from Massachusetts understood that at no point did Secretary Patterson advocate that the administration of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force should be taken out of civilian hands.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. He simply wanted the administrators, who would have charge of that work to be Under Secretaries of Defense. What we did was this: We left them all under the Secretary of Defense, but we assigned one to the Army, one to the Navy, and one to the Air Force.

Mr. LODGE. I brought this point up because the Senator made me feel a little lonesome when he first said that nobody was in favor of the idea of abolishing the Secretaries, and I just remembered that Secretary Patterson did agree with me completely on that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I reemphasize the fact that nobody is in favor of abolishing the Secretaries. I have tried to sell that to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I just read from the recommendations of Secretary Patterson that he is in favor of abolishing the posts of Secretary, which is just as plain as English could be.

Mr. TYDINGS. Secretary Patterson agreed there should be one department called the Department of Defense ,presided over by the Secretary of Defense. I think he was willing, although I do not remember specifically, to have a Deputy Secretary of Defense. Then he wanted Under Secretaries—one, two, or three in number—with assistants who would administer the whole Department of Defense for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. So that at no point did he advocate that the administration of these three departments would not be under civilian administration.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, of course, that is true. The Senator from Maryland, when he introduced Senate bill 1269, on page 6, had a provision for three assistant secretaries of defense, who would help the Secretary of Defense administer these departments from the over-all defense viewpoint.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. I notice that that section is omitted from Senate bill 1843.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. Let me tell the Senator why that was left out. I think we had probably 20 or 25 witnesses, and, with one or two exceptions—and probably Secretary Patterson was one, because he was for the strongest kind of unification, amounting almost to merger in the eyes of some persons, though not in mine—every other witness felt that the prestige that would attach to having a man called the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Air, rather than Under Secretary, would attract better men of higher caliber, and if the salary were only to be $14,000 a year, and they were going to administer branches of the Government that were costing about $6,000,000,000 or so a branch, it would be rather hard to attract the kind of men they would want to get, unless at least they were given the title. So that with the exception of Mr. Hoover, I believe, all the other witnesses thought we should keep the old titles, because they carried great prestige in the eyes of the American people and would be an added inducement to getting the caliber of men we desire.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not correct, I ask the chairman, that we argued for a long time in the committee as to what to call the Deputy Secretary under the Secretary of Defense, and that we finally created the title of Deputy Secretary to cover the point that my colleague from Massachusetts has been making. We discussed that. I understand that the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force are under the Deputy Secretary and are subordinate to him. In that way we tried to get unification. If I am correct in my memory, and I am not sure——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct so far, I am sure.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What I was going to say was, Judge Patterson went further perhaps than any of us were willing to go. He was for a direct merger of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, putting them all together. We said no, we did not think that was practical at the present time, that we would get greater unification under a Secretary of Defense with Deputy Secretaries. But we were not willing to merge them, except where things could be done properly in the discretion of the Secretary of Defense. And so we gave him the powers contained in subparagraph 3, at the bottom of page 4 of the bill, but eliminated his power to transfer. In other words, we gave him all the other power, but not the power to merge.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I am calling on my memory. I would say to the Senator that these hearings went on, I suppose, for 5 weeks. We had 17 hearings; I think 14 of them in the morning, 3 of them in the afternoon. We had Mr. Eberstadt, who had a very fine experience here in various fields of government, and particularly in the armed services. We had Mr. Forrestal. We had Mr. Louis Johnson. We had the three chiefs of staff. We had President Truman. We had President Hoover. We had various other members, all of whom, with the exception perhaps of Mr. Patterson, who, as the senior Senator from Massachusetts said, went a little further than the others, all of whom generally took the position now embodied in the committee bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I stated that Mr. Symington advocated calling these men Under Secretaries, but he was the only Secretary that went that far.

Mr. TYDINGS. But Mr. Symington likewise said that he would be satisfied to settle for the bill, unless the others would go along. He did not want to take a different point of view.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. LUCAS addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield first to the Senator from Vermont, who, I think, rose first, then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if my understanding is correct, that the bill S. 1843 removes the present authority of the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force to bypass the Secretary of Defense and deal directly with the President.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be rather hard to answer that question categorically. I should have to answer it "Yes," and then qualify it with this statement: There is nothing in law to stop any of them from coming to Congress or from going to the President or from going anywhere they want to go.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The witnesses before our committee said that, on a point of great principle or great difference, they ought to go, and either resign or get a decision. But answering the Senator as candidly as we can, the appropriate purpose of the bill is to give a great degree of unified administration; and substantially the Senator is correct in his assumption.

Mr. AIKEN. Am I correct in understanding that the Secretaries are responsible to the Secretary of Defense or the Under Secretary of Defense in the absence of the Secretary?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask one further question with regard to the Munitions Board. I am not quite sure what is meant by the language on page 11, to the effect that the Board shall be composed of a chairman who shall be the head, and an Under Secretary or Assistant Secretary from each of the three military departments to be designated in each case by the Secretaries of their respective departments. What is meant by an Under Secretary or by an Assistant Secretary in that case? Are those the correct words to use?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, they are, for this reason, that under the bill there would be a Secretary of the Army, an Under Secretary of the Army, and maybe one Assistant Secretary.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the bill provide for an Under Secretary of the Army?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. That answers my question.

Mr. TYDINGS. It had to be phrased in the alternative.

Mr. AIKEN. A member of the Munitions Board from each Department, then, shall be chosen from the higher levels?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield, first, to the Senator from Illinois, and then to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER].

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the able chairman of the committee a number of questions. I should like, first, to ask him this question: Is there anything in the bill which would prevent the Navy from continuing to run the Navy, the Air Force from continuing to run the Air Force, or the Army from continuing to run the Army?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not a thing. On the contrary, we have reemphasized by specific provisions that all the roles and missions they have had heretofore shall be preserved.

Mr. LUCAS. Is there anything in the bill which would give a veto power to one service over the other services or the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Joint Chiefs of Staff could not resolve a dispute involving the three services. If the three Chiefs of Army, Navy, and Air Force fail to agree, the Chief of Staff would be duty bound to carry the dispute to the Secretary of Defense or the President, and the President would make the decision, and that would be binding. He is the Commander in Chief. But I think I have made it specific——

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has made it specific.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to emphasize what I have said, the Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has no vote.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator believe, from evidence before his committee, that the Naval arm of the United States is in any peril whatsoever, so far as the Army and the Air Force are concerned, or so far as the persuasive powers of those who are connected with our military establishment are concerned?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not. All three of the chiefs of staff and, so far as I can recall, every witness, testified to the point that it would be folly to trust the defenses of the United States to any one of the three branches or to eliminate any one or two of the three branches; that we must at all times have a balanced defense, an Army, a Navy, and an Air Force; that if we rely on one, it might fail and we would be powerless. Further than that, we might have to use either the Army or the Navy, and not the Air Force per se, if we were fighting in certain areas, under certain conditions, where the Navy or the Army would be needed, and not the Air Force singly.

So we have to have a defense for every conceivable situation. That means we must have an Army, a Navy, and an Air Force. The Senator from Maryland would resist with all the emphasis and power at his command any attempt to seek to destroy any one of the three branches or to weaken its relative position materially in the national defense establishment.

Mr. LUCAS. I wholly agree with the able Senator from Maryland. The last answer probably answers my next query, but in order to make it clear and without any question about it, I wish to ask this question: Is there anything in the bill, or anything in the thinking of military minds, from what the Senator has found in the evidence disclosed before his committee, which would lead him to believe that the amphibious warfare as perfected by the Marine Corps is in any danger of being eliminated?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not so far as I know. I would not be in favor of seeing it happen, because the Marine Corps has made a tremendous contribution to the science of warfare. So far as I am concerned, they are in safe hands. Some future Congress may look at the question differently and may deny money to one branch or the other of the services. But I am talking about the legislation before us this afternoon. The service deserves, with all its magnificence, grandeur, and tradition, the role and the mission of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, plus the Marine Corps in the case of the Navy.

Mr. LUCAS. I have a letter from a very prominent constituent of mine in Illinois——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator speak a little more loudly? It is impossible to hear him.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall try to speak loudly for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts.

My constituent makes this statement:

> Before going further, I may as well toss out for your consideration that the American population think our air arm alone will win the next war.

Mr. TYDINGS. He asserts that?

Mr. LUCAS. He asserts that. I ask the Senator from Maryland, who is chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, whether there is any testimony along the line that the air power alone is sufficient to win the next war.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Maryland is a little out of his bailiwick in attempting to answer that question, because he does not desire to pose as an authority on how to win wars. But I can say this, which I think will not be immodest on my part, that we feel, as a committee, and I think we are reinforced in that feeling by the military men who have appeared before the committee, that in certain contingencies, and with respect to certain countries, if we were to have a war the Air Force would be a tremendously vital and determinative factor, perhaps, but that in no case can anyone conceive that before the struggle was over all three branches would not be employed, just as they have always been employed. However, if in some happy circumstance the Air Force could save the Navy and the Army the loss of life and treasure that would be necessary by their employment, I do not think either of the two branches would object. But no one is willing to put all his eggs in one basket, from the highest military man I know of in this country, down to the highest civilian charged with the responsibility, believing that a balanced Air Force, a balanced Navy, and a balanced Army, with the Marine Corps, are the only safeguards we can have for our welfare in the future.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to thank the able Senator from Maryland for the last statement, because it seems to me that it clears up a great deal of muddling in the public thinking throughout America as a result of a tremendous amount of propaganda that has gone out from different sources in Washington, which states definitely, for instance, that the air power is the one thing that will win the next war. Then those of our constituents who are interested, for instance, in the Marine and Naval Air Forces, are wondering whether or not the Naval and Marine Air Forces are going to be merged ultimately with the United States Air Force, and whether finally they are to all be under one head. That is the question a great many people who are interested in this problem are asking the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the last question would be a very venturesom thing for the Senator from Maryland to embark upon, but I am going to take the chance again, purely as an assumption, and I think it is an important question.

In World War I various regiments of Marines were put in the Second Division and fought alongside the Army, the Ninth Infantry being one of the Army outfits in that very famous infantry division, the Second Division, which performed such good work at Chateau-Thierry. There the Marines and the Army fought side by side in one division.

I remember that in the last war on Okinawa certain elements of the Army, I believe, and of the Marine Corps, under General Buckner of the Marines—who lost his life on that island—fought together under a Marine general.

Mr. LUCAS. My colleague, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] was there.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; our eminent and able and renowned friend the junior Senator from Illinois was one of that great band of patriots, and we are all glad to have him a Member of the Senate, to carry on the traditions of the great Marine Corps. These incidents happened in World War I and World War II. The branches did not merge, but they joined together for a common purpose, and fought perhaps under one or the other branches.

I do not doubt for a moment that if we were to have a war, and if the Chiefs of Staff thought it was wise to take the Marine aviators, as they have taken the Marine foot soldiers, order them to fight alongside the Army; they would take the Army aviation and put it with the Air Force aviation, that would be done if it were in the country's interest; and why should it not be done, if it would win the war? But no one is advocating that that be a permanent arrangement, or that there be any real transfer of functions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the last answer of the able Senator is one that is important. I certainly agree with the Senator that under certain emergency conditions, these branches could well be merged for the purpose of winning a battle, but the moment it is over, and the moment peace times return, or even in wartime, the particular branch of the service that is merged with another would return to its natural status.

The Senator tells the Senate and the country now that there is no evidence before the Senate committee at the present time, and it is not the thought of any member of the committee that, for instance, the naval and the marine air force would be merged as one, as was the case under Goering in Germany, and in England, where there was an air corps under one unit.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is perfectly correct. It is my recollection that in the landing of the American forces in Europe General Eisenhower had charge of the Navy, which supported the landing. The naval admiral over there and General Eisenhower, I suppose, worked together more or less as partners, but technically General Eisenhower had charge of the whole show. But as soon as the event was over, as soon as the landing was effected, as soon as the naval support was no longer needed, then the Navy went back to its role, and the General went along with the land operations.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to ask a question with respect to the budgetary end of the bill now being discussed in the Senate.

The Senator made the statement a moment ago that in his opinion a minimum of three or four hundred million dollars could be saved, and he also stated that former President Hoover indicated that a billion or a billion and a half dollars could be saved if this bill became a law. I am wondering whether or not the moment this bill became the law, the effecting of economy in the Government service would be accomplished under the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say, in answer to the last statement of the Senator, and I hope I am not extravagant in the statement, that I consider this bill as important a piece of legislation as has ever come before the Congress dealing with our domestic scene in my lifetime, for two reasons: I believe there is a great deal of accuracy in the statement of former President Hoover that tremendous savings will be effected by the machinery set up in the bill. I furthermore believe that the efficiency which will follow from the unification of our armed services, as provided, will be marked. I do not see any prospect of abolition of the rivalry between Army, Navy, and Air Force, and no one wants it abolished, it is a worthy thing, but if the powers given to the Secretary of Defense and the President, and the military, for that matter, are carried out with reasonable wisdom and power over a period of time, it ought to result in $500,000,000 a year being saved. Five hundred million dollars is a bigger saving than anything I have ever been connected with since I have been in the Congress, and I think it will be a tremendous achievement for the Eighty-first Congress, and for all those who are associated with it, either in the executive department or in the legislative department, all who give it their support.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Does the pending bill represent progress in the improvements and evolution which are demanded by the defects which have become obvious as a result of experience with the unification bill which the Congress passed about a year ago?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think we took the first step with some caution, to determine whether or not we were going in the right direction, and we prohibited ourselves from going very far until we could see ahead a little more. That one step has shown that further steps will be advantageous, that it would almost be better not to have taken the first step at all than to linger in the twilight zone of not doing one thing or the other.

Mr. CAIN. The steps we are about to take will be in a real way a realization of some of the ambitions of the late Mr. Forrestal, who hoped we would go slowly but surely in consummating a far greater unification than was possible a year ago.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. It will be regretted that Mr. Forrestal will never know the effectiveness of this proposed legislation which I believe was close to his heart, and if it had been passed sooner, before he lost his grasp upon events, perhaps he would be alive today. Mr. Forrestal had the responsibility and the authority in the public mind to do what the bill permits the Secretary of Defense to do, and which the original law did not permit him to do.

Mr. CAIN. I had a number of personal conversations with Mr. Forrestal on this subject, partly because we were close friends, and in mentioning to him some of the things I as an individual Senator had been hoping for, Mr. Forrestal merely said, "Let us take our time." He said, "Those improvements will become the more readily obtainable and successful if we permit the services themselves to determine some of the defects in the original piece of legislation."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I should like to say to the Senator from Washington that there will always be certain fears. Whenever we have two independent agencies—and we now have three—whose functions are to be merged somewhat into a unification scheme or proposal, there is no way by which to prevent such fears. But so far as we are able to foresee them and deal with them, they are absolutely unjustified.

Now I should like to yield to the junior Senator from Illinois, who has been very patient while I have been talking with other Senators.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if he would object to an amendment to section 211 on page 10, the insertion of a new subsection——

Mr. TYDINGS. To follow (d)?

Mr. DOUGLAS. To follow (d). It would provide that when questions dealing with amphibious warfare were under consideration the Commandant of the Marine Corps should be a voting member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have a great deal of sympathy with the thought that prompts the interrogation, but I hope the Senator will not offer his amendment, for the reasons I shall state.

When we passed the first unification bill, in order to meet certain points of view of Members of the Congress, we wrote into the bill some roles and missions of the Marine Corps, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is section 206 of the organic law.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I think there is a division now in the military department among the military men themselves as to whether or not the Congress should set itself up to tell the military how to conduct a war. When we write roles and missions, to a small extent at least we attempt to tell them how they must operate. My point is that having already done that, and there having been a recession away from that point of view, I should dislike very much to have such a provision in the bill, when its present provisions are satisfactory, I am afraid that if the Senator offers the amendment he may do the cause harm, and I know he does not want to do that. I hope seriously he will not offer his amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should appreciate it if the Senator from Maryland would look at section 206, the basic organic law, because a fundamental issue is involved. I refer to the National Security Act of 1947, section 206 (c), on page 8. I refer to the second sentence, which defines the combat mission of the Marine Corps:

> The Marine Corps shall be organized, trained, and equipped to provide fleet marine forces of combined arms, together with supporting air components, for service with the fleet in the seizure or defense of advanced—

And I emphasize that word "advanced"— > naval bases and for the conduct of such land operations as may be essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign.

Now, it lies within the power of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to define a naval base, and to define a naval campaign.

Mr. TYDINGS. They would have to agree unanimously.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would they have to agree unanimously, or could it be by a vote of two to one?

Mr. TYDINGS. No, it could not be. Under the law, if the Joint Chiefs disagree then the matter would go to the President.

Mr. DOUGLAS. How does this differ, then, from the supposed decision in the case of the super carrier?

Mr. TYDINGS. That decision went to the President.

I think what the Senator from Illinois wants to accomplish—and I say this with my words pretty well measured, because I do not want to deceive the Senator in the slightest way—I think what he wants to accomplish is already provided for. I do not think that the Navy would surrender any function of the Marine Corps without carrying the dispute to higher authority. I can assure the Senator that, in my opinion, he will not add anything to the law by putting his amendment in the bill, and he may, by doing so, incur certain opposition to the whole proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. On that point I should like to remind the Chairman that the Joint Chiefs recommended in line 3, on page 10 of the bill the insertion of the words "as such" in order to assure what the chairman of the committee has just said, namely, that the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would act "as such"—that is as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He would have to report to the President any disagreement that existed and present both sides of the picture. Upon that recommendation of the Joint Chiefs of Staff the committee adopted the language and placed those two words in the bill in order to protect any minority service.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it not be helpful if——

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me interrupt the Senator to show him where he would arrive at if he were to attempt to write his amendment into the bill. There is always a dispute as to land-based planes, as to whether the Navy shall operate them to effect the destruction of submarines along our coasts or whether the Army shall operate the planes for that purpose. The Army takes the position, roughly—I do not mean every Army officer, but pretty much every one of them—that inasmuch as the planes take away from the land, from the United States, and fly out over the water, the Army should have charge of the antisubmarine campaign insofar as it applies to that type of destruction. The Navy says, "No, sir, we want our own airfields on land, and the hunting of these submarines is our baby." The truth is that we are glad to have them both hunt down submarines, but if an attempt were made to write in the roles and missions of the Navy and of the Army, then perhaps more harm would be done than good.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is also true that the Marine Corps is a very small organization, and if a large organization does not want a small organization to continue, it frequently is not too difficult to use terms or interpret terms not only to restrict its activities, but to shrink its assigned missions.

I wondered if there would be any objection to amending section 206 (c) so as to say that it is the function of the Marine Corps to serve with the fleet in the seizure or defense of advanced military and amphibious bases and for the conduct of such land operations as may be essential to the prosecution of an amphibious campaign. So that the functions of the Corps would not be restricted to the immediate beachhead, but would continue for the combined operations as the Corps pressed inland. As the Senator from Maryland is well aware, it is not merely an academic question. It can be of great practical importance in the conduct of a military campaign.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, we had amphibious landings at Salerno and Anzio, and we had them at the Omaha Beach in Normandy, and they were made by the Army. It is not the Senator's thought, I know, to confine all amphibious operations to the Marine Corps and to no others. Is it?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; that is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is why the Army should be permitted to land if they want to land. I do not see why we should be killing marines all the time. I do not see why we should not let the Army in on some of these fights.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If we stick to the principle of specialization it would seem as though the marines should be given the predominant share in amphibious operations.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can say to the Senator that my knowledge of the Navy is such that the Marine Corps is not going to be hurt so long as the Navy is there. Furthermore, I do not believe the Congress would let it be hurt; and moreover, I do not believe anyone wants to hurt it.

The Senator from Maryland the other day in committee meeting made the statement, and I am glad to make it in the presence of the Senate, that there may be some justification here and there for the merger of these three services. There may be some justification for the Marine Corps losing its status. The Senator from Maryland would resist as strongly as he could any attempt to have the Marine Corps lose its status for the reason that no amount of efficiency or economy could ever compensate for the glorious traditions that would be sacrificed if we should lose the Marine Corps. Under no circumstances would the Senator from Maryland consider that he had been contributing to the defense of his country by having such an organization, with all its great accomplishments, with all its great traditions, wiped out. The Marine Corps represents something in efficiency which cannot be obtained by the mere passage of laws nor can money buy. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I do not believe he need have any fears about it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I deeply appreciate the statement of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I so stated in the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am sure that that is the general opinion of the country. I have no doubt about the Secretary of Defense or the Chief of Staff of the Army, in both of whom I have great confidence. But times change. Service jealousies frequently endure. We cannot be sure that General Bradley will always be Chief of Staff of the Army, or that Mr. Johnson will always be Secretary of Defense. In another administration we may find that the new General Staff which is being created will want to carry out what it regards as logic, and confine the Marine Corps to guard duty. I have read statements from some leading Army officers who have said that the Marine Corps should be confined purely to guard duty at naval stations. Let me say that if that were ever contemplated I would prefer to have the Marine Corps abolished rather than to make it purely a noncombatant organization.

Since the Marine Corps is a small group, I am very frank to say that many marines are fearful that under merger or unification gradually the functions of the Marine Corps will be taken away, and that it will cease to exist, or will exist in such crippled form that it will not survive as a combatant force.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me try to assist the Senator in giving a little detached attention to the question, if I may. I know of his great loyalty and deep feeling for the Marine Corps, of which he was such a valuable, brave, and outstanding member. Let me give him this thought, and I think he will see the problem from a legislative standpoint rather than from a human or sentimental standpoint.

Before we had unification we had the Army and the Navy. The Air Force was a part of the Army. The Navy had its own aviation, but the Air Force, as we came to know it, was a sort of bureau largely attached to the Army.

There was agitation for unification of the three branches, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. The Army, faced with that contingency, was called upon to make a tremendous sacrifice. The Army, which had control over this great giant, the romantic and traditional Air Force, was told, "Give up this glamorous, fine tradition that has been built up in World War II, and to some extent in World War I. Give it all up. We are going to take it away from you. We are going to take away your favorite child, the one which has brought so much luster to your service, the one about which stories and motion pictures are made, the one which thrills young men in all the high schools and colleges of America. You must give it up. You are going to be bereft of your Air Force. All we are going to let you have is some reconnaissance planes and some photographic planes. But when you need an air force, send over to the Air Force and they will send planes to help you."

If the Senator will look back into the committee hearings on unification, he will find that the Senator from Maryland said this, in effect:

I cannot understand the generosity of the Army, when I think that an Army officer may be commanding a corps made up of three or four divisions, or an Army made up of three or four corps composed of hundreds of thousands of men, and have no air support of his own, no tactical air support, no strategic air support. He must go into battle absolutely dependent on what forces are assigned to him.

The Army made that sacrifice. I think General Bradley and General Eisenhower were two of the witnesses. I said to them that they were making the greatest sacrifice of any branch of the service. They said, "We believe that, by and large, this is in the interest of the defense of the United States, as we see the unfolding picture of military science."

Frankly, if we are to write missions into the bill, from where I sit I think the Army is entitled to have at least its tactical air force as a part of the Army, so that a general who is in command of a corps or an army will have his own force to support the attack of his group, at least in a tactical way, without having to call for planes from any other source. That is the reason why I am giving this illustration, and asking the Senator not to try to write roles or missions in the bill. Let us see if we cannot work out the problem without trying to determine on the floor of the Senate what each branch of the service ought to do. I assure the Senator that so long as I am here—and I believe the same statement can be made of my successor—and so long as this measure is on the statute books, there need be no real fear about any amphibious operation being taken away from the Marine Corps, in the sense that the Senator is discussing.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. Let me say to the Senator from Maryland that what he has been saying in the last few minutes, to which I have listened with a great deal of satisfaction, covers the spirit of the problems presented by the Senator from Illinois. However, I should like to ask whether we may not get down to that disagreeable thing, the letter of the law, and ask ourselves a question. I refer again, in section 206 of the fundamental law, subsection (c), on page 8, to the words which the Senator from Maryland read to us a few minutes ago:

> And for the conduct of such land operations as may be essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign.

I am wondering whether, if this fundamental law had been in existence during the early part of World War II, and if it had been obeyed, the operations on Guadalcanal would have been possible.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont that it is one of the great geniuses of democratic administration, and particularly as we have it in the United States, that no matter how strictly we write or interpret a law which we enact in the best of faith, when the national honor or integrity or safety is in danger we find ways of getting together and doing the bigger job that is ahead, without, in our conscience or in our spirit, having violated the law.

Men need these small assurances from time to time, so that they will feel that in the calmer days of peace, schemers will not take advantage of them. But in the great days of warfare schemers do not infest the ranks of the armed services of our country, thank heaven. Somehow or other, as has been so well described, we find common ground on which we can go forth and achieve whatever must be achieved for the defense of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Let me say to the Senator from Maryland that I approach this problem from a slightly different standpoint from that which I understood the two Senators from Illinois and the Senator from Vermont, as well as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], to emphasize. I do not feel at all like being tender with service prides and jealousies. I am not at all worried about some service having an opportunity to express itself. I am worried about whether we have a bill which will enable us to get prompt decisions and actions. That is what wins or loses wars. In my judgment, if we make mistakes in this bill we are going to pay for them in the blood of our sons. There could not be a more serious piece of legislation before us than that which we are now considering.

Mr. TYDINGS. Personally the Senator from Maryland is not at variance with anything which the Senator from Massachusetts has said. If the Senator from Maryland could write the bill and insure its passage through the Congress, he would wipe out all references to missions in the bill. I have said so frequently. I do not believe that they are proper in such bills. They are military problems. They are things that ought to be decided by the military.

Likewise I say to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has had an able and very distinguished career in one of the three services covered by the bill, that we are dealing here with human relations, which must be reasonably satisfied if there is to be any legislation.

We cannot achieve our own independent course completely without regard to the ideas of others. This measure is an attempt of that sort. Without real sacrifice of principle, it has been possible to accomplish the objective, without losing the essential ingredients thereof.

Mr. LODGE. I appreciate that a problem of human relations is involved; but I think experience shows that in military organizations, things are accomplished by giving an order, and then setting a time certain by which the order must be carried out. That is the method by which the gentlemen in the Pentagon have lived all their lives, and it is a method they understand.

If we depend upon evolution, certainly we shall have to wait a long time.

I should like to call attention also to page 8, section 211, in which the statement is made that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall have no vote. Does that mean that unanimous-consent procedure will continue to be the rule in the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. Of course that is a very proper question.

That provision means that the three Chiefs of Staff will have a means of reaching a decision.

Let me explain what happened: The three Chiefs of Staff came before us. Admiral Denfeld was the spokesman.

We had told them that as the law now stood, if the three of them could not agree, nothing would be done; there would be a stalemate. Yet we said there had to be a means of reaching agreement in all such cases. We told them we were not satisfied with the existence of a situation which would permit of inability to reach agreement, and we said we were sure that something had to be done in that respect. They said that basically they were not satisfied with such an arrangement, either.

We said to them that if the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the one who was put over the three Chiefs of Staff, happened to have come from the Navy, if he were given a vote, he could vote with the Chief of Staff representing the Navy; and those two, coming from or representing the Navy, would be opposed by the other Chiefs of Staff, those representing the Army and the Air Force, and thus there would be a stalemate; or if the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff happened to come from the Army, in a controversy he perhaps would side with the Chief of Staff of the Army, and the two of them would be opposed by the Chiefs of Staff representing the Navy and the Air Force; and thus there would also be a stalemate.

So we asked for suggestions as to a solution of the problem existing in such a situation.

As a result of our suggestion, they were unanimous in making the recommendations which now are included in the bill, to wit, that there will be a Chairman or Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, representing, in effect, the President and the Secretary of Defense; that he shall have no vote, so that he cannot dominate the arrangement or get it out of gear.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not out of gear now?

Mr. TYDINGS. This provision is made so that he will not be able to get it out of gear; because if he were to have a vote, he would become a participant in the dispute, and the result would be to throw the Joint Chiefs of Staff organization out of gear.

We wanted him to be a conciliator, an umpire, a representative of the President. In addition, we did not want him to have any military command over the Joint Chiefs of Staff. They themselves wanted that arrangement, above everything else; they did not want some Army man, who for the moment was acting as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to tell the Navy or the Air Corps what to do—or, vice versa, to have a Navy man tell the Army or the Air Corps what to do.

That is why this language was used, and I think I am well within the field of accuracy when I say that all three of the Chiefs of Staff—General Vandenberg, Admiral Denfeld, and General Bradley—were in accord and were satisfied with the language of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Am I correct in my belief that the Joint Chiefs of Staff will still operate by unanimous consent?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. LODGE. Will they operate on the basis of a 2-to-1 vote?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. LODGE. How will they vote or operate? How will they decide or meet the various issues?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall tell the Senator how the arrangement would work. Let us assume that a matter had been referred to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for decision, and let us assume that the Chief of Staff for the Navy and the Chief of Staff for the Air Force voted one way, and the Chief of Staff for the Army voted the other way. Presiding over the Joint Chiefs of Staff would be the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a man representing the President. If the Chiefs of Staff of the three services could not agree, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would carry the dispute to the President, and would explain both sides of the dispute to the President, and the President himself would make the decision. His decision would become the official order of the day, so far as that matter was concerned.

Mr. LODGE. That would be a good thing, but I doubt whether the President would have a great deal of time on his hands to settle such matters.

I do not believe the Senator from Maryland read the language of the bill to which I have referred, and I should like to record my dissent from the point of view expressed on page 8 of the report, where reference is made to in section 6:

> The committee would point out that the War Council is one of the most important checks and balances in the Military Establishment.

Mr. President, when was a war ever won by checks and balances? Winning a war is not the same thing as preserving the civil rights of the citizens. When was it ever considered a tactical and strategic asset to have checks and balances in the conduct of the Military Establishment?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator give me the page reference again?

Mr. LODGE. Page 8, section 6. There are two sentences. The first is:

> The committee would point out that the War Council is one of the most important checks and balances in the Military Establishment.

I am referring to the third and fourth sentences there.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I see them.

Mr. LODGE. The next sentence is:

> Since all Secretaries and all of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are members, it would appear impossible for the views of one or more services to be denied expression.

But there is no statement about what would be done to obtain a prompt decision. Certainly that is fundamental. It is far more important, in my opinion, for our Joint Chiefs of Staff and our War Council and our Secretary of Defense to be able to reach a prompt decision, than it is to be able to run this thing like a town meeting, in which we wish to give everyone a chance to be heard. War cannot be won under any such procedure, in my opinion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts is proceeding under a false assumption. He assumes that there is to be no power of decision. To the contrary, the Secretary of Defense will have the power of decision; and if he does not decide, the President will have the power of decision.

Mr. LODGE. But the Joint Chiefs of Staff first will have the power to decide.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; they will not. The Chairman or Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff will take the dispute to the Secretary of Defense or to the President, and one or the other of them will decide.

Let us consider the so-called carrier incident: Question arose in the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "Shall we build an aircraft carrier, or shall we not build one?" The Joint Chiefs of Staff could not agree. Of course, there was nothing to stop the Navy from going ahead and building the carrier, under those circumstances; there was no one to make a decision.

So the dispute was carried to the Secretary of Defense and to the President, and there it was decided that the carrier should not be built.

So the present proposal is that the dispute be carried to the Secretary of Defense and to the President by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, for he will represent the Secretary of Defense and the President. However, he will have no vote. That is where the checks and balances come in. If we gave him a vote, there would be two potential votes for the branch of the service from which he came, as against the two votes by the Chiefs of Staff representing the other two branches of the armed services; and then there would be a stalemate.

After all, as has been pointed out, the President is Commander in Chief of the armed forces; and he can make whatever decision he wishes to make, and no one can prevent him from doing so, for under the Constitution he is the Commander in Chief of the armed forces.

Mr. LODGE. But of course the whole reason for the present proposed legislation originally was, as I understand, that the President, although Commander in Chief, had so many other things to do that it was thought that it would be advisable to have him delegate some of his power as Commander in Chief.

However, under the arrangement proposed in this measure, when there would be a running back to the President all the time, it seems to me that a poor job of delegating that power would be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, in the first instance we set up the Secretary of Defense, to shield the President from all such matters.

Under the pending proposal, the Chairman or Chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would, in the first instance, go to the Secretary of Defense to settle the controversy.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose that "Chairman" is the correct title.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. What I am trying to do is build up the loyalty to an over-all defense structure, loyalty to the armed services as a whole. That is why I wanted to do away with the positions of Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Air Force—not because I want to get rid of civilian supervision, for, on the contrary, I want to have civilian supervision; but I wanted to get away from the "old school tie" business, and contrariwise, build up an over-all loyalty to the armed services.

So I hope we can build up the Joint Chiefs of Staff to a point where there is a loyalty that is above caste consciousness.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can appreciate the Senator's viewpoint; but the Joint Chiefs of Staff want the arrangement set forth in the pending measure. Certainly if we come to the floor of the Senate with a provision dealing with military conduct that the Joint Chiefs of Staff oppose, we shall have a rather difficult time getting it enacted, because, after all, I think General Eisenhower and General Vandenberg and Admiral Denfeld know more about such matters than we do.

Mr. LODGE. Of course there is no question about that, and I think the Senator from Maryland in making such a suggestion is attempting to throw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am not.

Mr. LODGE. Because of course no one questions the knowledge of those gentlemen about military matters. I do not think General Bradley or General Eisenhower or General Vandenberg or Admiral Denfeld would disagree with a word I say about the necessity of developing a loyalty to the armed services as a whole.

Mr. TYDINGS. Neither do I.

Mr. LODGE. That is what we are talking about. That is why I was a little bit perplexed when I saw that in the committee bill the language of subsection (c) of section 211 had been modified from what it had been in the original draft, S. 1269, because in the bill as it stands here it reads:

> Subject to the authority and direction of the President and the Secretary of Defense, it shall be the duty of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to perform, in addition to such other duties as the Secretary of Defense may direct, the following duties—

That, as I see it, is a step toward what I am talking about. Is it not a step toward placing more authority and more influence in the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is dependent on how one looks at it. I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts they have been performing traditionally the very thing set forth in the bill. But we thought it wise, insofar as we could to give reassurance—and in all these unification measures there is a large dose of reassurance in every program, because that is one of the things we have to work with. We have to let everybody know how there can be unification and to give reassurance at the same time. So far as I am concerned I should simply have written into it that the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall be charged with the military functions of the Department of Defense.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator what the significance is in the limitation of "not to exceed 210 officers," in section 212? I noticed that the original bill the Senator introduced provided for practically an equal number of officers from each of the three armed services. Now, the Senator has changed that to a limitation of 210 officers. What is the importance of that?

Mr. TYDINGS. I was in favor of not having any limitation on it. I was confident that the general Chiefs of Staff would not want the Joint Staff any larger than they felt was necessary in order to deal with whatever the exigencies were, and I introduced the bill in that shape, as I remember. But when it came up in committee, certain Senators, whose names I shall not mention, said they might desire to have 1,000 or 2,000 or 5,000 men, even, and therefore we should put a limitation on it. So 200 was suggested, and then 210. That figure was adopted, and it was supposed there would be an approximately equal distribution of one-third for each service. Personally the Senator from Maryland favors no limitation on it. I figure that if we charge the general Chiefs of Staff with the responsibility of preparing the Nation for any possible war, if they want a joint staff, of a certain size, they ought to have it, and I do not see why the Congress of the United States should tell them how large a staff they need or do not need. There are many things we can tell them, but how many men they need to prepare the battle plans against country X, for the Army, Navy, and Air Force, with the atomic bomb and the guided missile and the buzz bomb and everything else, is a little bit more than I am in a position to state. It is only 100 in the present law.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, I think that is very true.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator from Massachusetts and I see eye to eye on that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask whether there is any limitation on the size of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force staff?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Is there anywhere, does the Senator know?

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, yes. We have what we call the composition bill which tells the number of personnel, officers and men, who are authorized in the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. My recollection is that none of them is up to strength at the moment. They are all below the authorized strength.

Mr. LODGE. Are not the Army, Navy, and Air Force staffs larger than the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not follow the Senator's question.

Mr. LODGE. There is a limitation on the General Staff of the United States Army. Without that limitation——

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no limitation on who may be on the staffs of the Army, the Navy, or the Air Force.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I am asking.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is a limitation on the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the separate staffs combined, in my opinion—and, I think, accurately—are not as large as the Joint Staff.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is a pity to put a limitation on the size of the staff of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, when there is no limitation on the size of the individual staffs for the individual services. I think it still gives the idea that this loyalty to an integrated whole is still pretty much of a stepchild.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to make this a partisan debate, but we thought so, too. I would say to the Senator, we could not convince some of our friends who sat on the opposite side of the table, and they put this in over the protest of those on the other side.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, so far as I am concerned, there is no partisan politics in this at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say that humorously, because I know they were acting from the best of motives, as we were, in opposing this limitation. But I could not convince them they were making a mistake, so we went along with them.

Mr. LODGE. This is a dreadfully serious matter, as I said a moment ago. For the mistakes we make here, we are going to pay, not with dollars but in blood. There is no place for any kind of partisanship in it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should be glad to have the Senator offer an amendment to strike out the 210. While I would feel in duty bound not to support the amendment, I would not be displeased—and I hope I am not equivocating—if it were adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I shall react to that suggestion, I can assure the Senator. I do not know how much longer the Senate wishes to continue in session. I have four or five more questions, and I shall be glad to go on asking, if the Senator is willing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should be delighted to answer them, as long as the Senate cares to sit, and as long as the Senator from Massachusetts desires to ask them.

Mr. LODGE. What is the desire of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LUCAS. The desire of the Senator from Illinois is to take a recess as soon as the Senator from Massachusetts finishes his inquiry of the Senator from Maryland. As I understand, the Senator from Maryland may not be here tomorrow, and would like to finish his statement tonight.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to impose on anybody. If the Senator is tired——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not imposing on me. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is evolving a thought on this that is very useful to all of us. So far as I can contribute the answers, I shall be delighted to endeavor to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I have, then, three or four more questions, and I think they are important. I notice that on page 9 there are listed seven duties which the Joint Chiefs of Staff are to perform.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the same as the existing law, let me say to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. There were nine duties listed in the committee print.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think we went back to the original wording. I think we took the original wording, but I forget the nuances which motivated us in that conflict.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know whether the Joint Chiefs of Staff, under this new legislation, will be able to make plans for the employment of the total military manpower of the country, or whether the different services, the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Coast Guard, and the Marine Corps, are all going to go into a higgledy-piggledy competition for recruiting, enlistment, and so on, as they have done in the past, with of course, enormously wasteful consequences. Will the Joint Chiefs of Staff under this bill be able to make a thorough and scientific determination as to the allocation of our supplies of manpower?

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean in time of war, or now?

Mr. LODGE. Either, or both.

Mr. TYDINGS. All they can do now, of course, is to determine by the amount of money we appropriate for pay of the officers and personnel in the three services. That will be a definite sum of money, and it will in effect fix the number of officers and men in each of the three services; which I apprehend will be less than enough to bring the three services up to full strength. In time of war or at the approach of war, we would probably not only have a draft act but we would enforce it and see that we got enough men. We would appropriate the money, so that between all our actions we would have in time of war enough men and officers to man the three services. However, as the Senator well knows, the National Security Resources Board is supposed to make plans for a division of the population between the Army and the civilian functions, so that the supply may be ample for those we have in the service, so that the food may be ample for those we have in the service, so that the workers may make the consumers' goods for those who are not in the service and who are making things for the service. All of that requires a great deal of planning. That function per se in its initial stages is performed by the National Security Resources Board for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, for the President, and for the Secretary of Defense. Within that recommendation, the Joint Chiefs of Staff then, if they have the money, can have all of the forces that they require, that are authorized by Congress. That is the best way I can answer that question.

Mr. LODGE. Let me put it to the Senator in a realistic manner. Take the last war as an example. Young men wanted to go into the Marine Corps, they wanted to go into the Air Corps, they wanted to go into the Navy. Practically nobody wanted to go into the Infantry. We simply could not win the war without large quantities of infantry. It became a very serious problem. The boys did not want to go into the Infantry.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is the best branch, the most deserving branch, in all three departments. It is the branch with which the Senator from Maryland was formerly identified in World War I. Without that branch, I doubt if the Republic would be in existence, because from George Washington to the present time the boys in the Infantry have been the boys who have slugged it out and have brought home the bacon.

Mr. LODGE. That is just it. When I say Infantry I include the Marine Corps because it is the rifle companies which take the heavy losses. They are very much heavier than in any other kind of warfare. I believe that is borne out by statistics.

So we confront a situation in which we cannot win wars without having many young men in rifle companies. That has nothing to do with what people want to do; that is the way it is. If we are going to place a great many young men in rifle companies, the least we can do is to provide them with good leadership, good young officers, and there is only so much young military leadership available. If that leadership goes where it wants to go, it will go into the Air Force, into the Navy, or into the Marine Corps, and there would not be sufficient young leadership assigned to the Infantry. They are entitled to good leadership when they come up against the grim facts of war.

Are the Joint Chiefs of Staff to have a right to study that problem and make recommendations with reference to it, so that this precious nucleus of young military leadership, which is always very limited in any country—it is like radium; it is the lodestone of our whole military effort—so that this precious leadership is allocated where it will do the most good, and not necessarily where it wants to go?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure I can answer the Senator's question. The way it would work out would be as follows: There would be a balance struck between those who might be required to work for the war effort and those required to work in the war effort, in uniform. Once that balance was struck and the number of men fixed, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would open the allocations in the Air, the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Army. They could go further and include the Artillery, the Infantry, the Quartermaster Corps, the Signal Corps, the Transport Corps, or what not. They could fix the number and could regulate it entirely by siphoning the men who would come in under the draft to that branch of the armed services best fitted for the defense of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Is it planned to do that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; because the National Security Resources Board is specifically charged with making such a study and being always ready for the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the event war comes upon us or we are threatened with war.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. It has always been that way. In World War I the Senator from Illinois had an experience of that kind. In other words, at Fort Griffin, Ga., I was selected, depending upon the abilities I had. But certainly no one would want to take away from any enlisted man the right to enlist in any branch of the service he preferred, until the quota was filled.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I think the Senator from Illinois may be under the impression that the colloquy between the Senator from Massachusetts and me may have left someone with a false impression. We want a man to go into whatever branch of the armed services he chooses, so far as the need of the organization and his own talents will permit. As I understood the Senator's question, it was that that probably could be fixed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure there is nothing in the bill which would prevent that. All the machinery is established to accomplish the objectives mentioned by the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. It is highly desirable for a man to go into the service he wishes to enter, but there is nothing like enough men who want to go into the Infantry. That is where the problem arises.

I should like to ask one more question. The Senator has been very patient with me, and I hope I shall not wear him out.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to have the Senator's questions, because I think they have brought out many points we did not have time to bring out previously. Further, we think the bill is so good that within the limitations of possibility it is probably as far-reaching and valuable a piece of legislation as we can put through affecting the Military Establishment in time of peace.

Mr. LODGE. In the committee print, page 4, appears paragraph (3) of section 202. Beginning in line 19 there is added language some of which was not in the committee print, and some of which was; but the last part of it was not. I should like to read the whole paragraph. These are the duties imposed on the Secretary of Defense:

> Taking of appropriate steps, including such coordination, transfers, and consolidations as may be necessary—

There is where we save money in time of peace, and there is where we get the most out of the manpower in time of war—> to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, health, research, and personnel, and in such other fields as he may deem proper—

One would think there would be a period at that point; but here comes a "but." We must always look out for the word "but"—

> but this shall not be construed to authorize the Secretary of Defense to reassign the combatant functions assigned to the military departments by sections 205 (e), 206 (b), 206 (c), and 208 (f) hereof, or—

Here comes the "or"—

> or to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another or to make details or assignments of military personnel in a manner substantially to effect or change such assigned combatant functions.

That is the part to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Maryland. I should like to ask him why it was necessary to put in that "but" and that "or." Is there anything in the law now which enables the Department of Defense to transfer those functions?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is in the law now.

Mr. LODGE. Why was it put in?

Mr. TYDINGS. Again?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just to reassure people who had to be reassured in order to get enough votes to get a proper law through the Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Who are the people who have so many votes and so much influence that they have to be reassured by a repetition of the law? I should like to know that.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are some on both sides of the aisle who wanted that reassurance.

Mr. LODGE. I am not speaking politically.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will talk with his colleagues on the other side of the aisle who served on the committee, he will find that some of this reassurance was pretty strongly urged by Members on this side and on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. LODGE. I should really like to know who it is who has so many votes and so much influence that we have to restate the law in order to get this bill passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator want me to call names?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I do not say names of Senators, but names of the one for whom they speak.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts, to show him that I do not think these things are as serious as cold type appears, that today in executive session the Secretary of Defense appeared before our committee and told us of a highly confidential consolidation which had just taken place in the three branches of the service, of the very highest priority—and I cannot be any more specific—which saves thousands of men, and I believe, and he stated verbatim, millions and millions of dollars. That was done with the approval finally of the three branches of the service. They like to be reassured.

One branch will have a sort of a patent on a certain function. Then the others want to duplicate that function so that they will not have to use the function of the branch which originally set up this particular performance. After a while the three of them have the function. We will liken it to the use of an automobile. Each branch has an automobile. The Secretary says, "You fellows don't need three automobiles. You are all going to the same place. I am going to do away with two of these and you can all ride in one vehicle." That was all disclosed today, for reasons which cannot be publicized. I have no doubt in the world that by unification many hundreds of men will be turned loose and made free for use in other services, and millions of dollars are going to be saved in equipment and everything else connected with the operation.

To read the language, one would almost assume that that could not be done, but I can tell the Senator that to my certain knowledge Secretary Forrestal made several of these proposals, and gave them no publicity, some of them in the classified realm, and already Mr. Johnson has made several, and they are saving men and saving money. If we are to have an adequate national defense we have to save money in order to get the defense we must have. We cannot spend any more.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I am arguing for, and I think it is very extraordinary that as able a Senator as the Senator from Maryland, as brilliant as he is, as quick-witted as he is, and as conversant with the subject as he is, can give me only one answer, and say that it is because of influential people who have votes up here. That is the only answer he gives. As able as the Senator is, if there were a good answer, he would give it to me.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say this to the Senator from Massachusetts—and I have a smile on my face because I see several of the members of my committee on the floor, for which I am grateful—that the Senator from Maryland tried for 3 weeks, on a proposiiton which he initiated, to get his committee to go along with him, and his committee would not do so, but left him stranded high and dry after 3 weeks of pretty stiff argument. So that there are points in the minds and convictions of men which it is not possible to get them to surrender.

Mr. LODGE. I wish they would come out and say these things on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Whether they are right or wrong, they believe in them intensely.

Mr. LODGE. What do they believe?

Mr. TYDINGS. And when one works and works and whittles away at the arguments and cannot accomplish what he seeks, there is only one thing to do, and that is salvage everything possible.

Mr. LODGE. I know about that, and the Senator is very practical in salvaging, and I honor him for it. But what are these convictions? Why, if it is so important, does not someone rise and show its importance?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson, came before the committee and recommended this language.

Mr. LODGE. This language?

Mr. TYDINGS. The "but" language.

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of Defense?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Secretary of Defense, because he told us very frankly that he doubted whether the bill could pass both Houses without it.

Mr. LODGE. This was on his recommendation?

Mr. TYDINGS. On his recommendation. There are those who did not want it, and I was one, but felt that we should not insist on 10 percent and lose the whole bill, because it has so many good things in it which would save money.

Mr. LODGE. This is one of the bad things which I would like to take out.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator can offer an amendment on the floor, and I cannot vote with him, because I am for the committee bill, but my sympathies will be with him.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator to refer me to the page of the record where the Secretary of Defense asked for that language?

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe I owe my committee an apology. I believe that was in executive session.

Mr. LODGE. If the Secretary of Defense wants that language in—and I am sure he is man enough to come and say so openly, though I should be surprised if he did—then I should like to have him come and say it openly.

We recall how the engineers engaged in lobbying against any reorganization law. They were afraid. They did not have to be afraid. Their Corps has a marvelous standing, a wonderful reputation. They do not have to be pried or jimmied into the law by some special act. By the same token there is not a single branch of the service that is worth its salt that needs to have this type of artificial, legalistic limitation written into the law. I think that if we were to spend the national defense money the way the Senator and I spend our own money, we could have, not $500,000,000, not a billion, not a billion and a half, but two and a half billion, easily, in my judgment, and we would probably have just as much fighting strength, just as much fire power, when we got through. Some feelings would be hurt, but not at the taxpayers' expense. But to ask the Secretary of Defense to make all these savings and all these economies and then to put a big "but" in there, that he cannot take Joe Doakes here and put him over somewhere else where he is needed, to my mind is a contradiction in terms. And that is in time of peace.

In time of war, are we to say, "We want the land battle, and now we are fighting a sea battle. We have 40 divisions, but they are going to do squads right and squads left, although they are badly needed to go into the Navy, and swab the decks. But they cannot do it because we must not transfer men to the posts where they are needed." During the last war I think fully one-third of the junior officers were taken out of the division in which I served in order to enter the Air Force. It was smart and realistic. We had to win the air war. Then in 1945 the Army got to the point where they were running short of men for the Infantry and they took fellows out of the Air Force and put them into the Infantry. They said, "This is not a private club. It is a war, and we have to win."

When I first went to Libya in 1942 it was common talk all through the British Army—I do not vouch for the accuracy of the details—but the general talk was that the British Army was so divided up in watertight compartments that the replacements would come out from England for the Coldstream Guards, for instance, but they could not take a boy out of the Coldstream Guards and put him into the Queen's Hussars because of those limiting laws and regulations.

Mr. TYDINGS. We do not have that trouble in our Military Establishment.

Mr. LODGE. If we had had this system in the last war we would not have been able to shift the men all around.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is entirely wrong.

Mr. LODGE. No, I am not. I wish I were, but I am not.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is nothing in the bill which prevents a transfer of marines to the Army, or of the air men to the Army, or of Army men to the Navy, unless it destroys the Marine Corps, destroys the Navy, or destroys the Army.

Mr. LODGE. Where does the Senator read that?

Mr. TYDINGS. This was put in because it was assumed that so many could be transferred in homeopathic doses that the whole business could be done. The bill itself provides that transfers can take place, but they cannot take place to such an extent that it would destroy the organization from which a transfer is made.

Mr. LODGE. Where does it say anything about destroying? I thought we were trying to destroy the enemy, not to destroy ourselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read it to the Senator. It is subsection (3), line 15, page 4:

> Taking of appropriate steps, including such coordination, transfers, and consolidations as may be necessary, to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, personnel, health, research, and in such other fields as he may deem proper, but this shall not be construed to authorize the Secretary of Defense to reassign the combatant functions assigned to the military departments and other roles and missions——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has left out the words "or to make transfers of military personnel." Am I reading from the wrong bill? I am reading from page 4 of Senate bill 1843. The words appear therein, "or to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another."

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, but I am showing the way the Secretary of Defense sent it over to us and asked us to pass it.

Mr. LODGE. That does not answer my question as to why it was done.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I want to make with the Senator, and I want to make sure that he understands it, is that you can take men out of the Marine Corps and put them in the Army, or you can take men out of the Army and the Navy and put them in the Marine Corps under the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. You cannot transfer them. They have to resign, do they not?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; they can be transferred temporarily. A company or a battalion can be transferred and work together with the Army.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. That is different. I am not talking about attaching a company. I know that a certain number of men can be detailed and attached to another group. But during the war we took men out of the Army and actually placed them in the Air Force.

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, legally a man could not be taken from one branch and placed in the other if he did not want to have it done. Let me explain to the Senator. When a man is commissioned in the Army of the United States no one can transfer him out of the Army. His commission is a binding contract between him and his Government.

Mr. LODGE. I know that. I myself was commissioned.

Mr. TYDINGS. He is commissioned for one particular purpose, and he cannot be transferred without his consent. John Doe receives a piece of parchment showing that he is hereby commissioned a lieutenant or a captain or a colonel or a general in the Army of the United States. But he can be transferred, he can be attached, he can be assigned to recruiting service, to training with the Navy, to any one of a number of functions, to serve with them. But his home, his parent organization, in spite of the fact that he may serve with the Navy, is the Army, if he is commissioned in the Army of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. That I think is old-fashioned and out of date, and I speak as a man who has a commission in the Army. I have such a parchment as the Senator speaks of. I think that is old-fashioned. I think the whole thing must be more fluid.

Mr. TYDINGS. So long as he is commissioned he cannot be transferred.

Mr. LODGE. It can be done in the future. This provision of the bill is a military monstrosity, I will say very candidly, and it goes against all the experience and the realism of war. Although the Senator from Maryland has been very tactful, and he has not given away the hand at all, and he has not betrayed any confidences on the part of his colleagues, and he has not come out and said what the real reason for this thing is, it looks to me as though it were a device to protect some particular interest.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a minute, Mr. President. The Senator from Maryland is not withholding anything from the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to get that plain. If the Senator has gained the impression that there is any deceit in anything the Senator from Maryland is saying——

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think it is deceit. I think it is discretion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, even discretion. If I am to be criticized for not being frank, I will say that I have nothing to hide. I will say frankly that I am for this bill, though there are parts of it with which I do not agree. But I can go through, with the help of my committee, in framing a piece of legislation that will save a billion or one billion and one-half dollars a year, as former President Hoover says, and contribute immeasurably to unification. Even though it is not a perfect measure, I am willing to make a few minor sacrifices to make the saving.

Mr. LODGE. I have not criticized the Senator at all. And I am in favor of saving a billion and a half dollars. I think this bill is a step in the right direction. I think it falters here and there. I think if the bill were amended in one or two particulars probably an extra billion dollars might be saved. I do not think we have the idea in our head realistically that there has got to be a loyalty to the armed forces as a whole, there has got to be a recognition of the fact that this country is very short of manpower, that in any war in the future we cannot waste our manpower for sentimental reasons, but will have to use it where it does the most good.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will offer an amendment at the proper place, when we have the matter under consideration; and if he can induce Congress to wipe out these roles and missions, in view of the strength that I know will develop in opposition thereto, I shall be glad to support him.

Mr. LODGE. I am not making any bets as to my success, because when the Senator from Maryland speaks about the influences that control so many votes here, I am sure he is correct. I know the case I plead has no glamor to it. It is based on the reality of war, and war is a very ugly thing, and there is no attraction to it, but I shall offer the amendment in any case.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD at this point a short explanatory statement dealing with the budget provisions.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Section 10, which begins at the bottom of page 16, contains the provisions which call for a complete overhaul of the budget and accounting practices in the National Military Establishment. This section sets up in the Office of the Secretary of Defense a Comptroller, who is made responsible to the Secretary for all budgeting and accounting policies and practices. A similar arrangement is prescribed within each military department, with the added provision that the practices and policies in each of the three military departments shall be patterned after those prescribed by the Comptroller in the Department of Defense.
> The section also provides that future budget estimates submitted by the Military Establishment shall be on a performance, or functional, basis, rather than on the present "things to be acquired" basis.
>
> Provision is also made in this section for necessary program adjustments within each military department so as to permit of a better utilization of appropriated funds. The establishment of working-capital funds for all three services in the manner similar to that now prescribed for the Navy stock fund is also authorized. Provision is also made for management funds in the three services, similar to the naval emergency fund established in 1945.
> All of the provisions of this section have the approval and the enthusiastic endorsement of the Hoover Commission. They are also concurred in by the General Accounting Office, the Department of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Defense. I must admit that some of the provisions of this section might be accomplished without specific statutory direction, but the committee felt that it was necessary that some affirmative stand be taken by the Congress to direct that these necessary measures be undertaken without delay. The authority has existed for years, but nothing constructive has happened in this field. The committee therefore feels that the Congress should direct that these necessary reforms be gotten under way by enacting this type of amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to say, following that statement, that one of the reasons I did not explain in more detail the budget provisions is that they are highly technical. The provisions must be read, and it is necessary to have face to face conversation in order to explain them in all their ramifications. But I should like to say before leaving this phase of the subject, that they were worked out with Mr. McNeil, who has been the budget expert in the Department of Defense, Mr. Eberstadt in the committee, and numerous others. I believe that without further explanation the Senate will be very wise to accept them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. During the course of the debate something was said to the effect that former Secretary of War Patterson was in favor of merger. I have just looked up his statement under date of November 9, in his capacity as member of the national security organization:

> The War Department proposal was to have a single department of defense, under a single secretary. The single department was to have three branches of equal status—Army, Navy, and Air.

That is not a merger. It is the exact opposite.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, this afternoon the Senate has been considering Senate bill 1843. The Senator in charge of the measure, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], estimates that by passing the bill a saving can be made of $1,500,000,000. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated that if we accept a couple of amendments he would propose, an additional $2,000,000,000 could be saved. The Senator from Massachusetts did not seem to be encouraged over the success of his amendments. I hope he offers his amendments. I think that any amendment which will result in saving $2,000,000,000, and at the same time keep the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force strong fighting organizations, is worthy of the attention of the Members of the United States Senate. Even though the Senator's amendment may be lost now, the cause is not necessarily lost in the long run.

This afternoon there was reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives a bill entitled "A bill making appropriations for foreign aid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950." This is the so-called ECA appropriation bill. The bill has not been passed by the House, but I should like to say for the benefit of the Members of the Senate that the amount which would be allocated under that bill, compared with the $5,580,000,000 authorization the Senate passed and sent to the House for the 1 year for which the appropriation is effective, beginning next July, is $4,283,000,000. One quarter of the year would already be gone. There is no use trying to save anything for that period. But the $4,288,000,000 would be the full amount of the House ECA bill for the year beginning July 1, 1949, and ending on June 30, 1950. The House made a searching investigation of the ECA needs, and what might be saved. I hope the same will be done in connection with the national defense.

No Senator has done more to support national defense than has the junior Senator from Nebraska. The junior Senator from Nebraska was one of the Senators who last year took the lead to have a force of 70 air squadrons established. I want to follow the advice of the military men, because I think when it comes to military matters a layman must give way to the judgment of military men. We must take the advice of military men respecting national defense. Even the national defense appropriations should be scrutinized. If two and a half billion dollars can be saved, I think the amendments should be offered, even though they are not approved in the Senate at this time.

Let me tell the Senate what the Appropriations Committee of the House did in connection with the ECA bill. First, a subcommittee went over the appropriation of $4,288,000,000, and reported to the full committee a recommendation for the appropriation of $4,015,900,000. Then the full committee considered the recommendation and, believe it or not, it reported the bill to the House in the amount of $3,568,470,000. That is 17⅔ percent less than what was authorized by the Senate several weeks ago.

Mr. President, I do not want to stand here and say "I told you so," or to defend the amendment which I offered, providing for a reduction of 15 percent. That amendment was lost, there being only 14 or 15 votes for it. The point I make is that the House Appropriations Committee did a good job. It investigated the subject, and reconciled earlier prices with today's prices, and recommended a reduction of 17⅔ percent from the amount of the authorization passed by the Senate.

I wish to compliment the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have enjoyed every moment of this debate. But I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will offer his amendments. I think they are worthy of consideration. I certainly feel that in the interest of economy we must reduce appropriations all along the line. I admit that we must have an adequate national defense, but I hope that members of the Armed Services Committee will bring their amendments to the floor of the Senate and give us an opportunity to hear the debate pro and con. I hope the Senate will follow the example of the House in connection with the ECA bill. We should appropriate enough, but we should give the subject full consideration, so that we may keep the financial policy of the United States Government sound. We must cut the cloth to fit the pattern, so that we can avoid increasing taxes and deficit spending. I believe that all Members of the Senate on both sides of the aisle can subscribe to that philosophy and those recommendations.

WORLD ASSEMBLY FOR MORAL REARMAMENT

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I have a brief statement to make, and an invitation to offer to Members of the Senate.

In connection with the Foreign Ministers meeting on Germany in Paris, the general concern about the future of our policy in western Europe, which has been high lighted in recent days by the lifting of the Berlin blockade, the return of General Clay, and the extended hearings on the North Atlantic Pact, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to a forthcoming conference in Europe which, I believe, will make a decisive contribution in our efforts to expand the frontiers of freedom.

Many of my colleagues know that the junior Senator from Washington was one of a Congressional delegation who last year attended the World Assembly for Moral Rearmament at Caux, Switzerland. In recent years many Senators and Representatives have visited this beautiful spot and found it to be one of the most hopeful developments in postwar Europe. As I wrote to General Clay last fall, I found there "the only available and reasonable answer to the sweeping tide of communism."

Before attending this conference I was far from satisfied that appropriating billions of dollars for European aid was going to do the job. After seeing what was going on in Europe I can say with conviction that material things, when provided within reason and when properly administered can give us a legitimate run for our money, because behind them, and more important, the spirit, first of Europe and then of the world, is being rejuvenated and revitalized.

When present at the conference I urged that the program be given fullest scope in Germany itself. I am very happy to learn that the French Foreign Minister has been so impressed with the results achieved in that country that he has asked to meet with the leaders of western Germany at Caux in early June. This conference, which is scheduled from June 4 to 12, gives a unique opportunity to Senators to confer with German leaders and to explore and mold German opinion at a moment most critical for the west. Already the minister-presidents of most of the states of the western zones have accepted, along with Dr. Konrad Adenauer, president of the constitutional assembly at Bonn; Hans Boeckler, chairman of the trade-union council, British zone; Alfred Hartmann, finance director of Bizonia; and August Schmdit, president of the Ruhr mine workers. Among the representative statesmen who are planning to take part in the conference are members of the cabinets of France, Switzerland, Greece, and Japan, and parliamentary delegates from Italy and other countries.

In light of the caliber of the delegates from other countries it is of extreme importance that the United States be adequately represented. It would take months of travel to meet these men, and may I say from experience that they would never be so accessible anywhere else.

Statesmanship today demands the seizing of an occasion like this to build relations in an atmosphere which these statesmen feel—and I can confirm their judgment to be the one hope for Europe's future. This opportunity taken in the early twenties might have prevented war. Now it can unite the leadership of the democratic nations in a fight for a free world. I believe this is a historic opportunity for Members of this body not only to meet world leaders and know conditions from these authentic sources, but also to report to America what they find and kindle nationally the fight for democracy's inspired ideology as the one hope for peace in the new world.

There will be a special plane for Members of Congress and other American citizens leaving LaGuardia Airport June 2 for Geneva and the Caux Conference. Although, as I have said, the conference is from June 4 to 12, Members of Congress could attend for a shorter period. I myself was gone from this country last fall for only 6 days, and found it eminently worth while. That visit is still so rich an experience for me that I urge my colleagues to give a thoughtful and cordial welcome to any invitation they may receive for this forthcoming conference.

I want to think, Mr. President, that the Chair might find it convenient and proper to appoint an unofficial committee of Senators from both sides of the aisle to attend this conference and to report back in an informal way its results.

I believe it would be of immense value in our deliberations to have in our midst and at our disposal a first-hand knowledge of the thinking and insight afforded by the statesmen who will be gathered in Caux.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the body of the invitation which has come to hand.

There being no objection, the invitation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIS IS A PERSONAL INVITATION — WORLD ASSEMBLY FOR MORAL REARMAMENT — THE IDEOLOGY OF INSPIRED DEMOCRACY

(R. S. V. P. Philippe Mottu, the Mountain House, Caux-sur-Montreux)

(June 4–12, 1949, Caux-sur-Montreux, Switzerland)

ROBERT SCHUMAN, FOREIGN MINISTER OF FRANCE

In the economic field we have the Marshall plan. In the political and military field we have the Atlantic Pact. Now we need to give ideological content to the lives of the millions of Europe. We must reach the people so that the pact will be sustained by a deep change in the way of life of the western world.

DR. KARL ARNOLD, MINISTER-PRESIDENT OF NORTH RHINE-WESTPHALIA, GERMANY

We must reeducate people in democracy. Make a citizen aware he has as much responsibility for the actions of the state in which he lives as he has for his own personal action. "As I am so is my nation."

Moral rearmament has a tremendous part to play in this program. It is something that people trust. It wins their hearts and gets inside their minds. It can be the means of thawing our frozen hearts. That is our great task today. The basis of European unity is not political or economic or industrial. We have to begin at the spiritual end. We Europeans have forgotten how to think organically. What is the use of a head or a hand on its own? When you have all the parts working together, then you have a body. That is the philosophy of moral rearmament.

IGINO GIORDANI, MEMBER OF THE ITALIAN PARLIAMENT AND EDITOR OF FIDES

Barriers of race and class have been banished from Caux, this home of hospitality, and in their place has been discovered the spirit of simple human understanding. Moral rearmament breaks down individualism on the one hand and materialism on the other and creates that universal love which is an essential part of Catholic religious life. Dr. Buchman has succeeded with fearless determination and consistence in achieving the aim of the Catholic Englishman, Chesterton—to mobilize the forces of good to do battle against evil.

GEN. HENRI GUISAN, WARTIME COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF THE SWISS ARMY

Switzerland, Europe's most ancient democracy, understands moral rearmament, and that is why we are proud to think that its European headquarters is situated in our country.

During the last decades Switzerland has tried to give the best she had to assuage the misery and sufferings caused by war. Through moral rearmament a new opportunity opens before our people to bring to Europe the secret of a living democracy inspired by Almighty God.

SENATOR KARL E. MUNDT, AS COCHAIRMAN OF THE SMITH-MUNDT COMMITTEE, UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Our committee paid a visit to Caux to the Moral Rearmament Conference which in some ways comprised the brightest star for the future we have witnessed in all Europe. Some of its achievements to date are little short of miraculous. There we met Dr. Frank Buchman, the sponsor of moral rearmament, and saw the world premiere of the new dramatic review, the Good Road.

Europe and the world today need moral revitalization and rearmament. No man could attend the conference in Caux and watch the emotions of a new hope light the faces of the people there and not come away convinced that the organized forces of good in this world can defeat the organized forces of evil.

SIR ZAFRULLAH KHAN, FOREIGN MINISTER OF PAKISTAN

I am convinced that moral rearmament is the world's supreme need at the moment. Only through sustained effort in that direction can mankind win through to its true redemption.

SIR PATRICK DOLLAN, EDITOR OF THE SCOTTISH DAILY HERALD

In the shipyards, steel works, and factories of Clydeside, moral rearmament is providing men and women with a new dynamic. What I have seen, not only in my own country but among the ruined cities of Germany, has convinced me that this inspired Christian ideology can bring about the rebirth of nations. It is the one sure hope for a crumbling civilization.

DR. HANS BOECKLER, CHAIRMAN OF THE TRADE-UNION CONGRESS OF THE BRITISH ZONE, GERMANY

If men are to be free from the old and the outmoded, it can only happen as they set themselves a new goal, and place in the forefront humanity and moral values. I believe that moral rearmament can bring about a definite improvement for mankind in many areas of life. When men change the structure of society changes, and when the structure of society changes men change. Both go together and both are necessary. The goal which moral rearmament strives to reach is the same as that for which I am fighting as a trade-unionist.

DR. FRANK N. D. BUCHMAN IN A WORLD BROADCAST FROM CAUX

A generation ago the force of moral rearmament began fighting. On a world front it has been answering plan with plan, idea with idea, a militant godless materialism with a militant inspired ideology for democracy.

The idea caught hold. It armed men. It impacted nation after nation. Now it girdles the globe. Today at the moral rearmament assembly at Caux we see this force in action with the answer, available for service. At a time when statesmen realize the lateness of the hour, it freely offers the fruit of 25 years of toil. A force in the war of ideas, with the training and experience which, under God, can equip the statesmen and the ordinary man with an ideology adequate to remake the nations—now.

The assembly will be attended by political and industrial leaders from many nations. Cabinet Ministers from the various countries have already intimated their desire to be present.

During the assembly the world preview will take place of the film the Good Road, now being made in Lausanne by one of Hollywood's ablest directors, Edward Griffith, assisted by a corps of Hollywood artists. The film will go out to a world market in the language of each country.

Performances of the Forgotten Factor and other ideological weapons will be features of the assembly. There will be songs by the Mackinac singers.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I should like to underline the statement of Foreign Minister Robert Schuman when he says:

In the economic field we have the Marshall plan. In the political and military field we have the Atlantic Pact. Now we need to give ideological content to the lives of the millions of Europe. We must reach the people so that the pact will be sustained by a deep change in the way of life of the Western World.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this afternoon when the calendar was being called, House bill 1754, Calendar 393, a bill to extend the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims, was objected to by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. Later in conversation with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and after a full explanation of the bill, the Senator from Nevada agreed to withdraw his objection.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1754) extending the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1949.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not wish to disappoint the distinguished majority leader, but I do know that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] is very much interested in this proposed legislation. I believe that at the time the bill went over it was the junior Senator from Maryland who made the objection.

Mr. LUCAS. No; the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] made the objection, but later, in conference with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], he withdrew his objection. That is the only reason I am bringing it up at this time. If there is any other objection, I am not aware of it.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like very much to get in touch with the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr.

MILLIKIN]. I know that he wanted to be present when the bill was considered. I am informed that he favors the bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN entered the Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is now present in the Chamber. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I have learned with great pleasure that the objection to this bill has been withdrawn. There is a very essential time element involved. If our miners are to do assessment work, they must get it done before the end of June; and if they are not to do it, they must make their plans accordingly. So I wish to express my appreciation for the withdrawal of the objection to the bill, and I am delighted that action can be taken on it now.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am making this report for the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], who was compelled to leave the Chamber before this hour.

There is a slight amendment to be made on page 2, in line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1754) extending the time for the completion of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian, July 1, 1949, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby suspended as to all mining claims in the United States until the hour of 12 o'clock meridian of the 1st day of July 1949: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this act shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian of July 1, 1949, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of any act of Congress to the contrary, any person who hereafter prospects for, mines, or removes any minerals from any land included in a stock raising or other homestead entry or patent, and who had been liable under such an existing act only for damages caused thereby to the crops or improvements of the entryman or patentee, shall also be liable for any damage that may be caused to the value of the land for grazing by such prospecting for, mining, or removal of minerals. Nothing in this section shall be construed to impair any vested right in existence on the effective date of this section.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment on page 2, in line 11, by striking out the date "1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "1950."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the same date appears in line 15.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct; and I move that the committee amendment be amended, in line 15, so as to change the date "1949" to "1950."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and enlarging the liability for damages caused to stock raising and other homesteads by mining activities."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the distinguished majority leader. If the Senate completes action on Senate bill 1843 tomorrow, of course the unfinished business will be the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Extension Act. What does the distinguished Senator from Illinois intend to do about it, in the event the Senator from Georgia is not able to present that measure tomorrow?

Mr. LUCAS. In response to the inquiry by the distinguished minority leader, I wish to say that we shall proceed to the consideration of House bill 2663, Calendar No. 90, an act to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency. I am sure that will be the order of business in the Senate, because in conversation with the able Senator from Georgia today, he indicated that he would not be able to present the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Extension Act tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not attempting to get a commitment from the able majority leader; but in the event that Calendar No. 90, House bill 2663, is taken up and disposed of tomorrow before the end of the day, does the able majority leader have any idea that it might be possible for the Senate to take up the measure providing for the 15-month so-called moratorium, as provided in the Myers bill relating to the freight-rate basing-point issue?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; there is a good possibility that that measure will be taken up.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. Senators on both sides of the aisle have manifested considerable interest in the bill, and I hope the majority leader will give consideration to having the Senate take it up, in the event the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is not in a position to present the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Extension Act tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, there is considerable interest in the Myers bill on the part of a number of Senators, and I hope it will be possible for the bill to be considered by the Senate tomorrow, in the event the developments just mentioned occur.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, out of respect to the memory of the late James Forrestal, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 24, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 23, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, who hast led Thy children through fire and cloud in ages past, today lead us through the maze of questions before us.

Be with the foreign ministers as they strive to bring peace to this weary earth. Whatever hinders concord among nations, show unto them the beginning of a new day, in which righteous achievement shall overcome unrighteous ambitions.

Today our Nation mourns the untimely death of one of its foremost statesmen. Grant that the memory of his devotion to duty may be a blessed heritage to our country.

O Lord of love, spread Thy guiding wings over the Speaker and the Congress; may the labors of this day be worthy in Thy sight. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 20, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1184. An act to encourage construction of rental housing on or in areas adjacent to Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force installations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

S. 3734. An act making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. FERGUSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE LATE HONORABLE JAMES FORRESTAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise, with heavy heart, to pay my last respects to one of the finest men I have ever known—a great American, a man who as surely gave his life in the service of his country as did the thousands of splendid young men during the fighting days of the war.

I speak of my close and admired friend, James Forrestal, a man whose tragic and untimely death early Sunday morning took from our people, and from official Washington, as competent a mind, as objective an outlook, as abiding a concern for the public interest as the Nation can ever hope to have.

And his passing takes from me as close a friend, and as respected an associate in public affairs, as I ever hope to have.

The annals of our times will assuredly accord James Forrestal the great place he filled in time of national crisis. He served with outstanding distinction in position after position in this capital of the world, positions of such responsibility and of such moment to the destiny of our Nation that only a man of great fiber could have carried them through.

That he performed so admirably perhaps could have been expected of any top-flight public servant. But that he met each increasing responsibility with ever-growing evidence of unquestionable integrity and objectivity in places of enormous public trust—places fraught with controversy in which lesser men would have brought ruin and havoc in public affairs—is testimony to this unusual man, this man whose sudden death costs all of us more than we, his contemporaries, can ever hope to comprehend.

I have known James Forrestal since his first days in Washington. He came first in 1940 as special assistant to President Roosevelt. Soon thereafter he became Under Secretary of the Navy, a post he undertook in full knowledge that he was embarking upon a task of unparalleled magnitude in the Nation's history, for even then, in late 1940, we were on our way toward building the greatest Navy the world will ever see.

His was the responsibility then to govern the stupendous expenditures for ships, planes, equipment, and the host of items that later made up our wartime Navy. So evident was his fitness in public service, so competent had he become in matters involving our great Navy, that he was one of the most popular selections for Secretary of Navy I have known in over a third of a century, when, in 1944, upon Secretary Knox's passing, he assumed that high post. I felt then, and have proudly known since, that no finer man in America could have been found for this great office.

His accomplishments in this great post, with all its influence and power, with its revered tradition and honor, led him on to still greater things in national life.

Within 3 years he had become America's first Secretary of Defense, a post of vast scope, of intense controversy, and of staggering responsibility. It was a post he did not seek—an honor he did not covet—an office he accepted, as he had the others, simply and honestly in response to a call to public service.

It was to this office, in the service of all of us, that my great friend gave his life. I know of no one who could possibly have performed as splendidly as James Forrestal did in this great enterprise of creating the new National Military Establishment. He was humble in the work he performed. He was patient in his demands. He was understanding, wholly objective, assiduous beyond the point of endurance, and I never heard him complain of the superhuman demands this new office imposed upon him—an office lacking in precedents, in tradition, in procedures, in trained personnel—lacking in everything except crushing responsibility.

He met every demand with humility and with that unusual competence that became a subject of admiring comment throughout all official circles of our Government.

And then the vastness and endlessness of his labors finally took their toll. He drove himself, in our service, beyond human endurance, and now it has cost his life.

He has sacrificed himself in the service of the American people. He is a casualty on the battlefield of public service.

It is a terrible loss. It is a personal one to me, for I revere James Forrestal, and always shall. How tragic it is that this man's enormous capacity and selfless dedication to public service have so prematurely been denied the Nation.

There is solace in knowing that James Forrestal's legion of friends and admirers will keep alive his unselfish spirit and sound public counsel, so that, in memory and precept and example, he remains with us. But the solace is sad and insufficient for me.

For I have lost my great friend, to whom we all owe so much. It is with profound grief that I pay him this last testimonial. I shall never know a greater American or a finer friend.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia in his beautiful tribute to a fine public servant. In Jim Forrestal the Nation has lost a great American, a man who in many critical days of the country gave freely of his strength and splendid talents. His was the duty to build a strong Navy and help direct it during the war. Later his great ability for organization was devoted to the unification of the armed services. His death is a sad one for the people of America. It is a sad one for those who want to make America a finer and a better country. A great builder is dead, stricken in the prime of life because of his service for mankind.

I join with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia in paying my little tribute to a fine American and one who has labored with fidelity and devotion to the national service.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, a member of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, it was only last Friday during the debate on the armed services pay bill that I had occason during my remarks to refer to James Forrestal as one of the great Americans of our time. In life he was one of our great citizens. In death he will be remembered as one of our greatest patriots.

I fully agree with President Truman when he said that Jim Forrestal was a war casualty. It is the same as if he were shot through the heart on the battlefield.

While the body of Jim Forrestal lies motionless in death, the spirit in that body died when he was compelled to swallow the bitter hemlock of political bickering and ambition. His memory will always linger with us.

I would like to be permitted to tell you an interesting story of him during the war. It was before the invasion of Iwo Jima. This incident did not come to the attention of the American people at that time, nor did it come to the attention of Mr. Forrestal until some time after the war had ended.

Several years after VJ-day, Jim Forrestal received a letter from a young marine private who wrote to the then Secretary of the Navy and told him of the feelings he and his marine buddies had concerning the invasion of Iwo Jima. He told the Secretary that he had those thoughts in his mind since the day the marines went ashore in the first wave, the first assault. He described to him how, when on the transport going into the island they had been informed of their objective they did not feel too happy about it. The marines realized they were entering a suicidal task. They fully realized that a great majority of them would never come off of that island. They had a certain bitterness in their hearts, and in their minds, and in their souls because they felt that perhaps their country had let them down. They had a feeling that their country was sending them to certain death. They wondered whether it was worth the price. This young marine, in his letter to Mr. Forrestal, described how he had gone ashore on the first day saturated with this bitterness which was shared by his comrades in combat, and he told the Secretary how they fought through that first day against almost insurmountable odds. He related how he had seen his comrades fall at his side. Then he told the Secretary how on the second day when they were going in again in this suicidal attack and things looked toughest he looked up; and they saw standing there on the beach at Iwo Jima, the Secretary of the Navy, and he and they knew that he was and his comrades were fighting for something after all. I think the appearance there of Jim Forrestal amid the shot and the shell and the bullets of Iwo Jima indicated and demonstrated the true courage and the true patriotism of the man and inspired those marines there as he inspired those of us who stood by here on the home front. He gave to both something to be proud of.

I shall always treasure as something sacred the friendship which I was privileged to enjoy with Jim Forrestal. He was a man never to be forgotten, a man always to be remembered.

I shall never forget the last letter which I received from him when he left the office of Secretary of Defense, less than 2 months ago.

He wrote:

DEAR ED: You have been a loyal and good friend of mine and that is a friendship I don't intend to let lapse.

Sincerely yours,

JIM.

Death has lapsed that friendship but from wherever Jim Forrestal is in Valhalla today he knows that the memory, not only of our friendship, but the friendship and confidence which he shared with so many, can never lapse on the pages of time.

I do not know of any one thing which could more adequately reveal Jim Forrestal's intensity and deep thinking than in the passage which he copied in a bold hand from Sophocles shortly before he plunged to his death.

It reveals what Jim Forrestal was thinking. It indicates most clearly his evaluation of his physical presence among the living, after his spirit had been killed.

Those final words will always be associated with Jim Forrestal.

It was his last message to a world to which he had given so much and from which he had received so little. His character stood out in the bold hand in which he wrote:

When reason's day set rayless—joyless—
quenched in cold decay,
Better to die, and sleep the never-waking sleep than linger on,
And dare to live, when the soul's life is gone.

What Jim Forrestal contributed to his country will be written on the pages of history and will live as long as the Nation he loved lives.

A great American, a true patriot, a sterling character, a man among men has given his life for his country.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS], a member of the Committee on the Armed Services.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of our great committee has spoken well. Nobody in this House is more prepared to speak of Jim Forrestal than the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from Georgia voices the feelings of all of us, he voices the feelings of the American people, he speaks for me.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of James V. Forrestal came as a great shock to me. During the last 2 years I have had the opportunity of daily contact with Jim Forrestal up until the time of his recent illness. Not only did he serve as Secretary of National Defense but he also took upon himself the added duty and responsibility of serving as a member of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, so I know something of the tremendous load of work and responsibility which was carried by Jim Forrestal.

I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Forrestal for many years. I first became acquainted with him back in the twenties when, as a young executive of a New York financial house, he came to Ohio, while I was secretary of state, in connection with the reorganization of a number of Ohio business concerns. I have known him rather intimately and well for a quarter of a century; yet, I have never known of Jim Forrestal ever doing a mean or a little thing. He had a philosophy of life which was good. He believed in the best qualities of his fellow men rather than their poor ones. In his passing America has lost a great public servant and a great citizen, while all humanity has lost a great friend and champion.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the gentleman from Georgia and others in paying tribute to the memory of James Forrestal. I do not know of a case in America's history where a public official has more definitely given his life to the country.

In our work this year on appropriation bills for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force it was necessary for us to work very closely with Mr. Forrestal. It was evident to me that he was working too hard, that he was working himself to death; and I told him so. "Oh," he said, "I can take it, and there is a job to be done."

I talked on several occasions with some of his coworkers, urging that they persuade Mr. Forrestal not to work so hard. Those intimate friends of his responded that they had undertaken to get the Secretary to take a much slower pace, but that Mr. Forrestal felt that there was a job to be done, and they were not able to restrain him from putting his whole life and soul into his job. He was a man who put the country's welfare above his own. The newspapers say he was popular with Congress, and the newspapers are correct. He was popular with Congress because of his sterling qualities and because of his readiness and willingness to go to all limits to be of assistance.

The last request I made of Mr. Forrestal was, in my opinion, a rather unreasonable one. I requested one day that he appear before our committee the next day at 10 o'clock a. m. with the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force. Those men had important assignments. I thought at the time that the time given to arrange the appearance of these men was inadequate, but we were struggling with a time limitation. Nevertheless, Mr. Forrestal, as he always did, made every effort and did comply with the congressional request. This was typical of his utter devotion to duty.

I am shocked and grieved over the passing of Mr. Forrestal, and I pay tribute to his memory.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, for nearly 10 years of my service on the Naval and Military Committees I had an opportunity to become rather closely associated with the type of work and service rendered by Mr. Forrestal. I realize the danger in using superlatives, but it is my honest opinion that Mr. Forrestal was the most conscientious and industrious, the most self-effacing and modest, and the most patriotic and fearless, the most competent and capable public servant I have ever personally known. Though deeply grieved by the sad news of this tragedy, I shall ever bear with me the memory of having been actively associated with a truly great American statesman and of having been enriched by that association.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. AUCHINCLOSS].

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, together with thousands of others, I am deeply shocked and grieved at the tragic death of our former Secretary of National Defense, James Forrestal. He was a friend of mine of over 30 years' standing and I can well appreciate the strain and stress which he has undergone these past years. He was a very intense man who directed exhaustive and concentrated study to any of the tasks that were his responsibility. He was a man of unquestionable integrity, and to whatever duty he undertook he applied his entire ability, which was great, with unselfish devotion.

Jim Forrestal worked with no thought of his own health during the years of the war, and he commanded the respect of all who came in contact with him. There is no question in the mind of anyone but that he lost his life in the service of his country, and in his devotion to duty he made an undeniably great contribution to the strength and success of our defense organization.

He will be missed wherever men of purpose and good will foregather and his passing leaves a large vacancy in his circle of many friends. My heartfelt sympathy goes out to his widow and his two fine sons, who I am sure will carry on in the tradition of their gallant father.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, my every contact with Mr. Forrestal during the war years impressed itself greatly upon me. I do not recall any man whose personality established a memory for each meeting as much as did his; of course I shall not recount them all, but I remember the first time I met him when he was sounding out congressional sentiment on the war in Europe. He was courteous and tolerant, but concerned. I remember talks with Jim Forrestal when we worked out procedures in connection with the renegotiation of excess war profits. He came to Government from business, but he did not hesitate to ask business to sacrifice in time of war. I remember him when he presented a Navy medal to a mother from my district who had lost two sons in the Pacific. He spoke as one who knew the price of the Pacific to mothers. I remember him in postwar conferences when members of the Appropriations Committee were asked to consider problems that confronted the Nation in the Near East. In every instance I was impressed with his extreme devotion to public service and his capacity to perform brilliantly and seemingly tirelessly.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, the Nation has never had a man who was more sincere or more devoted to duty than was Jim Forrestal.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this occasion to pass without saying just a word in expression of the grief which I feel, and even the indignation I feel, at the tragic death of Jim Forrestal. During my period of service here there has been no man who has impressed me so deeply. The intellectual attainments of Jim Forrestal were extraordinary. I have never known a man with a finer power of analysis. I have never known a man who rendered public service with higher ideals.

His country meant more to him than any political party, it meant more to him than any individual in the Government or out of the Government, it meant more to him than any group or faction in or out of the armed services, and it meant infinitely more to him than any ambition of his own. I think he was completely selfless in all that he did. He honored me with as warm and fine a friendship as I have ever enjoyed. I shall remember him and miss him as long as I live.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEFEVRE].

Mr. LEFEVRE. Mr. Speaker, it was a great shock to me yesterday to learn of the untimely death of James V. Forrestal. Immediately my thoughts turned to my first days in Washington as a Representative of the Thirtieth Congressional District of the State of New York. Mr. Forrestal was born in Beacon, N. Y., where he spent his boyhood days and he still maintained a home in Dutchess County. I was a luncheon guest of his several times when he was Under Secretary of the Navy. Not having had the pleasure of meeting him previously, his cordiality and friendship were greatly appreciated. Upon the death of Frank Knox, he was made Secretary of the Navy and all of us recognized his ability and sincerity throughout his Government service. I deeply regretted to learn of his resignation as Secretary of Defense, but apparently he gave too much of his own untiring energy. When President Truman stated that Jim Forrestal was as truly a casualty of war as if he had died on the firing line, no truer words could have been spoken.

Thousands of my constituents join me in mourning the loss of our outstanding citizen. Would that we had more citizens with his sound and fearless judgment.

My sympathy goes out to Mrs. Forrestal and their two fine sons.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I join in the beautiful tributes which have been paid to Jim Forrestal. It was my privilege to know the former Secretary of Defense quite well. He was a great man, a great American.

Our Nation has suffered an irreparable loss.

He brought to his office humility, sterling honor, character, foresight, and intelligence.

In noting the tragic manner in which he died, I think it noteworthy to mention that this public official, probably more than any man of our time, was subjected to a campaign of abuse and vilification the like of which I have never heard. It would seem to me that this should give pause to the irresponsible elements both in the press and on the radio who abuse the privileges of liberty of expression both by voice and pen in attacking men of character and honor. Someone has said that bricks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me. In my judgment, no more untrue utterance has ever been made. In this Capital of the United States the most devastating weapons used—more devastating than machine guns or mortars or the other weapons of battle—are the cruel weapons of distorted words, and they were used against this great man in a most unfair, uncharitable, and unthinkable manner. But he shall live in the minds and hearts of the people of this Nation as a great American and as the man who has charted the course for the security of our country.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to know Mr. Forrestal quite well. He was a man who inspired affection and respect. I was deeply shocked, I was heartbroken when I learned of his death. I extend my deepest sympathy to his bereaved wife and to his sons.

At this time of mounting tensions and crises it is an irreparable loss to the people of America whom he served for many difficult years with unremitting devotion. Here was a man of truly heroic dimensions, a man who combined in his person an extraordinary variety of human attributes. He had exceptional administrative ability and a truly lofty character. But, beyond that he possessed the courage and the imagination to reflect on the deeper implications of the stupendous events in which he played such a vital part. He found time to gain a perspective on the great challenge of our generation, to view it not in terms of the day's headlines but as a fateful current in the stream of history.

James Forrestal was not only a man of action; he had the objective mind of a philosopher; he had the sensitive heart of a poet. His soaring intellect and dauntless vision will be greatly missed in the highest councils of the Nation.

His memory will be cherished not only by those who were privileged to call him a friend, but also by the American people whose lasting gratitude he earned in such full measure. His name will be honored particularly by the members of our armed forces and by the youth of our land for whom he will always be a shining example of selflessness, high-mindedness, and gallantry.

How shall our faith discern the truth he sought?
We, too, must watch and wander till our eyes,
Turned skyward from the topmost tower of thought,
Haply shall find the star that marked his goal,
The watch-fire of transcendent liberties
Lighting the endless spaces of the soul.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, no one of us can adequately describe the importance of the work done by James Forrestal or its value to this country. All of us together here this morning are building a picture of his greatness and his courage. This Nation has, indeed, lost one of its most valuable public servants.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my approval of everything that has been said about Secretary Forrestal. I had occasion to express my opinion of him while he was living, defending him against an unworthy and unjust attack.

In his passing we have lost one of our finest living Americans.

In the words of the greatest genius of all time—

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD in regard to the life and character of James V. Forrestal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the tragic and untimely death of our first Secretary of Defense, James V. Forrestal, is a calamity to the American public. I did not know Mr. Forrestal through personal association as a friend, but I admired him greatly as a result of my association with him when he appeared before our committee hearing arguments for the consolidation of all branches of our armed forces, the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Air Force. From time to time I listened to Secretary Forrestal and his reasons for consolidation of our armed services, even though as Secretary of the Navy he must have been under terrific pressure to block this consolidation, and I know that he acted only for what he believed was in the national interest. I do not believe that he thought he would be appointed Secretary of Defense. He answered the questions put to him intelligently, and he was so well versed in his subject that he did not require a corps of secretaries and high naval officials to give him the correct replies to the questions propounded. He had a keen insight into the workings of the Navy, and he knew about how the questions would be answered if we had the consolidation.

From my observation as a member of the committee before which he appeared, I came to the conclusion that Secretary Forrestal knew what he was talking about. In addition to his bright, keen mind, he possessed great vision and all those qualifications necessary to execute the tremendous task later assigned him. His job was a hard one, requiring stamina, ability, and real work. It was just a little more than he was able to stand over a period of time, with the resultant weakening of man's mind when it is overtaxed. Secretary Forrestal truly gave his life in the service of his country, and we all mourn his untimely death.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I knew James V. Forrestal as a man of great patriotism, valor, courage, and knowledge. Although we frequently did not agree about matters of public policy, I always respected his opinions, for I knew, as all of us knew, that when he made up his mind, it was not because it would be favorable to his former connections in New York, his family, or for any narrow selfish reason. He was thinking of all the people of all this great Nation.

As I have pondered the manner in which he suddenly became ill and, at the last, ended his career with a tragic act, I have wondered if it was not to point up a great lesson to the people of the United States. I mean the dangerous threat which the efficient, methodical, bloodthirsty rulers of the Kremlin pose to the free world as we know it.

James V. Forrestal hated the Communists. He hated the thoughts of their undermining this land of ours, in which he had been able to work himself up from a poor man to one of wealth and high position. He hated the thoughts of allowing the Communists to overrun Poland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Rumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, and China. There is every reason to believe that the dangers of communism and the manner in which so many of our citizens overlook those dangers preyed on his mind, until, finding a weak spot, the pressure caused his collapse which ended in his tragic demise.

We of this Nation can never forget—we must never forget—the valiant fight he waged for our Nation in both the actual, declared war against Hitler and, later, in the cold war against the Communists. Let us resolve again that we shall not falter and we shall not fail in the crucial days to come, when the temper of every true American may have to be tried by fire. Let us pray that all of us fight as good and as long a fight as did Jim Forrestal.

PROGRAM FOR REMAINDER OF THIS WEEK

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, it has been necessary to make some changes in the announced program for this week, and I take this time to announce those changes.

The program for today will proceed as scheduled, bringing up House Resolution 206, the investigation resolution for the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and following that with the bill from the Committee on Public Works.

Tomorrow we will continue to consider the military pay bill.

Wednesday is the day set aside for memorial services in the House. There will be no legislation following those services.

On Thursday, it is contemplated that we will bring up the ECA appropriation bill. If that is not finished on Thursday it will go over until Friday. Of course it will be necessary for the House to be in session on Friday, technically, at least, if we are to adjourn over and have no session on Memorial Day.

I believe the pension bill from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation will come up on Wednesday of next week, under the agreement now entered into.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. We entered into that agreement because we had agreed to take it up on next Tuesday, May 31, but we found many Members had to be at home on the 30th, which is National Memorial Day, and they feared they would not be able to get back in time. So the Speaker and the whip, who I am sure represents the majority leader, and I, agree that we would take it up on Wednesday, June 1.

Mr. PRIEST. That is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Is it planned to take up the displaced persons bill tomorrow?

Mr. PRIEST. No. Tomorrow we will continue the consideration of the military pay bill, it being the unfinished business before the House.

Mr. STEFAN. Has the gentleman any idea when it will come up?

Mr. PRIEST. Of course, it cannot come up at least until the following week.

Mr. STEFAN. Next week?

Mr. PRIEST. That will be announced later.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that announcement will be made as early as possible as to what will come up on Tuesday following Memorial Day so that the membership may be informed.

Mr. PRIEST. I assure the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that that will be done at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If we are going to consider this pay bill tomorrow and then on Thursday and Friday consider the appropriation bill for ECA, it might be well for the gentleman to announce to the membership that they ought to be careful how they spend money on all these foreign countries, and that they ought to think a little, too, about what we are going to do for America.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Memorials of the Committee on House Administration, I wish to take this time to advise the membership of the House that all arrangements have been made for the annual memorial services to be held next Wednesday, day after tomorrow, May 25. The families of our deceased Members who passed on during the past year have been invited and many of them have indicated they will be here. We should make every effort to be here Wednesday at noon. It is a mark of respect we owe to our deceased colleagues.

The memorial addresses will be delivered by the distinguished lady from Utah [Mrs. BOSONE] and the distinguished lady from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON]. Music will be furnished by the United States Army Band.

FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATION BILL, 1950

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file its report on the foreign-aid appropriation bill for 1950.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman include in his request that the minority may have permission to file their views and that those views may be printed together with the report, and also that all points of order on the bill are reserved by me?

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the so-called ECA bill; that the minority have the right to file minority views together with the majority report and that all points of order on the bill are reserved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PICKETT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I obtained permission to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD certain testimony and documents which were presented to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am informed by the Public Printer that the extension exceeds the limit and that the cost will be $343.75. Notwithstanding the cost, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HÉBERT asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. PRICE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. BLAND asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the National Maritime Day, and to include an editorial from the New York Times.

Mr. ZABLOCKI asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and insert a resolution adopted by the Wisconsin State Industrial Union Council.

Mr. POLK asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a brief letter and an editorial from the Breeders Gazette.

Mr. BAILEY asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by the State legion commander on the North Atlantic Pact.

Mr. RANKIN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution from the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. BURKE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the text of an address by Mr. James Mooney, president of the Willys-Overland Motors, entitled 'The Thousand-Dollar Car."

Mr. ROONEY asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; in one to include a letter addressed to him by Hon. Sean Nunan, Irish Minister to the United States, and in the other an article from Look magazine, entitled, "The Pope's War on Communism."

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short editorial from the Christian Science Monitor.

DECORATIONS BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, you have heard much about a bill which came before Subcommittee No. 1 of the Armed Services Committee, of which I am chairman. It provides for the acceptance of 105 decorations from 20 foreign governments by 87 members of our armed forces.

There is nothing out of the way or unusual about the bill itself. During the course of the war, over 50,000 GI's were authorized to receive decorations from foreign governments; and many of these decorations came from France, Belgium, and Holland. Since the war, this House has unanimously voted that some 38 members of the Navy be authorized to receive certain gifts and decorations from foreign governments. The present bill is an Army bill; and it follows the Navy bill which passed this House unanimously.

Sixteen of the medals mentioned in this bill are tendered by the Government of Argentina; and 11 from the Government of Brazil, whose President has just visited the Capital. Of the 16 Argentina medals, one of them is tendered to Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan, military aide to President Truman; another one is tendered to Gen. Omar Bradley, and still another to Gen. Lawton Collins and Gen. Jacob Devers. There is nothing which distinguishes the Vaughan medal from the other medals tendered by the Argentine Government; and since this Government has embarked upon the policy begun in 1941 of permitting members of the armed forces to receive foreign medals, this bill should be passed by Congress immediately and become the law of the land.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CROOK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. EVINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter on slum clearance.

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement by Gen. Carlos P. Romulo.

ECA FUNDS USED BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on May 6 I received a letter from a constituent from which I quote:

> We understand that with some of the money being provided by the Marshall Plan to aid European countries in their recovery program lumber is being purchased from foreign countries, even some being purchased from countries behind the Iron Curtain.

He asked me to answer. Yesterday I received a letter from Mr. Paul Hoffman, in which he set out that this was not contrary to the policy of ECA, nor was it contrary to law; and then, more or less as an afterthought in the letter, he added this:

> However, we may add, a comparatively small amount has been authorized for procurement behind the Iron Curtain.

That is over the signature of Mr. Paul Hoffman, the ECA Administrator.

Mr. Speaker, before the ECA appropriation bill comes up I believe that this House has a right to know just how much of these commodities is being procured behind the Iron Curtain and how much of the American people's money is being spent there.

INCREASED PAY FOR THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will give further consideration to the bill which proposes pay increases for members of the armed services, the personnel of the Public Health Service, and the Coast Guard and Coast and Geodetic Survey. I have made some study over the week end of just what is involved, in order to try to see if the Members of the House could not get some clear understanding as to what this thing is going to cost. I have the figures, and they are authentic, they are accurate, and I am putting them in the RECORD at this time so that you will have an opportunity when you go into this matter tomorrow to understand definitely and positively what this is going to cost.

The stabilized figures for one fiscal year show it will cost $406,139,638; and that gives credit for all of the offsets that can be thought of except the possible increase in income taxes that the Government will receive as a result of giving this increase in pay. I think the Members ought to understand those figures because I got them from the armed services.

GI BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I am about to read a letter that I believe will be of great interest to the Members of this body.

The letter is as follows:

LINCOLN NEBR., May 19, 1949.

Senator HUGH BUTLER,
Senator K. S. WHERRY,
Representative C. T. CURTIS.

DEAR SIR: I do not know how to express my appreciation to all the Members of Congress for the GI bill of rights, nor do I remember which Congress it was which, while I was overseas, passed this bill. I do want to express my gratitude to my own Congressmen at this time in the hopes that they will express these sentiments to the other Congressmen responsible.

On June 6 this year I will be graduated from the University of Nebraska College of Engineering. Without the benefits which the GI bill provided I would have been unable to finish my college work since I had been married during my military service.

This letter is merely a testimonial to the effect that I am eternally grateful to my Uncle Sam.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM M. RAINES.

WHERE ARE WE GOING TO GET THE MONEY?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we must have less spending because we are going to have less receipts in taxes for the year 1950 about two and one-tenth billions, so the Treasury Department has informed us this morning.

What is the Congress going to do this week? We are going to have a bill up here for consideration in a few minutes providing for a post office in every district of the United States or at least providing for a survey to get ready to build these post offices. A chicken in every pot. We should leave these post offices alone for the present. There is no necessity to build them this year. We have not this money.

Then there is a bill pending to increase salaries of armed force officers, which the gentleman from Wisconsin has just stated is going to cost some $400,000,000, or more this year. I am informed that in 5 years it will cost about one billion annually, if passed as it is presented to the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we have to weigh every ounce of necessity for these reports and find out where we are going to get the money.

Later on in the week we will have an appropriation for the ECA, whereby we are going to give billions of dollars to foreign countries. I think this could be cut down by more than one billion or so. Serious consideration should be given to that matter.

There is also pending a so-called socialized medicine bill which will involve the expenditure of billions of dollars—how many we do not know. We should keep our eyes on that one.

In addition to the above bills, there is one providing aid to education all over the United States, involving unknown billions of dollars in future years. All you think of here as near as I can find out is spend, spend, spend. Will not the Members of Congress consider a real effort to have a sound solvent Government? Be wise and economize.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Speaker, an important story appears this morning on the front page of the New York Times. It is so important that I am taking this occasion to call it to the attention of the Members of the House. Every Member should read it, every Member should be familiar with it, in the light of coming legislative proposals.

This article is by the educational editor of the New York Times, Mr. Benjamin Fine, a gentleman of the highest integrity and ability, a gentleman I happen to know very well and in whom I have great confidence.

Skyrocketing Federal funds pose problems for schools—

Says the headline.

Educators with $3,400,000,000 United States aid for 1949, see vast waste in duplication by bureaus—fear for independence. Federal funds for education have skyrocketed in the record sum of $3,400,000,000 this year, jumping from $100,000,000 in 1940.

I am going to insert this article in the Appendix of the RECORD. I hope every Member will read it.

Before embarking upon new educational programs to cost additional hundreds of millions of dollars, perhaps Congress should review the crazy-quilt pattern of the educational programs for which it is now appropriating some $3,400,000,000 per year.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COUDERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HESELTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement made by Dr. Armand Hammer, president of the United Distillers of America, Inc., to the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee.

GERHART EISLER

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I said a few words in reference to Gerhart Eisler and pointed out as a fact that he appeared at our oldest university by invitation of its authorities presumably to inspire its youth in the love and nobility of Christian living, and got paid for it.

I have a letter from the dean of Harvard College asking me to make public a correction, and I am very glad to do that. I will read a few lines from this letter:

Eisler did not appear at the invitation of the Harvard authorities. He spoke at the invitation of a student organization which has 10 members. The meeting was in no way sponsored by Harvard. Eisler was not paid for speaking by the University or by anyone at Harvard. He received $25 from the student organization to cover part of his expenses.

I am very glad to make that correction.

TWIN-ROTORED HELICOPTER

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to invite the Members and their staffs to the exhibition that will be put on tomorrow morning by the Kaman Aircraft Corp., of Windsor Locks, Conn., at a special congressional inspection and flight demonstration of its recently CAA-approved twin-rotored helicopter. The demonstration will take place tomorrow morning, May 24, from 10 a. m. to 12 m., on the Mall, the weather permitting. In case of inclement weather this demonstration by one of Connecticut's new enterprises will take place on the following day, Wednesday, May 25.

Each of you is cordially invited with your friends to attend.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners of his home county on compulsory life insurance.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement appearing in the National Grange Monthly, concerning Mr. Brannan's agricultural program.

Mr. MACY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some addenda to some historical data he inserted in the RECORD a few weeks ago.

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. SADLAK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Peace Business." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $175, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at the close of debate today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a memorial.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include newspaper articles.

AUTHORIZING COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO CONDUCT CERTAIN STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 206 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of all matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places as the committee may determine, whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman. The chairman of the committee or any member designated by him may administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution authorizing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to conduct investigations both during and outside of the sessions of Congress. It is the same resolution that has been granted to every other committee. I know of no objection to the resolution.

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York has explained, this resolution is to give to the standing Committee of the House on Foreign Affairs the authority to conduct investigations either in full committee or by subcommittee and to issue subpenas to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers and records in connection therewith.

I have but one question in my mind as to this resolution, and, if I may at this moment, I should like to query the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the intentions of his committee.

In lines 6 to 8 of the resolution the committee "is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places as the committee may determine." I believe the interpretation of that wording would permit the committee or any subcommittee thereof to sit and hold hearings anywhere in the world. Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. KEE. The wording would probably indicate that that could be done. I might envision an occasion arising where on one of the trips a subcommittee might take they would be engaged in hearings, but for the life of me I cannot anticipate that that would happen.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The explanation of the distinguished chairman is all that I desire. As I understand, it is not the intention or the purpose of the chairman of this committee, at least in connection with this resolution, to have the committee subcommittees travel all over the world and conduct hearings?

Mr. KEE. We certainly would not give them the right to hold hearings if they did travel all over the world.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Of course, if such trips were contemplated it would be necessary to get the funds to pay the costs thereof from the House Committee on Administration?

Mr. KEE. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. In fairness to the gentleman's committee, I think it should be pointed out, as it has been called to my attention here today, that during the last Congress, while a considerable number of subcommittees of the Foreign Affairs Committee were named and visits were made to foreign countries, out of $125,000 made available to the committee for the conduct of various studies and investigations and their travels, more than $80,000 was returned to the Treasury at the end of the session, unused, by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KEE. That is true. Over $80,000 was returned to the House and covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. In the light of the statements and explanations given by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the adoption of this resolution, which would give to the gentleman's committee virtually the same powers now held by practically every other standing committee of the House.

Mr. KEE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS ACT OF 1949

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 222 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3662) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States, and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and now yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3662) providing for a comprehensive plan for the construction of certain Federal buildings in the United States. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, with the condition of the Treasury what it is at the present time, and with the need for the expansion of private enterprise what it is, I would not favor such legislation as this if it was intended to provide for a construction program at this time. The bill does not contemplate that. On the contrary it is, in my humble judgment, a very wise piece of legislation which would set up a shelf of public works to be utilized and activated at such time as unemployment in this country might be acute, when such a program as this could be utilized to put men to work and at the same time have worth-while construction.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned for referring to it, the Committee on Postwar Economic Policy, of which I had the honor to serve as chairman, made a study some 3 or 4 years ago; and among other things, envisioning that some day we might have unemployment in this country, recommended that an adequate plan for worth-while construction should be worked out. This does not authorize the construction of these post offices and other Federal buildings, but rather, provides for an appropriate plan for such work. Therefore, I, as one who is very much concerned about the Treasury, and the economy of this country, cannot see that there is anything wrong with this legislation. I think it is a very appropriate piece of legislation.

However, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that this legislation will be hailed by some members of the press, and possibly others, as a political pork barrel; that it is purely a political maneuver to reelect Members of Congress next year. Frankly, I can think of nothing that could possibly contribute more to the defeat of Members of Congress than for them to have anything to do with the selection of a site or town within their districts for the construction of a post office where there are several towns which are eligible. It would certainly take a modern political Solomon to gain anything, politically, out of such a situation. Personally, I hope, if there is a section in the bill which could be construed as giving a Member of Congress the right to make such a selection, that it will be deleted from the bill before it is finally enacted into law.

But, again, Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility here to perform, and I repeat that this legislation is aimed at a most worth-while objective. We cannot afford to have the Federal Government agencies reviving the old leaf-raking days of the WPA if and when it becomes necessary for the Federal Government to go into the employment field to relieve unemployment. Again, I do not think this is any time for the Federal Government to go into a public-construction program. With the present great need for more housing and literally hundreds of thousands of people awaiting the time when materials and labor are more plentiful and reasonable in order to build homes for themselves, the Federal Government should not put itself in the attitude of going into competition with them for this scarce labor and material. A wise Congress should make plans for the future. That is what we are doing here.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, as the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], member of the Rules Committee, has explained in calling up House Resolution 222, it makes in order the consideration of H. R. 3662, a bill from the Committee on Public Works, under an open rule, with general debate to continue for not more than 2 hours.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a construction bill. I think we should all understand that in the very beginning. It is simply a bill to make plans and to be ready for possible construction of needed public works, and of buildings—many of them post office buildings, but not all by any means—later on, if and when economic conditions develop where it will be wise to engage in such construction. In other words, this bill simply provides that plans may be made and certain sites may be acquired in contemplation of future construction. However, no money is authorized or appropriated for construction in this bill, and no construction can take place until and unless at some future time the Congress authorizes it and appropriates the funds therefor.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. REES. As I understand the gentleman, this bill does not authorize the construction of any buildings. For what purpose is the $40,000,000 item in the bill to be expended?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is practically all for planning and for the acquisition of sites.

Mr. REES. Who is going to do the planning?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That will be conducted, of course, by the Federal Works Administrator, who has direct authority, but he has the advice of a committee or a commission, as I understand it.

Mr. REES. Then it does authorize the expenditure of at least $40,000,000?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It does authorize expenditure for planning, which I think is in line with good business and with good government. I favor this bill for sound reasons. There is now every indication that we are going into some sort of an economic disturbance. Whether it is going to be a recession of short duration or whether it will develop into a real depression, I do not know. I hope, as do all others, that it will be very short, and that it will not be serious in its effect. Yet we know there is growing unemployment. We know that in the past when we have had a depression, in order to give employment we have made work, and we have wasted a great deal of public money in making work for individuals—work that was of no real or permanent value to the taxpayers of the United States. It seems to me just good business judgment to have these plans ready so, if there is a great decline in employment and in costs, the Government may give employment to the needy rather than doles; give them employment, not at leaf-raking but on good, sound, solid construction, which will be of benefit to all the people of the United States, and which will permit permanent improvements as a sound capital investment at a time when we can get the greatest value for the dollar. Actual construction would be delayed until the time when the costs of material and supplies will be lower than they are now.

So I think this committee has acted wisely in offering this legislation to prepare, and, to have all ready, up on the shelf, well-developed plans to meet any emergency, when it is necessary for us to do something to relieve human suffering, to give people employment who must have help rather than to put them on direct relief or give them a dole for sitting around and doing nothing. I think it is wise and well that this great committee has done that.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. REES. Do I understand that under this proposed legislation the Federal Works Administrator is authorized to spend approximately $40,000,000 to go out and acquire sites, using his own judgment as to where those sites should be acquired and to set up plans with respect to these buildings, or whatever is to be erected on this site?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No; that is not exactly correct. In the first place, his main responsibility is to make such investigations and studies, prepare sketches, working drawings and plans, and to also acquire certain sites. This is primarily to make these over-all plans for the future.

Mr. REES. It will not take $40,000,000 to make plans.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sure that neither the gentleman nor I are architects and engineers. I do not know exactly what the plans alone would cost. But it will take about $40,000,000 to do the two things provided for in this resolution. Primarily, making plans is the first job. He is to make a study of the whole situation, but the building commission, and the Commissioner of Public Buildings, will advise him and bring in the list of worth-while projects. There are all sorts of requests from all sorts of localities pending in the departments for the construction of post offices subpost offices and parcel post stations, as well as other Federal buildings; projects which have been waiting action since before the war, because it was impossible to carry on any worthwhile public construction program during the war except for military installations and war plants.

Mr. KEEFE. But he can do nothing on these things until plans are prepared.

Mr. REES. I understand that, but once there is an authorization appropriations will follow; is not that true?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No; that is not correct.

Mr. REES. It certainly is the usual procedure.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We do not authorize the appropriations in this bill, but simply authorize the expenditure of a reasonable amount of money to be used in getting ready for a much larger program. I, therefore, cannot understand the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. REES. I am merely trying to get some information on this important legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand the gentleman does not want to go into any sort of relief program that savors of the dole or leaf raking. I am sure the gentleman will agree that it is advisable to have some over-all plan ready under which the money can be efficiently used in worth-while public projects which will be of permanent value and prove to be a real investment for the taxpayers of the Nation. I believe the gentleman is old enough to remember the leaf raking of the early depression days of 1931, 1934, and 1935, and we want no more of that.

Mr. REES. I agree with the gentleman; that plan was not very good.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As far as I am concerned, I do not want it.

Mr. REES. No. We should do better in event of another depression.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We should prepare a program of construction of needed public works ready for the days of depression so we can give employment to those needeeding it, and it is not too early to prepare such a program.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. I might say to the distinguished gentleman that this is in reality a partial carrying out of the basic act of 1926 whereby a formula was established that whenever a certain amount of revenue was derived from a post office, that area was entitled to a Federal building. As the gentleman from Ohio so ably stated, this resolution is simply carrying out the intent of that act. We find as a matter of fact that the rental being paid by the Post Office Department for buildings will in quite a number of instances amortize Federal buildings in those areas in a period of 8 to 10 years; so, in reality not only does this furnish employment in slack times, but it is good business judgment.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And, of course, this would bring back to life, or continue, the program that had to be suspended because of the war emergency. Is not that correct?

Mr. McGREGOR. That is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman from Ohio has made a very able statement. I think it is wise at this juncture to point out that nothing is carried in this bill for construction within the District of Columbia. Furthermore, it covers only about 10 percent of the eligible projects, post offices, and Federal buildings in this country that are now so badly needed; in other words, while some 4,000 are needed, this bill provides for only about 10 percent.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And I believe the gentleman will agree with me that money spent now on thorough constructive planning of worth-while public works, for use in case of an emergency, will save many, many millions of dollars in the future.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SECREST. The ideal sites for many of these post-office buildings are in the central business section of these towns and cities. Many of the sites located in the central part of these cities are being bought up, and costly construction is being placed upon them by private enterprise. If the Department of Public Works is given the right now to acquire these sites, in my opinion, they will cost half as much as they would when we might get into a depression and the properties in the meantime have been greatly improved. This is an economy bill, in my opinion.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman is correct. I would like to call attention to another point in this connection. In many instances the local communities will help acquire these sites. If they know that plans are being made for the construction of a building in their community, when the need for it comes, they will move now, in conjunction with the proper department of the Government, to assist in acquiring the site which will be held for future use.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman from Ohio has made an excellent statement and I want to congratulate him for the timeliness of it. We all profit from experience. We know that in the old PWA and WPA days millions upon millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money were wasted in boondoggling and pump-priming projects which had little or no permanent value. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST] that the advanced planning and the use of this money now in order to be ready should an emergency arise is really in the interest of economy.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. May I add that when complaint was made regarding many of these boondoggling projects back in the thirties the answer was always given that such projects were made necessary because the Federal Government had no plans ready for the construction of worth-while public works. Is that not correct?

Mr. SHORT. That is correct. This is not, it should be borne in mind, a relief bill. It is not dishing out money for nothing, but is really to get our money's worth.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman is quite correct. It will benefit in two ways. First, it will give to the Government the buildings it needs for efficient conduct of public affairs and, second, it will be a standby construction program to give employment if needed in the future.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. I observe that the gentleman from Ohio is enthusiastic about the authorization of the expenditure of this $40,000,000. I believe he agrees with me, however, that if we do authorize the expenditure of this money—and evidently the authorization of the expenditure will be approved—that means we are going to appropriate it and spend it. In other words, if we authorize it, following will be an appropriation bill; is that not correct?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Certainly. I imagine that probably all of the $40,000,000 will eventually be spent for these purposes, but, may I say it will be spent in preparing plans and acquiring sites for what eventually may result in hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditures on public works, in line with governmental policy. I may, at the same time, save hundreds of millions of dollars, which would otherwise be wasted if we are caught flat-footed without any plans should we have a serious depression. And may I assure the gentleman from Kansas that I have enough Scotch in me to always be willing to invest 5 or 10 cents if I can get $10 back later on. I think that is a pretty wise philosophy and good business policy.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman will permit me to say, I am sure, that he very correctly states that the bill under consideration simply renews and extends a program that was in force during the thirties and that the Public Buildings Administration has not got the power or authority to just select a site without regard to any considerations. This provides that the Public Buildings Administration, successor to the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, together with the Post Office Department may select one site. We make an authorization for the acquiring of one site in practically every congressional district, and for the plans, and if it does not cost $40,000,000, the Public Buildings Administration will not get that much for the work.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3662) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States, and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3662, with Mr. MANSFIELD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration authorizes the making of plans for public buildings in substantially all the congressional districts of the United States and the acquiring of a site in substantially all of the districts of the United States for a Federal building, including post offices. It does not provide for construction. Actual construction would be delayed until a more propitious time when labor and materials are available, and when there is need for employment.

The Members will recall that the basic act for public construction is the act of 1926, and under the terms of that act various authorizations were made for the construction of public buildings from 1926 to 1937 and 1938. Under the terms of the act of 1926 the Public Buildings Administration under the supervision of the Federal Works Agency and the Post Office Department submits annually a list of projects that are eligible for construction. The last one of the lists submitted that was published was in 1939, House Document 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session. The last authorizations for the construction of Federal buildings were the construction acts of August 25, 1937 and June 21, 1938.

The construction planning and the acquiring of sites proceeded, and November 23, 1940, there remained 199 buildings to be constructed. The President impounded the funds, and there has been no construction of public buildings since 1940, although sites had been acquired and plans have been made in a great many cases, before the impounding of funds in November 1940.

Under the act of 1913, all post offices where the annual receipts are in excess of $10,000 are eligible to be considered, but no post office where the receipts are less than $6,000 annually may be considered for the acquiring of a site.

As I say, this bill contemplates the making of plans for at least one structure in each district except in major metropolitan areas. The sites are to be acquired really by a continuation of the method used in the selection of the sites and the buildings that obtained during the 1930's. It was then done by the Treasury Department, and where there were post offices by the Post Office Department also. The Member of Congress of the district was always consulted. Therefore, when any site is acquired that procedure will be continued. That site will be selected from a list that has been submitted, and it is provided by section 101 of the pending bill that that list will be published as a document. When the committee considered this bill, we asked that that document be submitted to us, when we conducted hearings. Those hearings were available to all Members of the House and the Senate. They cover all phases of the subject. In order that Members might be fully advised, the chairman on April 7 wrote a letter to each Member of the House and transmitted to him a copy of the hearings.

I call the attention of the Members to the fact that there are printed in those hearings five lists. They appear at the end of the hearings. List No. 1 covers all the places in all of the States and Territories where the receipts are such that the buildings are eligible for planning a site.

List No. 2 covers sites acquired under previous public building programs. The last time we made an appropriation for this purpose was in 1937 and 1938. We found that it takes 12 to 24 months to prepare a plan and acquire the site. The best argument I can cite in support of that statement is that when the funds were impounded that were appropriated in 1937 and 1938 there remained 199 projects deferred, including 164 where sites had been acquired.

List No. 3 is projects for which working drawings and specifications are completed.

List No. 4 covers projects authorized under the 1937–38 Public Buildings Acts where sites had not been acquired when the construction program was stopped as of November 23, 1940.

List No. 5 is a consolidation of Nos. 2, 3, and 4, giving the combined, consolidated lists.

As I have stated, the committee was unwilling to authorize a construction bill, and I may add in that connection that Congress since the war has declined to authorize construction of post offices or other buildings.

H. R. 4276 was introduced by Mr. Lanham, which provided for public buildings. The bill was not reported, however. That was in 1945. H. R. 6917 was introduced by our former colleague, Mr. Lanham, in 1946. But the program was never considered. There were no unemployed and materials were not available, and there was no occasion for public construction. Then in 1946 there was introduced the bill S. 2412, in the other body. It was passed by the other body in 1946, but was never considered by the House. We did make partial provision for public construction in Public Law 413 of the Seventy-ninth Congress approved June 14, 1946, which provided for the construction of certain hospitals and other facilities.

The purpose of the pending bill is if there should be unemployment, and if there should be the need for providing employment, to have on the shelf plans, and to have sites which would be acquired as I stated, under a continuance of the law between 1926 and 1938, which has heretofore obtained. If the Members are interested in the laws under which we operated from 1926 to 1940, they will find a compilation of the laws in the hearings at page 160. I would like to say in passing that while the language of the bill authorizes public buildings in each congressional district, or provides for the benefits of them in each congressional district, the substance of it is that there should be provided one building in practically every congressional district in the Nation, except metropolitan areas. The language of the pending bill is the best language that our committee could find to describe and bring forward the procedure that has obtained in the construction of public buildings from 1926 to 1940, when the funds were impounded. The Members will recall that prior to 1926 post-office buildings were constructed sporadically by an authorization here and an authorization there or the consolidation of authorizations, but since 1926, individual bills for public construction have not been considered.

Generally, Members will keep in mind that the bill under consideration, H. R. 3662, represents the substance of the bill S. 714, which was introduced in the other body and passed unanimously there, and which is now pending in this body. At the time that bill was introduced in the other body, the Chairman of the House Committee on Public Works introduced the bill H. R. 3019. Hearings were conducted on the bill, and as disclosed by the hearings, and by the report of the committee, which is available to Members of the House, at the conclusion of the hearings the bill was rewritten, and a clean bill, H. R. 3662, was introduced as reported. With your permission I will undertake to give you a brief outline of principal provision of the pending bill.

Section 101, title I provides that the Public Buildings Administration, where post offices are involved, with the assistance of the Post Office Department, shall select sites for public buildings, and I repeat, as under the practice previously, Members of Congress from the districts involved will be consulted. The hearings disclose that that practice will be continued. It provides for making plans, and the testimony shows that it takes from 12 to 24 months, and sometimes 3 years, before sites are acquired.

Again, it contemplates that when those sites have been acquired, and the plans have been made, a report will be submitted, and then an appropriation may be requested in 1, 2, or 3 years and it will then be up to the Congress whether the appropriation is made.

In title I, in section 101 and section 102, we undertook to clarify the language that obtained in five or six appropriations authorizing construction during the thirties, and we have provided in the pending bill that in making the selections for the sites they shall distribute the projects equitably throughout the country, with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country. And, to make assurance doubly sure, as the Members will recall that one post office building in a great metropolitan area like New York or Chicago will cost probably more than 100 post offices in rural districts, the bill includes section 102; and to undertake to bring forward the procedure that obtained in previous programs into this program by the insertion of section 102, the committee declares it is the intent that there shall be in every congressional district either a building or the benefits of a building. Moreover, in order to do justice to those districts and those cities in which building sites were acquired and the funds impounded, it is provided in the latter part of section 102 that that site provided for in this bill shall be in addition to the one that was previously acquired, and on which no building was constructed because it is necessary for that building that was deferred to be constructed to put that district on a par with all of the other districts of the United States.

Now, turn to title III in connection with title I. I have referred to all of title I, except that it authorizes the sum of $40,000,000 for the acquiring of sites and for the making of plans, and my judgment is that this period of 2 years for acquisition of sites and for preparation of plans protects the interest of the Government. It will not be necessary to force the making of plans immediately at high prices, or the acquiring of sites.

By giving them a period of 2 or 3 years to make the plans and acquire the sites, there will be a shelf of projects for at least one building or the benefits thereof in every district. That will have to be followed, according to the terms of the bill, by submission to the Eighty-second Congress of a list of all eligible projects, and the Congress will determine when and whether it will make appropriations, when the Public Buildings Administrator has furnished them with a list of the sites acquired under this act, and a list of the plans, and Congress will also decide about construction and other plans and sites for additional projects.

Every Member of the House is interested in this bill. There has not been any renovation of public buildings in the last 10 years. There is a provision in the annual Public Buildings Administration appropriation for repairs to buildings, that do not exceed $25,000 annually. Now, in title III we provide for an authorization of $30,000,000 to be expended approximately $10,000,000 annually in renovation or improvement where the cost is in excess of $25,000, in existing post-office buildings. If there be a Member of this House who owns a smaller office building, without any sort of repair in 10 years, when modern structures are being constructed, I believe he will agree it is in the interest of economy and in the interest of good government that there should be an appropriation for streamlining and bringing those buildings up to date, and for the acquiring of necessary parking facilities, or lands.

Now, as to title II, let me say a word. That title of this bill provides that in the city of Washington, down in the foggy bottom area near the Lincoln Memorial, the Public Works Agency has already been authorized, and the funds have been appropriated for acquiring a number of blocks, and without any additional authorization and upon the recommendation of the Public Buildings Administration, we include four more blocks that would be available to them for selection in the event they decide to acquire in the future.

Then there are a number of places where buildings have been declared surplus and they have been turned over temporarily to the Public Buildings Administration for offices. I recall that is true in Pittsburgh, among other cities, and in Dallas, Tex. This bill authorizes that where that has been done in section 204 of title II, those buildings to be retained by the Public Buildings Administration without reimbursement by the Public Buildings Administration, because that would have required an appropriation by the Congress, as the items are named definitely instead of being covered by a general authorization or approval. But your committee in the care that it gave to this bill was not satisfied with a blanket approval. We asked them to spell out these projects, and in spelling them out it took 10 or 15 pages of this bill to describe the metes and bounds of the property concerned. Under section 205 there are other types of buildings that the Public Works Administration said had been temporarily transferred by the War Assets Administrator, and they wanted the authority in the event they determined that they were fitted for public offices in various parts of the country, to have them transferred without reimbursement. We felt that the Congress ought to take a look at those projects and this bill provides this machinery by clarification in title II in section 205.

Title IV provides for a number of clarifications in the interest of good administration and it concludes with the provision that instead of there being submitted annually a list of buildings in every State in the Union that are eligible for construction, that the list shall be submitted to each Congress or biennially. So it does strike me that in the bill that we have under consideration we have a constructive program. We have constructed buildings in the District of Columbia, we have spent money by the billions in the war centers, but there has been no improvement of existing public buildings in all of the States of the Union; and if by chance we have inflation, deflation, disinflation, or any other trouble leading to unemployment we know that one of the best ways to provide employment is through public-works construction. The primary purpose of this bill is to place on the shelf, approved by Congress from a list that has been furnished by the Public Buildings Administration, certain projects to be undertaken. We have included the lists in the hearings; and if and when Congress makes an appropriation for construction Congress will take a look at the approved plans and sites and determine whether or not they shall be carried out, and will then probably approve additional plans, sites, or construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes, and now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. The construction of these buildings is not contemplated now, is it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is not; there is no provision in this bill for construction.

Mr. RICH. There are 199 sites, I presume in 199 districts; is it necessary to get duplicates in each one of those districts where sites have already been selected?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I tried my best to explain it just as simply as I could, and I made the statement that title I provides that if in the gentleman's district in Pennsylvania there have been six buildings—suppose that is the average in all the congressional districts, but that in the gentleman's district the sixth building was to be constructed but the funds were impounded, the committee felt it was only fair that that district should not be deprived of that building just because the funds were impounded due to the necessities of war.

To answer the gentleman's question, I repeat that the building that was not constructed on a site that had been obtained and previously authorized but deferred, may be continued for construction.

Mr. RICH. The only thing about my district is that I do not want them to build too many up there.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Pardon me; I will just withdraw the statement about the gentleman's district. I was using it merely as an example; I hope the gentleman understands.

Mr. RICH. They have already purchased a site. At the time they purchased it there was a building on it. They tore the building down and now the site does not yield the return it would have if they had left the building standing on it. If under this program they buy a site that already has a building on it, they should not tear the building down but should rent it to somebody until they want to actually use the site for immediate construction. That is a matter of good economy, I think.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have the highest regard for my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We relied upon Mr. Reynolds, Commissioner of the Public Buildings Administration. He recommended the planning and acquisition of sites. He is one of the most capable men in any branch of the Government service. We agreed with him that where buildings had been authorized and the funds impounded, the construction should be completed so as to put that district on a par with other districts.

Mr. RICH. In my district they tore a building down, and I do not want that to happen again. Another thing, where you have locations that comply with the Department's specifications and they already have a good post office, there is no use erecting a new one. Where they are renting a building and getting an advantage, and when it costs the Government about one-fifth of what it would to build a post office, consideration should be given to that fact also.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman continues to represent that district, I suggest he keep in touch with the Post Office Department. They are not going to put a building up there over the gentleman's protest.

Mr. RICH. They wanted to do it and I have had a terrible time keeping them from so doing.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Good luck to the gentleman in the future. If he does not want a building, someone else does, in some other State.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I wanted to ask this one question. What does the gentleman mean by impounding?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will answer the gentleman's question. The President of the United States had authority under the War Powers Act to prevent continued construction. The President exercised that authority on November 23, 1940, and impounded every dollar we appropriated for public buildings that had not been expended and in the case of one building that was actually under construction. Those funds stayed impounded until about 1946 when some agency said that they needed the money for constructing hospitals and other facilities. Those funds have been devoted to the construction of hospitals and other similar facilities.

Mr. JENKINS. Let us consider for a moment a location which the Government has purchased and had drawn plans for a post office, then abandoned those plans. Is it safe for one to assume that those funds were impounded?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, as a general proposition, but the lists to which I have referred in the hearings give the facts. We provide that they are eligible for construction, and then another building, too.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. I call the attention of the Member from Ohio to the fact that a list of all projects in deferred status is found on page 331, which agrees with the statement of our distinguished chairman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. On pages 271 to 332 of the hearings the lists appear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SADLAK. The chairman of the committee has made a very fine statement.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Thank you. Your question, please.

Mr. SADLAK. The gentleman states that they are going to make plans for post offices now which will be endorsed by the Eighty-second Congress. Am I correct in assuming that it will be at least 2 years before we have any of these post offices?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is correct.

Mr. SADLAK. The gentleman outlines that there will be available $30,000,000 for renovation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is right.

Mr. SADLAK. How soon can we get some of this money? I ask that question for the reason that in the State of Connecticut alone we have a large number of unemployed people. I would like to have some suggestion as to what we can do immediately.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This bill has already passed the Senate. If the House passes the bill, with amendments, it will go back to the Senate. As soon as the bill has been finally passed and signed by the President the improvements will be eligible for appropriations.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. What provision has been made for those congressional districts where enormous increases of population have taken place, such as in my own which has gone from 356,000 in 1940 to variously estimated between 700,000 and a million today?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Those districts have got to be considered under the terms of this bill in accordance with need. The gentleman will recall that we had his statement before us. This authorization provides generally for needs and for expanding needs particularly in States like California and Michigan as it was emphasized there is a desperate need for additional facilities. This Congress is already on record as having made provision for at least one enlargement of a building in Los Angeles.

Mr. HINSHAW. There is a desperate need out there.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I agree.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAVENNER. May I refer to page 23 where there is an authorization for the War Assets Administrator to transfer to the Public Buildings Administration certain described land on Angel Island in San Francisco Bay. Can the gentleman tell us what the plans of the Building Administration are for the utilization of this land?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I say that it is pretty difficult to keep in mind these dozens of projects. I mailed to the gentleman and to every other Member a description of the property and the purpose for which it is to be used. My general recollection is that the island in San Francisco Bay is going to be used for quarantine purposes. This property has already been obtained and paid for and buildings have been constructed. The Government will be exercising economy by using this property rather than buying additional facilities.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman referred a moment ago to the situation existing in California and Michigan. What I would like to ask is this: I have in my district the city of Midland, the home city of the great Dow Chemical Co. The situation is this—in the post office there it is utterly impossible to conduct the business of the post office with the facilities they now have.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We so understand.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman tell me, please, when will there be an opportunity to secure that much-needed relief for that post office?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. When this bill is passed, and when the investigation has been made and the site has been acquired. It will take 1 or 2 years to do that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, they have the site. There is a post-office building there that was erected about 20 years ago, and the growth of the city, by reason of the development of that company, has made additional facilities necessary.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand the gentleman's question, and that that situation obtains. If the gentleman will turn to the lists he will find probably at that particular location, and in dozens of others in the country, where buildings have been constructed, that they are outdated and out-moded, and they are eligible for construction.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I looked through the report of the committee carefully and I found no mention of Midland, and that is why I am interrogating the gentleman at this time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Well, I mailed the list on April 7.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not find the town of Midland listed, and it is one of the critical situations.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Under the terms of this bill they can go outside and select other projects not included in the report which are economically sound and advantageous to the public service, even though not in the list. This includes Midland.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Provided there are a number of post offices needed in congested areas, and there is similar or like need between several eligible post offices in the same district who determines which city gets the post office?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is a fair question, and I have answered it already. It is determined by the Federal Works Agency and by the Post Office Department, based on the relative needs as far as they are able to ascertain them. In reaching a conclusion in the programs of the 1930's, as the gentleman knows, they usually conferred with the Members of Congress, and they say that procedure will obtain. They considered area, receipts, and populations.

Mr. MICHENER. That is the very point. Will it obtain? He had to belong to the party in power before the Congressman was consulted. Otherwise, a political committee determined where the post office was to go. If they happened to have a Congressman whose politics was different than the administration, the Congressman was not given consideration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will say this, and I can only repeat what I said, that the Public Building Administration and the Post Office Department say that there is to be no partisanship. It is based on need, and in order to protect the minority, I repeat again, we spell out in this bill that it is the intent that there shall be the equivalent of one post office in every congressional district in the United States. We adopted the language suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], in our committee, and we adopted every other word that would clarify it.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. I assume that probably some reference was made to the project that certain public-spirited citizens of Knoxville called to the attention of the gentleman's committee some time ago.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will say to the gentleman that we had a very long petition that was considered, and it is eligible under the terms of this bill, as I recall.

Mr. JENNINGS. I commend the able chairman of this great committee on the fine job that has been done.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. In the determination of the location of these buildings, will the committee take into consideration the local population?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Unquestionably. That is one of the things that has been emphasized here.

Mr. HOLMES. Will they likewise follow the population changes throughout the various parts of the United States in relation to the problem?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I should certainly think so. I think you have a very capable man to do that, in Mr. Reynolds, if I may answer the gentleman's question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems to me the gentleman has covered a good deal of territory. As I understand, it is up to the individual Member to fight the hardest he or she possibly can.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If I have covered a lot of territory, it is because there is a lot of territory in the 435 congressional districts, and I undertook to cover every one of them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There are a number of eligible projects in my own district. I am very grateful.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. If I understood the gentleman correctly, the Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire a site for a post office if it has gross annual receipts amounting to $10,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct. I have said that repeatedly. Under the law the annual receipts have to be $10,000 before it is eligible for construction, or they have to be $6,000 before they can acquire a site. But the 1913 law was amended in 1926, and the 1926 law is now the basic act. It provides that if there are other facilities in addition to postal facilities, like the agricultural operations, they may be included. My understanding is that there is just one congressional district in the United States, outside the metropolitan areas, where the receipts do not aggregate $10,000, and that is in the State of Kentucky. In that district there are agricultural facilities that are needed that will make it eligible for planning as a site as I am advised.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, the bill authorizes an orderly program for site acquisition and advanced planning of public buildings that are considered necessary and desirable. This is not a construction bill. Construction will await economic conditions and will be delayed for more propitious times.

The report of the committee contains an outline, statement, and analysis of the bill, title by title, section by section, that I cannot hope to improve upon, and I therefore give the same general statement and analysis of the bill as follows:

OUTLINE OF H. R. 3662

Title I of the bill authorizes the appropriation of $40,000,000 to provide for the acquisition of sites and the preparation of plans for public buildings outside the District of Columbia to be selected by the Federal Works Administrator with the concurrence of the Postmaster General where his Department is involved, and to be apportioned at the rate of one or more selected Federal building projects for each congressional district. This will enable the Public Buildings Administration to be prepared to start construction of such buildings when conditions are such that construction may be undertaken without adversely affecting the public welfare and the Nation's economy.

Title II provides for the acquisition of certain additional ideally situated and relatively unimproved lands within the District of Columbia for use in future Federal building expansion. Also included are separate sections directing the transfer between Government departments of jurisdiction over certain lands outside the District of Columbia for the purpose of better management.

Title III authorizes the appropriation of $30,000,000 to be administered by the Commissioner of Public Buildings in furthering a program of acutely needed modernization of Federal buildings outside the District of Columbia and under control of the Public Buildings Administration. This would apply to major repairs and renovations and would not be used for ordinary maintenance jobs costing less than $25,000 for which annual maintenance funds are now available.

Title IV contains miscellaneous provisions which will improve the efficiency of administration of the functions assigned to the Public Buildings Administration.

GENERAL STATEMENT

Under existing law the Public Buildings Administration has basic authority to undertake the construction of Federal buildings, subject to certain requirements specified in the law, when appropriations are specifically provided for that purpose by Congress. The existing law does not, however, permit the Public Buildings Administration to make advance preparations for Federal building construction such as is common practice among other agencies engaged in public works construction. The provisions contained in title I of H. R. 3662 will fill this gap and pave the way for removing the elements of delay which would hinder prosecution of a building program when conditions warrant the initiation of construction.

From the testimony at the hearings it developed that additional Federal buildings are urgently needed in every section of the country. At present there are about 4,000 such proposed and needed building projects on the eligible list. The committee is not equipped to pass on the merits of eligible Federal buildings and make priority selections. Such selections are properly the functions of the executive agencies charged with the housing needs of the Federal Government.

The Commissioner of Public Buildings testified that the terms of H. R. 3662 will provide for about 450 projects or additions thereto which can be made ready for starting construction. This is approximately one-tenth of the proposed buildings on the eligible list. A considerable number already have available sites or portions thereof. The precontract steps provided for in the bill require from 12 to 24 months, depending upon the size of the project. Enactment of this bill would permit the orderly planning of a public-building program and make it possible to proceed promptly with urgent construction as soon as economic conditions warrant it and Congress deems it advisable.

Existing legislation relating to Federal buildings is also somewhat inadequate with respect to the repair and renovation of old buildings which are basically sound for continued future use if measures for renovation and modernization are undertaken.

Funds included in the annual appropriations are limited to jobs costing less than $25,000 and are sufficient only for the more urgent work of maintenance and ordinary repairs. They are not adequate to include any major modifications and renovations which are needed to provide proper facilities for efficient conduct of Government business. The $30,000,000 authorization contained in title III of this bill will provide a 3-year program for major renovation and modernization work of an urgent character, including such work as changes and improvements in lighting, plumbing, heating, and air-conditioning equipment, structural changes to meet modern fire-prevention standards and fire codes, and modernization of elevator equipment.

The committee now has before it a large number of individual bills calling for the construction of Federal buildings in various localities. Many of these projects will be covered by the terms of H. R. 3662.

This bill continues the highly satisfactory public-buildings policy in force since 1926 when the present basic legislation was enacted. Authority for selection of building projects is delegated to the proper executive agencies with suitable safeguards to retain full control over matters of policy and appropriation of funds in the hands of the Congress.

The Public Buildings Commissioner stated that it is the invariable practice of his agency and of the Post Office Department in cases affecting said Department, to confer with the representatives of the local units of Government and with the Members of Congress representing the area concerned in determining the selection of projects and sites threfor.

ANALYSIS OF THE BILL BY SECTIONS

Title I

Section 101 authorizes the Federal Works Administrator to acquire sites and prepare plans for Federal public buildings. Planning may be undertaken before the approval of title to the sites by the Attorney General when determined as necessary by the Federal Works Administrator. For buildings to be occupied for post-office purposes the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General act jointly in the choice of sites in the towns or cities selected from the eligible list.

This section also requires the submission to Congress of a report listing all eligible projects and their limits of cost when in excess of $200,000. When the estimate of cost of a project is less than $200,000, the limit of cost is to be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. Selection of projects is to be made by the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General from such report. (Section 409 requires that this report be submitted promptly after the convening of each Congress.) They may also select such other projects not included in the report which, in their judgment, are economically sound and advantageous to the public interest. Projects are to be distributed equitably throughout the country with due regard for the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

Section 102, added by the committee, provides that each congressional district would participate in the equitable distribution of selected projects for future construction to the extent of one or more approved projects for each district. This is in addition to previously authorized and selected public building projects under the Public Buildings Acts of 1937 and 1938 which have been deferred. A list of these deferred projects is included in the printed hearings.

Section 103 authorizes the appropriation of $40,000,000 to implement section 101.

Title II

Section 201 authorizes the Federal Works Administrator to acquire squares 11, 19, 20, and 32 in the District of Columbia as a part of the site for a new building or buildings. For years these squares along thereto have been under consideration for this purpose. Acquisition of other squares in this area has been previously authorized. At present the area is relatively unimproved. The area should be acquired by the Government before it is further developed.

Section 202 permits the exchange without reimbursement of certain lands between the Department of the Navy and the Federal Works Agency. As a part of the national-defense program, the Federal Works Administrator issued a permit to the Department of the Navy covering the use of the existing quarantine station in the city of San Diego, Calif., as a fuel depot. During the period of hostilities most of the old quarantine-station buildings were dismantled and new permanent facilities installed by the Navy. As the Public Health Service requires a new station to carry on full quarantine activities in the area, a project has been developed for consideration under future building programs predicated upon acquisition by exchange of a new site. The Department of the Navy has agreed to the exchange of Navy property which is most adaptable and most economical for the new station and acceptable to the Public Buildings Administration and the Public Health Service.

Section 203 involves the exchange of lands between the Department of the Army and the Federal Works Administrator without reimbursement to provide a site for a new quarantine station in Honolulu. Following the Pearl Harbor disaster, the Army took over the Sand Island Quarantine Station at Honolulu and subsequently constructed extensive improvements thereon. The Department of the Army now contemplates continued use of the island for military purposes and has offered to make available a portion of Fort Armstrong on the mainland in exchange for the Sand Island site. The new site has been found by the Public Buildings Administration and the Public Health Service to be the most logical location for a new quarantine station.

Section 204 of H. R. 3019, as originally introduced by the chairman, contained a blanket provision authorizing the Federal Works Administrator to make permanent disposition, by transfer to the Public Buildings Administration, of certain real properties, together with the improvements located thereon, acquired by him pursuant to titles II and IV of the Lanham Act. These properties are suitable for use by the Public Buildings Administration in performing its functions, but under existing law will ultimately be disposed of outside of the Government. The committee felt that the blanket provision was unwise and adopted an amendment specifically describing each property. They consist, in the main, of former USO buildings; venereal disease rapid-treatment centers, recreation facilities, and facilities located adjacent to the residence hall projects in or near the District of Columbia. The properties are located at the following places, each property being identified by the subsection designation to indicate where it appears in the bill:

(a) Cheyenne, Wyo.
(b) Little Rock, Ark.
(c) Medford, Oreg.
(d) Fayetteville, N. C.
(e) Durham, N. C.
(f) Paris, Tex.
(g) Hampton Roads, Norfolk, Va.
(h) Chatham County, near Savannah, Ga.
(i) Fort Smith, Ark.
(j) Residence halls at Suitland, Md.; West Potomac Park and Langston Stadium, District of Columbia; Arlington Farms, Va.

As in the case of section 204, section 205 (a) of H. R. 3019, as originally introduced, granted blanket authorization for the transfer of certain real property from other departments or agencies of the Government to the Federal Works Agency for the use of the Public Buildings Administration. The committee adopted an amendment which is spelled out in H. R. 3662, enumerating with clarity the properties to be transferred. The properties, each identified by subsection number, are as follows:

(1) A portion of the Fort Brown Military Reservation, Brownsville, Tex., now under the control of the Secretary of the Army, for use as a site for the Brownsville, Tex., border station.

(2) The entire building known as 1114 Commerce Street Building, Dallas, Tex., now under the control of the Secretary of the Army.

The following properties under the control of the War Assets Administration:

(3) Certain lands in Marfa, County of Presidio, Tex.

(4) A portion of Angel Island (Fort McDowell) known as the San Francisco Quarantine Station.

(5) A parcel of land in San Mateo County, Calif., lying along the line of Butler Road.

(6) A tract of land in East Point, Fulton County, Ga., at the intersection of St. Joseph Street and Lawrence Avenue.

(7) A parcel of land in San Antonio, Bexar County, Tex., at the intersection of South Flores Street and Arsenal Street. (The committee invites attention to the fact that this property consists of approximately 8 acres of land together with extensive improvements thereon. The property is a portion of the 21 acres of land now constituting the San Antonio Arsenal. Originally it was contemplated that the entire arsenal property, which has now been declared surplus by the War Assets Administration, would be transferred to the Public Buildings Administration for use in housing various activities of the Government. After careful consideration by the full committee is was decided to limit the transfer to the 8-acre parcel. The committee felt that 21 acres located in the heart of the business section of a city the size of San Antonio, for use by the Federal Government, was too great an imposition upon the city. In addition the tract of 8 acres contains the buildings now used most intensely by the Government and also constitutes the best site for future new public buildings.)

(8) Certain real property in San Francisco, Calif., at the intersection of Geary and Polk Streets.

(9) Approximately 35 acres of land in Cleveland, Ohio, on which is located the structure commonly known as the Quigley Building.

(10) A leasehold interest in a tract of land situated in the county of Wyandotte, State of Kansas, within section 2, township 11 south, range 25 east, of the sixth principal meridian, being a part of the land known as the public levee of Kansas City, Kans., together with the Government-owned building located thereon.

(11) All of the Government-owned portion of the United States naval small-craft facilities known as the Lockwood Basin, East Boston, Mass., for use as a United States quarantine station.

(12) A strip of land under the jurisdiction of the Farm Credit Administration and located immediately adjacent to the Denver Federal Center, Denver, Colo.

(13) All of block 276A, Seattle tidelands in Seattle, King County, Wash., now under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The following properties, title to which is now vested in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation:

(14) Four parcels of land situated in the county of Luna, State of New Mexico,

(15) A tract of land in Tarrant County, Tex., formerly owned by the Globe Aircraft Corp.,

(16) Another parcel of real property in Tarrant County, Tex., also formerly owned by the Globe Aircraft Corp.,

(17) A building known as the Victory Building located at the corner of Ninth Street and Liberty Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Section 205 (b) provides, with respect to certain properties now owned by Government corporations to be transferred pursuant to this section, that a conveyance of clear title to the United States shall be made and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to discharge the indebtedness of the corporation to the Treasury in an amount equal to the fair market value of the property at the time of transfer.

Section 206 authorizes the Federal Works Administrator to assume permanent custody and control for the use of the Public Buildings Administration, without reimbursement, of certain real property located in Vancouver Barracks, Wash., for the use of the Public Roads Administration. This property has now been declared surplus by the Department of the Army. For the past 20 years the premises have been used for an equipment depot and repair shop by the Public Roads Administration under permits granted by the Department of the Army. The permit now in effect expires in March 1951. Satisfactory permanent concrete and brick structures, including a completely furnished depot and shop, have been constructed on the land by the Public Roads Administration from funds appropriated by the Congress for that purpose. The continued utilization of these premises by the Public Roads Administration in connection with the administration of the Federal highway program is necessary.

Title III

Section 301 authorizes the repair and improvement of a number of Federal public buildings located outside the District of Columbia and under the control of the Public Buildings Administration. Many of these buildings have been occupied for long periods of time, in some cases exceeding 100 years. No major repairs have been made to Federal buildings since 1940, and in many cases the old outmoded buildings are in a bad state of repair, need new equipment, and modification and renovation to provide adequate facilities for efficient and satisfactory conduct of Government business. Funds included in the annual appropriations are sufficient for and are utilized to care for the more urgent work on maintenance and ordinary repairs which cannot be deferred without serious deterioration of buildings or interfering with Government activities. This section will permit major renovation and improvement of these older buildings, including such work as modification and amplification of lighting, plumbing, heating, and air-conditioning equipment; major paint jobs; structural changes to meet modern fire-prevention standards and fire codes; modernization of elevators and other needed work. This authorization will be used for projects costing more than $25,000, the present annual limit for maintenance jobs. It should be pointed out that title III contains no authorization for the construction of new public buildings.

Section 302 authorizes the appropriation of $30,000,000 to implement section 301, and will cover a period of about 3 years at a rate of $10,000,000 per year.

In accordance with the well-established past practices of the Public Buildings Administration all the work to be performed pursuant to the authorization contained in title III of the bill would be done by contracts let in strict compliance with the advertising provision of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. This includes newspaper advertising, posting, and conspicuous places such as bulletin boards of post offices and other public buildings. Further, the contracts would be written and administered in strict compliance with all applicable labor laws and regulations including the Bacon-Davis Act, Walsh-Healey Act, and the 8-hour law.

Title IV

Section 401 authorizes the Commissioner of Public Buildings to employ by contract or otherwise, temporary architectural and other professional and technical service by negotiation and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923 or the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations. Procurement of professional or technical service through solicitation of competitive bids is impractical. The restrictions and salary limitations imposed by the Classification Act of 1923 and the civil-service rules and regulations make it almost impossible to hire individuals to perform the necessary temporary services as Government employees. Frequently it is an advantage to have an architect or engineer who is entirely familiar with the local climate, labor, materials, and other conditions affecting the work. This section will prevent building up a large professional and technical organization in Washington when the work can be given to private individuals or firms in the locality where the work is to be performed. Administration, interpretation, and execution of contracts; acceptance of materials and workmanship; and certification of vouchers would be performed by authorized officers of the Public Buildings Administration. This section also authorizes the Commissioner in desirable cases to hold competitions for the design of any project and to make awards therefor. This procedure is frequently followed outside the Government.

Section 402 authorizes the use of revenues derived from the rental of sites or improvements thereon acquired for public buildings to pay the cost of such maintenance, repair, and alterations as are necessary to keep the improvements in rentable condition, and to establish a necessary reserve. At the present time such rentals are deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and the necessary maintenance, repairs, and alterations are made with appropriated funds which are usually insufficient for the purpose. As a result, the buildings are frequently in such poor condition that they bring very little return to the Government. It is considered good business practice to apply rentals received from leasing of property to keep the premises in tenantable condition.

This section would further authorize the Commissioner to enter into leases for dwelling units where the estimated annual rental does not exceed $1,200, by negotiated leases rather than on a competitive basis. The General Accounting Office has ruled that leasing of sites and buildings must be done through competitive bidding as required by section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. This procedure is feasible with respect to commercial property but is not satisfactory for dwellings, where care must be used in the selection of tenants to prevent damage by destructive occupants.

Section 403 amends section 5 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926, by deleting an undesirable provision of the law which has never been used. The language which is being deleted had the effect of augmenting the authorization for a specific building by the amount of the sale price of the building which it replaces.

Section 404 authorizes the Federal Works Administration, together with the Postmaster General where concerned, to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of real, personal, or other property. Under existing law there is no authority for the acceptance of gifts except of real property to be used as sites for public buildings and acceptance of other proffered gifts requires a special act of Congress.

Section 405 authorizes the Public Buildings Administration to furnish services in the continental United States at the request of the State Department to any international body with which the United States Government is affiliated. Such services would be furnished on the basis of full reimbursement. The enactment of this section will tend to promote greater harmony between this Government and the various international organizations having their headquarters in this country.

Section 406 authorizes the Commissioner of Public Buildings to contract for seeding, planting, or landscaping the grounds of public buildings constructed by the Public Buildings Administration where the amount of the contract does not exceed $1,800, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. Under existing law, competitive bids for performance of work of this type are solicited. This would simplify and expedite these small jobs, with the work being awarded to local nurserymen on a negotiated basis.

Section 407 authorizes the Commissioner of Public Buildings to lease space in the District of Columbia for terms of not to exceed 1 year for the housing of Federal agencies, except the Post Office Department, and to assign and reassign such space. This confirms authority now contained in annual appropriation acts and is considered desirable.

Section 408 would authorize the Federal Works Administrator to enter into such agreements with the city of Chicago as he shall deem necessary and in the public interest in the construction of the portion of the superhighway passing through the existing arcade in the Congress Street Post Office Building which was contemplated when the building was constructed and appropriate allowance therefor was made.

This highway will necessitate structural changes in the post-office building, and this section would give the Administrator the authority to commit the Government to such portion of the cost as he determines should be borne by the Government in the public interest.

Section 409 requires the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General to submit to Congress promptly after the convening of each new Congress reports showing the location and approximate accommodation of each proposed public building project throughout the United States, its Territories, and possessions as they shall find eligible to be constructed in accordance with applicable statutory provisions. Such report shall indicate the limit of cost of each project when in excess of $200,000, but that when the cost does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. This report supersedes an annual report to Congress required by a provision in the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926. The elimination of the mandatory requirement for an annual report is considered desirable.

Section 410 authorizes the Federal Works Administrator, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to change or rechange the name or designation of any building under control of the Federal Works Agency.

Section 411 repeals acts or portions of acts conflicting with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, our able and distinguished colleague from Mississippi the chairman of the Committee on Public Works has covered the ground so thoroughly that it hardly seems necessary for anyone to say anything else about this bill. I am not surprised that there is such great interest shown on the floor of the House in regard to this proposed legislation. It affects every congressional district in the United States. Neither do I have to remind the Members of the House that very few, if any, post offices have been built in this country for almost a decade. This bill provides for substantially 435 post offices or public buildings. There was submitted to our committee a list of some 4,000 eligible post offices and public buildings in this country, so that the bill before us provides for about 10 percent of what is needed in the United States to bring our public buildings program somewhere near where it is adequate to take care of the needs of our people.

A great deal has been said about providing a list of public projects, to lay them on the shelf in order to take care of unemployment. In addition to the question of providing employment for those who are not employed I think we have one element in this bill that has not been mentioned very emphatically, and that is that the need for the public buildings in the United States, particularly post offices, has come to the point where the United States Government is becoming more a tenant than the owner of property, and now is making leases in every section of the country for space in order to take care of the post office needs.

With 4,000 projects submitted, that means an average of about 10 for every congressional district. In my own district in Michigan I have 15 cities eligible for post offices. This provides for just one in each congressional district, so that the bill before us is a beginning, and a beginning only. Nothing is provided in the bill for the District of Columbia. It is all outside of the District of Columbia. With reference to the question of the acquisition of sites, may I say to the Members of the House that with the cooperation of the Post Office Department and the Public Works Administration, and the local people of the town or city where the post office is to be built, I do not believe any Member need fear but what the post-office building will be located where it will serve the public best in the community where it is to be constructed.

We can dismiss that worry from our minds immediately.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I am sure the gentleman will agree that this could not be considered as a political asset and that it would certainly be construed as a liability. I am sure the gentleman will agree that the bill itself is a constructive step in the direction of furnishing, as I stated in the debate on the rule earlier today, needed employment in a constructive program, rather than to allow for a leaf-raking program.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman is entirely correct, because under this bill the Government of the United States will get value received for the money it spends. The public need is the essential object of the bill.

Mr. CHESNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to my distinguished colleague, a member of our committee.

Mr. CHESNEY. Is it not true that this bill will save the Federal Government a tremendous amount of money in the light of the tendency that we are now following?

Mr. DONDERO. There is no question about that. I know in my own congressional district the Government of the United States is renting more than one building for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Post Office Department. I assume that that same condition exists in nearly every other district in the United States.

Mr. CHESNEY. This bill provides a practical business approach to this pressing problem.

Mr. DONDERO. I so deem it, and I am supporting it wholeheartedly.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Referring to the architects who will draw the plans for these various post offices in the various districts, will it be the policy of the Post Office Department, insofar as possible, to give local architects an opportunity to work out the plans and specifications rather than to have that work centered in some of the great metropolitan areas, where the architects in such centers have in the past had a great deal of this business?

Mr. DONDERO. There is not a word in this bill which restricts that particular phase of the building industry. The Departments would be at liberty to employ local architects to draw plans for post offices and other buildings.

Mr. RICH. Certainly they should permit the local people to submit plans and specifications in competition with the architects who live in Washington, New York or Philadelphia. I think the people in the districts who want a post office and who have architects among them, who are qualified, should have the right to give the work to those local people. I think it is a grand thing to give those local people an opportunity to show their skill and ability.

Mr. DONDERO. I share the gentleman's opinion in that regard, because that keeps private industry alive in this country.

Mr. RICH. There was just one other remark made here a few minutes ago to the effect that it is a matter of economy for us to build these post office buildings. That is not a fact. It costs the Federal Government more to build post offices than it does to rent them, because when the Federal Government builds its own building, you take that property off the tax rolls. When you put up a building that costs $100,000, you have to furnish 2 or 3 janitors and a lot of other extra things, so that it costs the Government a great deal more money to build its own post offices than it does to rent them. Do not let anybody fool you on that.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one additional minute.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Title IV, section 401, specifically authorizes the employment of architectural service, as the gentleman stated in response to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would like also to say there is just 1 hour of debate on each side, and as chairman of the committee I did not make as full an explanation as I should like to have done because I did not want to consume all the time. However, I am available to answer any questions, as I am sure is the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman from Mississippi covered the ground very thoroughly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Public Works has spent considerable time in the formulation of this bill. As our chairman and the ranking minority member have called to your attention, for over 10 years the United States has not engaged in any public-building program. During the war period, and even before the war when we were in preparation, and in the postwar days, we felt it was not expedient to spend large sums of money on a building program, for a number of reasons. One, of course, was to provide men and material to build housing for veterans and others who were in distress and who needed low-cost housing. In addition to that, we were expending hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars in projects in putting the country in a condition first to prepare for war, then to carry on war, and then after the war was over, in the rehabilitation following the war. So we have had no building program during that period.

This bill merely attempts to pick up where we left off and carry on the program that we had away back in the early days of public building in the United States. In doing so, we have attempted, as far as possible, by legislation, to hedge about the bill so that there will be as little political consideration given to this building program as possible.

As the chairman has called to your attention, we have endeavored to provide that there shall be fairness in every congressional district. We have endeavored to spell out in the very language of the bill that every congressional district in the United States shall be given consideration in the determination of where these projects shall go. The bill provides that no building shall be constructed that is not needed and justified and partisan political consideration shall be barred. In carrying out that program we have also provided that we will recognize local architects in the drawing of plans for the construction of these buildings so that we may, as far as possible, build up local communities and give an opportunity to those who know local conditions to engage in this program.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield.

Mr. PERKINS. In my congressional district in Kentucky there is no single town mentioned as being eligible under this bill. There are three counties in my congressional district that do not have any Federal building. The gross receipts are under $10,000 a year, but above $5,000. In those particular counties that do not have industries, such as the coal-mining industries that they do have in other counties in the district, the unemployment in those three counties is much worse than it is in the remainder of my congressional district. We do not have any situation here to take care of counties of that type, as I understand it, in this bill. Am I correct?

Mr. ANGELL. I hardly think that is true. I think it is the purpose of the bill, and I think it can be read into the language of the bill, that every congressional district will be given an opportunity to participate in this program. In a condition such as you have called attention to in your district, there is ample latitude allowed in carrying out this program to deal justly with your district so that adequate facilities are provided in that district.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. That was the thing I was going to bring out. If the gentleman can prove that his district does qualify under the formula established under this bill, there is no question, in my opinion, but what he would become eligible, because the conditions have changed since the establishment of the list which was considered in the committee.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say further: As has already been expressed, this is an endeavor to put on the shelf a list of available projects which have been fully canvassed and considered throughout the entire territory of the United States, of available projects that will be ready for construction in the event we have the funds to carry on the construction program.

This bill does not provide for construction. It is true, there is an authorization for the expenditure of $40,000,000 for the acquisition of sites and for the preparation of plans, but there is no money for construction. That is a program that must be authorized by subsequent legislation.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. There is one point I believe that has not been mentioned: That this bill comes from the Committee on Public Works with the unanimous approval of the membership.

Mr. ANGELL. That is absolutely true; partisan politics has not entered into the consideration of this bill at any stage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR], a member of the committee.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the bill before us for consideration is in reality legislation of a program that will save us many millions of dollars directly and indirectly. It was my privilege to serve as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds last year, and that committee felt that we did not want to start a Federal construction program because of high construction costs and the critical situation in the building-materials field; but we did, from time to time, discuss and recognize the need for a Federal buildings program not only for post offices but for Federal buildings, because we recognized the tremendous amount of money that we were paying as rent to house our various post offices and other Federal departments. We feel now, however, that possibly changes will be coming about shortly. I believe we all recognize that we are facing possibly an unemployment situation, so I think the committee in all wisdom decided that rather than have a program of hodgepodge construction and WPA projects that we would ask you as Members of Congress to go along with us and establish a construction program of necessary buildings, to acquire sites and complete plans in order that we might have a definite and worth-while program to combat unemployment in the various districts when and if it should come. For that reason we have carried a proposal here which assures some relief in each congressional district, at least to the extent of $200,000; so I say to you that we shall be helping and keeping relief down to a minimum and unemployment down to a minimum and give to the people the service to which they are entitled.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Under section 101, in effect, the committee said that there should be at least one post office or other Federal building in each congressional district. I note in the reported committee hearings list No. 5, on page 329, that there are 164 sites previously acquired for Federal buildings throughout the United States. Under section 102, was it the committee's intention that in those districts where sites have previously been acquired those particular districts shall get an additional Federal building or post office?

Mr. McGREGOR. The gentleman's understanding is absolutely correct. The committee included that provision in the legislation for the reason so ably stated by the chairman of the committee. At the start of the emergency a great number of projects were really begun but upon instruction and orders by the President the construction program was deferred. We felt that it would be unfair to the Members of Congress in districts where projects were deferred to penalize them by making them ineligible for an additional project, because in many districts the buildings had been nearly completed before the freeze order went into effect; so as set forth in this schedule any such district would still be entitled to one other project, and in my opinion at least to an additional expenditure of $200,000.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. Do I understand then, from the gentleman's statement, that we ought to have these projects that are approved, as provided in this report, and that each Member will be entitled to an expenditure of not less than $200,000 for additional post-office buildings in his district?

Mr. McGREGOR. The gentleman is, in my opinion, correct. If he has a post office or a Federal building project that was deferred because of Executive order of the President some years ago, the gentleman is still entitled to one additional project in excess of the deferred project.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I understand there are 18 projects in my district that have already been processed, or at least have already been studied so that a post office could be built next week.

Mr. McGREGOR. There is no construction authorization in this legislation. There is established $40,000,000 only for the preparation of plans and land acquisition and this bill does not authorize new construction.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is not the question. These have already been studied and recommended after study and they are eligible for a post office because of a study that has been made, either by Public Works or by the Post Office Department.

Mr. McGREGOR. If they are in the deferred category, in which construction possibly had been started or plans nearly completed, then were deferred because of Executive order, that post office would be completed and the plans for one additional post office would be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. So that under this proposition, as I understand it, I would get one post office in my district, and if there are 18 that are eligible I would have to wait 18 years to finally get them all?

Mr. McGREGOR. No; I would not say that. The gentleman realizes that the Congress could not pass an authorization bill or a mandatory construction provision to build post offices for all the 4,000 eligibles in the United States. There are approximately 4,000 post offices that are eligible under the basic law of 1926. Now, we want to be realistic. We cannot construct 4,000 post offices; however, in this legislation we are endeavoring to spread it out so that each congressional district will get a post office or a Federal building that will help the unemployment situation in that particular territory. But of course they must show a need and qualify under the law.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. POTTER. Is it the understanding of the committee that a survey will be made of all of the post offices that have been approved, which appear on the list, to determine the ones that are most needed and that the community that has the most need for a post office will receive a new post office?

Mr. McGREGOR. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WEICHEL. The gentleman has referred to the act of 1926. Some have been built at that time and since that time, but have been outmoded. I also have some in my district that were built in 1912. Those post offices are handling mail for 10,000 or more people. I believe there are two situations like that in my district. We do not need a new post office. What we need is to have those thoroughly rebuilt. Now, how many years must I wait?

Mr. McGREGOR. This legislation grants authorization for $30,000,000 established for emergency improvements in various districts, including the district of my distinguished colleague. The basic act was to establish a formula whereby any post office that had $10,000 worth of receipts is eligible. If the gentleman has some emergency propositions in his district, there is $30,000,000 in this bill to take care of that very thing. That is, in excess of $25,000 per project.

Mr. WEICHEL. Now, who decides this emergency business?

Mr. McGREGOR. The Department of Public Works and the Post Office Department. They will send an inspector out to determine whether or not any emergency exists and whether or not the emergency in the gentleman's district compares with the formula as set forth.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. I represent 19 counties, and out of the 19 counties 10 counties have a post-office building Government-owned, while in the other 9 the Government rents. As I understand the gentleman, there will be approximately $200,000 allocated to each congressional district. Some of my county-seat towns are relatively small in population, and, therefore, it would not cost as much to construct a post office in one of these communities as it would in a big city, for instance. Would it be possible, say, to split that money up and build one or two, or even two or three, if we can get the contracts approved?

Mr. McGREGOR. It is my opinion that it is within the power of the authorities to make an equitable distribution, not necessarily uniform, so that if you have two post offices and they are only costing $75,000 apiece, you are entitled to two, as long as you keep under the minimum of $200,000?

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. We keep hearing it said on the floor that each congressional district will get a $200,000 building. My understanding of the bill is that it is merely to provide for planning and site acquisition at a time, if it should happen, when there is considerable unemployment, and it is necessary to go into a public works program so that we will have that spade work and blue printing work done to remedy the unemployment situation.

Mr. McGREGOR. The gentleman is absolutely right. We bring this legislation before you so that we will have a definite program for construction if and when we the Congress decides to do so and we will not find ourselves in the situation we did years ago when we were forced to start a WPA program without having a proper program outlined.

Mr. MONRONEY. And having a leaf-raking program instead of a building program.

Mr. McGREGOR. That is it exactly.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I take it for granted that if and when this program is executed, there will be a careful analysis made, and where unemployment is acute, that they will receive preferment?

Mr. McGREGOR. I do not know that unemployment will be considered as preferential treatment, but certainly it will be taken into consideration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think there should be no misunderstanding with reference to this $200,000. It does not authorize two buildings if the cost does not exceed $200,000. It contemplates only one building in each district. The $200,000 mentioned in title I has to do with the report of the Commissioner of Public Works, and he is required, whenever a building will cost over $200,000, to so advise, but where a building costs under $200,000, we do not have to have plans and specifications made when he makes his report. I think there should not be this misunderstanding. I do not know of any case where generally there has been more than one building authorized in a district even though that building cost, say $75,000, which is almost inconceivable at present costs. It contemplates one post office in each congressional district.

Mr. McGREGOR. There is a minimum of $200,000. In some of the rural areas we can build two post offices costing under $200,000, and we will in my opinion be entitled to them. That would only be fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I seek this time to ask the Chairman to clarify this particular point in my mind. Here are two particular cases, one an established post office on a site that will not be changed, but an emergency exists in which, say, the rural carriers are housed in the basement, making up the mail, using even the washroom, and the other particular case is the case in which the Post Office Department feels that a new site is necessary. Now, the question in my mind is this: Will this particular district be limited to simply plans and the acquisition of a site for one building?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have endeavored to answer the gentleman's question by saying that this bill only authorizes the acquiring of one new site in substantially every district, and I emphasize in my statement, and I answer the gentleman's question by saying that in title III wherever there is renovation and improvement of a federally owned building to provide for additional space, for example, for rural carriers to park their cars or additional improvements, then there can be that renovation and improvement that will provide for the additional accommodations of these rural carriers and employees but not an entirely new building. It may provide for the acquisition of additional land. I would like to say this further in response to the gentleman's request, that in previous authorizations where there have been as many as two buildings contemplated, that you had to select one of those buildings in one year and not be permitted to select the other one until the next year. So if we authorize here, which the budget has not approved, the selection of two sites, you have to select one site one year and then wait until the next year to select the other site.

Mr. DEANE. In other words, this site in which the emergency exists, so far as the rural carriers, say, are concerned, would be given prior consideration and the other site would have to wait.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would say that the construction on the site that will be acquired cannot be done until there has been an appropriation, but the renovation and the improvement or extension can be made under the authorization of $30,000,000 where more than $25,000 is to be spent on any one building. Members of the committee will keep in mind that under existing law, if it is necessary to repair any post office building, the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to appropriate not to exceed $25,000 for repair. This is for renovation and enlargement.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I wonder if this bill provides for the cost of construction of a post office in addition to the cost of the site.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not, the buildings that are to cost over $200,000 are in list 1, of those eligible for selection for sites and plans under this bill. That list appears in the hearings from page 271 to page 325.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Is it the idea of the committee that each Congressional district shall have 1 post office irrespective of the cost of that post office?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, each congressional district shall have either a post office or the benefit of a post office, keeping in mind that in the large metropolitan areas such as New York City it would be impossible to construct 24 more post offices, but there are substations and warehouses, and they get the benefit of them. Every district will get either one or more buildings or the equivalent of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Is it the intention of the committee that when a site is acquired that site will be used for the construction of a post office?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Unless one has already been acquired and placed in the deferred class under the appropriation of 1937–38. In that case both the new site and the site already acquired may be used.

Mr. GRANGER. In the effort to distribute the buildings over the country, the gentleman would not say that under title III if you use something for renovation it would count against what you might have under title I?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It would not.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the distinguished chairman of this committee and to this committee for the splendid work they have done on this bill, with which I am in hearty accord, and which I shall gladly support.

I want, if I may, to call attention to one or two things that I believe should be added to this bill, not for the purpose of hurting the bill but helping it. I call attention to the fact that over $12,000,000 of rent is being paid per year now for post offices; to be exact, $12,717,000. Every post-office building that is built will reduce that staggering total for which we have to appropriate year by year. I therefore believe that it is in the interest of the Nation that we resume the very safe and sane program which this committee or its predecessor adopted in 1926—to have three new post-office buildings constructed in every 3-year period in every district in the United States. It has never been claimed that any politics entered into that arrangement. This committee has done a splendid job in preparing for the inevitable; but let me call attention to the fact that not one cent of the money authorized to be appropriated under this bill goes for any construction whatsoever. I believe it is wise to leave it to the discretion of the committee, composed of General Fleming, the Postmaster General, and the Public Buildings Administrator, W. E. Reynolds. No better committee could have been suggested to have it within their discretion, not only to design, not only to acquire sites, but to give us some hope, at least a pious hope, of real construction. There are a group of us here who feel that need so acutely for the whole Nation. There is no partisan politics here. I see before me friends by the dozen who are vitally interested in building a real program and resuming our program in connection with post offices.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. EVINS. Under the amendment which the gentleman from Alabama intends to offer, it would still take some 18 months before any construction could get under way after the plans are drawn and the sites acquired.

Mr. HOBBS. That is correct.

Mr. EVINS. Does not the gentleman think that the time has arrived that we should now begin to provide for a real construction program?

Mr. HOBBS. There is no question about it.

Mr. EVINS. I commend the gentleman and want to say that I shall support his amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman's amendment authorize the acquisition of one site a year, or just one site as the present bill does, and stop right there?

Mr. HOBBS. My amendment, and I hope permission will be granted to consider it as a whole rather than in part, would authorize the drafting of plans for Three buildings pronto—now. In addition to that, the acquisition of three sites; in addition to that the construction within the next 3 years of at least two buildings in each district, plus the construction of at least one building in 3 years—that is, a post-office building—in every county seat where there is no post-office building. In other words, where a county, because of its poverty is not able to pay the total cost and where the county is important enough to warrant the building of a courthouse there where court is held regularly, there should be enough importance attached to it for the Federal Government to relieve that town of at least part of the requirement, which is what my amendment provides.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman's amendment would give us a real program then.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. As I understand it, the gentleman's proposed amendment is nothing new or novel. It is that which was taken for granted more or less in operation before the war years?

Mr. HOBBS. It was from 1926 on.

Let me call your attention to what these gentlemen on the committee—and I have reference particularly to the ones who have spoken—have had in mind as the reason for the desire for a real construction program, because it is the best way to spend Government money, the money of the taxpayers, that can be devised, if we can do it on a businesslike basis.

There are four ways that this program benefits the people generally.

First, the material man. Second, the material furnished by these men out of the forests, the mines, and so on. Third, the labor of the Nation—the skilled laborers who build the buildings. Those three come under one head of No. 1, material, material men, and organized and unorganized labor. They are the ones who will benefit most and the quickest by this program.

Second, by a face lifting of every community in which a post-office building is built, even if it means nothing more than the painting of the fronts of all buildings in the town. There is no man within the sound of my voice who has not seen that demonstrated wherever there is a new post-office building built.

Third, an improved postal service, which is the aim of every organized group in the Government. This will certainly do that.

Fourth, a reduction of the rent, which amounts now to nearly $13,000,000 a year.

What I want to do, as I have stated in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY], is to get the consent of this body not to force construction but to leave it in the discretion of this committee. That is, the Postmaster General, General Fleming, and Bert Reynolds, in each of whom we have the utmost confidence. Leave it to them to say when the bids are fair, but declare the pious interest, perhaps, of this great committee, to begin construction within the earliest possible moment of a real construction program.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. DENTON. Under your amendment, is construction limited to post offices that have less than $10,000 receipts?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; $10,000 is the requirement, and has nothing to do with the improvement. That is covered in another part of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCDONOUGH], a member of the committee.

Mr. MCDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I think the details of this bill have been pretty thoroughly covered by the members of the committee, but I want to emphasize title III, which provides for the improvement of existing buildings, which I think will probably be the section of the bill that will be used first.

That provides some $30,000,000 for the purpose of improving existing buildings, providing the cost of the improvement does not exceed $25,000 in any one instance. I think this will become necessary quickest for the reason that if the districts which you represent are similar to mine, the rented quarters under lease and existing buildings in Los Angeles County are totally inadequate to handle the needs for postal facilities.

Many of the postal employees are working under conditions that would not be permitted in normal times in any factory, and I think we should look at that section of the bill as being very essential.

A great deal has been said about more than one building in a district. I do not want to leave the impression that the committee is reporting out a bill that will permit more than one building in any district that does not need it, because the bill very carefully specifies that the urgency of the project shall be the basis, the yardstick, on which it shall be determined whether we shall purchase a site even without a building in the area in need. We have a lot of sites already purchased, and a lot of projects that will undoubtedly come under consideration very soon providing the funds are authorized and appropriated, some 199 projects in which most of the sites are already acquired. That, of course, can be taken out of the picture insofar as the total number of 435 congressional districts throughout the Nation is concerned.

It is very possible that the $40,000,000 will not be the total amount needed. I doubt if we shall need more than that, because that amount provides an average cost per site of $91,000,000, and I am sure that a site can be purchased in many, many areas for much less than that. That undoubtedly is not true in the heavily populated areas.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCDONOUGH. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And by the time that site has been acquired and the plans made we shall have the report that is provided for in this bill from the Commissioner of Public Buildings for the acquiring of another site and the making of another plan.

Mr. MCDONOUGH. That is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Because this bill provides for that. In the 1930's in at least one case, two buildings were contemplated in three years, but only one building was selected in any one year. The second building was not selected until the first building had been substantially constructed.

Mr. MCDONOUGH. That is right. As a matter of fact, this bill is probably the most equitable, reasonable, and sensible way to purchase sites in the areas and provide plans and specifications for further post offices and public buildings. Outside of the Committee on the Judiciary with its private relief bills, the Committee on Public Works probably is second in the number of bills, in connection with post offices; but I do not think it is the practice to approve appropriations or authorizations for the building of buildings in all of the various congressional districts according to the bills before the committee.

So, in order to be fair about it—and, as a matter of fact, most of the Members of the House appeared before the committee and gave their story to the committee as to the problems they had, in order to be fair we have provided in this bill $40,000,000 for the acquisition of sites and $30,000,000 for the reconditioning of existing structures, both on an urgency basis. I think the building of post offices—and, of course, the bill does not confine itself to post offices but takes in all Federal structures needed in a district—I think the building of these structures should be based on urgency and service in those areas of population where there is a concentrated demand, where the public service is emphasized by an increased number of people in the area. They should be given first consideration, and I am sure such areas will have that consideration from the committee that is to report to the Congress, that is, the Public Works, Public Buildings Administration, and the Federal Works Administrator; when that committee reports it will be based on population and urgency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK], a member of the committee.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this bill divides itself into two sections. The first section authorizes $40,000,000 for the acquisition of sites and the preparation of plans for post-office buildings. Of this $40,000,000 item $28,000,000 is to be spent on the acquisition of sites and approximately $12,000,000 for the preparation of architectural plans. The second section calls for $30,000,000 for renovation, repair, and enlargement of present structures.

I can illustrate by giving two examples, with both of which I am quite familiar, how these two different sections of the bill will work in the interest of economy in Government.

The city of Vancouver, Wash., has a post office which was constructed in 1917. At the time this post office was built it had approximately 12,000 to 13,000 patrons. At the present time this post office has 61,000 patrons or fivefold the number it had at the time of its construction.

In 1917, 32 years ago, the Vancouver post office had 36 employees. Today it has 125 employees. In 1939, only 10 years ago, the earliest period for which figures are available, the Vancouver post office was doing a business of $81,000 a year. Last year the business of this post office totalled $344,000. In other words, its business in 10 years underwent a fourfold increase. Obviously the Vancouver post office, now serving five times as many people as it did when it was constructed and doing four times the volume of business it did then, has become cramped and overcrowded. This crowded condition results in inefficiency, and inefficiency costs money.

If a new building were to be provided it would house many agencies that are now occupying rental quarters in that city. Also, it would relieve congestion and result in greater efficiency. The operator of a private business whose employees increased from 36 to 125, whose volume of business expanded from $81,000 to $344,000, and whose customers increased from 12,000 to 61,000, would either greatly enlarge his plant or build a new one. It would be good business for him to do so. It is good business for the Government to build new post offices where needed.

As to the $30,000,000 for the repair of buildings, let me point out one illustration that shows how this money could be wisely expended. Longview, Wash., has a very ample post office. It is really larger than the post-office operation needs at the present time. It has a lower floor with a floor space of about 12,000 square feet that is not now occupied. That space is heated and lighted and equipped with plumbing facilities. The expenditure of $15,000 to $30,000 would make these 12,000 feet of floor space usable. If that lower floor were made usable the Federal Government would save in rental it is now paying for space in private property for other Federal agencies more than $6,000 a year. In other words, on an investment of from $15,000 to $30,000 the Government could save in rentals at least $6,000 a year. That represents a good interest on the money that the Government would spend for the improvement of this property.

From reading the report and from the witnesses who came before us, I know there are many of these situations. They exist in almost every district of the country. If agencies of Government involved, the Building Administration and the Post Office Department, in repairing buildings and constructing new ones, select the places where new or additional facilities are most needed, and do not play politics, then this program involving $70,000,000 for planning, the acquisition of post-office sites and repairing post-office buildings will be a very good investment for the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I notice on page 4 of the report that—

> The Public Buildings Commissioner stated that it is the invariable practice of his agency and of the Post Office Department in cases affecting the said Deparment, to confer with the representatives of the local units of Government and with the Members of Congress representing the area concerned in determining the selection of projects and sites therefor.

I wonder if the gentleman could enlighten us any further on how much attention he said he would pay to the Members of Congress after conferring with them, or did he make any comment on that?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I think under the present law that the Public Buildings Commissioner has the authority to select the site. He intends to consult with the Members of Congress; at least, so he told the committee, he intended to do so.

Mr. KEATING. That is all he said; that he would consult with them?

Mr. MACK of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACK of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did he say he would consult with every Member of Congress in whose district a building is to be built? I had a post office built in 1920 under one party and had them built under another party, and I know how it works.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the hard-working chairman of this committee and the other members of the committee for the efforts they have put forth in bringing this legislation to the floor of the House. I commend them, too, for the explanation of this bill. Because of their enthusiastic support of this proposal, I hesitate to criticize. I would, however, like to make a few observations and ask what I believe to be rather pertinent questions.

This bill provides, among other things, for the authorization for the expenditure of $40,000,000 to make plans and to acquire sites for the erection of public buildings, nearly all of which are post-office buildings. It also provides for expending $30,000,000 for repairs of buildings already erected. It is the item of $40,000,000 to which I shall direct my statement.

This legislation, as I understand it, is intended to continue a building program that was practically stopped during the war period. In other words, begin where our Government left off in its post-office building program.

Undoubtedly, there is need for the construction of post offices in various parts of the country. I know of plenty of places where post office people cannot carry on as they should because of congested conditions.

Members of the committee have told us that the $40,000,000 is to be spent to buy additional sites and to make additional plans and then "put the plans on the shelf" until a depression comes along, or when there is a big surplus of labor that needs to be employed. On that point, Mr. Chairman, I direct your attention to the report filed with this bill that indicates plans already made and sites acquired for 199 buildings at a cost, of course, of many hundreds of millions of dollars.

In any event, under this bill we spend $40,000,000 for plans and sites. We have no idea whatever what the buildings are going to cost after the sites are acquired.

But, Mr. Chairman, here is the thing to which I want to direct your special attention. The bill is unique in that it provides, and I call your attention to section 102 of the bill, that at least one post-office building or a Federal building, as the case may be, will be erected in every congressional district in the United States. That is, sites will be acquired, and of course, buildings are bound to follow.

This bill says, and I quote:

> SEC. 102. It is the intent of the Congress that the equitable distribution of selected projects required by section 101 of this title shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects. It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

I am informed by those who have preceded me in this discussion that this bill authorizes the expenditure of not less than $200,000 for a post-office building in every congressional district, whether it needs it or not. No one knows how much these buildings are going to cost. They will cost all the way from several hundred thousand dollars to millions of dollars, and do not forget that this building is in addition to any other project already approved in the congressional district.

If you have a project already approved for several million dollars, you will get this one in addition thereto. So you can give consideration to 435 projects whether badly needed or not in addition to at least 200 already selected. This, of course, does not take into consideration many other worthy projects that may be needed.

I agree that this $40,000,000 for the purchase of sites does not authorize the construction of the buildings. Of course, if we purchase sites, we must go ahead and construct the buildings. It seems to me that the provision of this bill requiring at least one building in every congressional district in the United States may have the appearance of pork-barrel tactics, although not intended to be so. I understand it is the intent of the committee that it is to equalize the construction of Federal buildings in the United States. In other words, to prevent one area from using political pressure over another in order to secure public buildings paid for by all the taxpayers of this country.

Surely we must have men in public office, men in public trust, who can look into this situation, and without bias or prejudice, make recommendations that are for the best interests of the country. Surely, I hope so.

So, we can look forward to the expenditure of a considerable amount of money, because when you authorize money to buy sites you are going to appropriate funds for construction of buildings.

This bill, as I said, is for post office buildings or at least where post-office buildings are to be located. We are going to have a proposal for a good many other public projects, but this is post-office buildings. They will probably house other Federal agencies, but at least will house a post office. If I am incorrect in that, I should like to know.

Mr. McGREGOR. I think the gentleman is incorrect, because it does not specifically designate post offices. It is Federal buildings. However, in most of the instances it will be post offices that will house other Federal agencies. It does not exclude Federal buildings other than post offices.

Mr. REES. I am glad to have that information, because post offices are the only things we have discussed today on this subject. It will include buildings that will house Government agencies in addition to post offices.

As I said, there is $70,000,000 in this bill. It starts the spending of a considerable amount of money, in the hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not want to be critical, but I think this legislation is a whole lot more important than appears on the face of it. That is the way it seems to me.

It is extremely important, in view of a debt of $260,000,000,000, and considering our budget is already out of balance, that we move with caution. I agree appropriations are not made under this bill, but I still think we had better move with caution before we obligate our Government any further. I trust that other projects authorized hereunder will be on the basis of need and will give consideration to the condition of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. With the gentleman from Kansas, I have been surprised this afternoon by the nearness of another WPA. I thought the President's chief economic adviser told us we were going through a period of healthy disinflation.

Mr. REES. I have been a little shocked myself that Members have suggested it as to protect us against another WPA, or whatever it may be. We hope that will not happen. In any event, if it does happen, this is a better place to spend the money than in leaf-raking, as was done in many places a few years ago.

Mr. CHESNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHESNEY. If the gentleman will refer to title II, "Acquisition of sites and transfer of jurisdiction over sites by various agencies and departments of the Government," he will find that this section of the bill provides the Federal Government an opportunity to acquire and transfer buildings where in normal times it would cost the Federal Government a tremendous amount of money to acquire or transfer title. This bill really saves money.

Mr. REES. The gentleman's suggestion that this bill would save money in acquiring property that would cost more in normal times is difficult to understand unless he expects real estate to go higher. I observe, however, in this bill a number of projects that are already under way, some 199. Then it says, "Projects for which sites have been acquired, 164." It looks to me as if you are going to have a good many sites "on the shelf," as you call it, because it would appear from this report that you already have something over 200 sites on the shelf ready or almost ready to go, and you are going to have 435 additional on the shelf besides the something over 200. So you will have at least 635 on the shelf when this measure is approved.

Mr. CHESNEY. The gentleman is wrong in that respect.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct at least part of my remarks to statements I understood the gentlman from Kansas to make a moment ago, when I understood him to say this bill provides for a limitation of cost of $200,000 to be spent in each congressional district.

Mr. REES. No; I did not understand that that is the limitation. I thought there would be at least $200,000 spent in each district for a post-office building, and possibly more.

Mr. PICKETT. If that is the gentleman's understanding, then I want to correct the matter.

Mr. REES. I understand that from the statements of other members on the committee who preceded me today.

Mr. PICKETT. I think the gentleman, with his legislative experience, is entirely capable of reading the bill itself, and understanding its import. So I suggest, if you will turn to page 2, title I, line 21, and read with me, perhaps the gentleman will gain a better understanding of the bill:

> The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress a comprehensive report of all eligible projects and their limits of cost when in excess of $200,000—

I think that is plain, and cannot be made any plainer. No explanation by me is necessary. The bill reads further—> without regard to the time in which they may be undertaken, which report shall be printed as a public document.

That simply means that they are going to submit a comprehensive report of eligible projects and the limits of cost of those projects when the cost of a project is going to be $200,000 or more.

Then, on page 3, the bill reads:

> When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

That means simply what it says: that if the project is not estimated to cost more than $200,000, then the Commissioner of Public Buildings sets the limit of cost—and that cost may be $45,000 or $110,000 or $160,000, or any sum less than $200,000. That fixes the limit of cost.

When you read further you will find that it is the intention of the Congress that with very few exceptions, should this bill become law, shall there be more than one project in a congressional district, regardless of whether the cost involved is $15,000 or $150,000. The limitation on the number of projects is placed further down the page. This is not to be taken to mean that you can have as many projects in your district as you can get in within the limit of cost of $200,000. Is that clear to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. REES. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Do I understand under this legislation that every congressional district in the United States will be entitled to the expenditure of at least $200,000 for a public building which is likely to be a post-office building?

Mr. PICKETT. The answer is "No."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am glad that the gentleman has answered the question, because the gentleman from Kansas has asked that same question and has been repeatedly told that the answer to it is no. I am glad the gentleman from Texas took the floor to further answer the gentleman from Kansas, because there ought not to be any misunderstanding about this $200,000 limitation. With the gentleman's permission, I call attention to the fact that on the 7th day of April the chairman of this committee mailed to each Member of the House a copy of these hearings and on page 271 there is a list No. 1, where you will find dozens and dozens of projects with no cost at all opposite the name. That means those projects cost less than $200,000. There is not any figure at all in those cases where the cost is less than $200,000.

But, as the gentleman from Texas has stated affirmatively, the Commissioner is required to report on all projects costing $200,000 or more. There is no provision in this bill providing that any district is going to get $200,000 or $150,000 or any other amount. According to the testimony before our committee, generally, any public building which will serve the needs of the Federal Government in any town will cost at least from $125,000 to $175,000, or something like that—perhaps $100,000. But, I emphasize that there is no guaranty that there will be 2 buildings or 3 buildings, if they can be put up at $25,000 or $50,000, to make up the sum of $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. PICKETT. I thank the chairman of the committee for his most lucid explanation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. PICKETT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In order that there may be no misunderstanding on the part of the Members of the House, the committee printed on page 169 of the hearings excerpts from all the appropriations and most of the authorizations after the approval of the initial program were in appropriation bills, and those appropriation bills provided for construction.

I believe that the language of this bill is better. Under those authorizations and under those appropriations the first thing that the Congress did was to provide for the construction, as well as the making of plans and the acquiring of sites. And we profited by that, because under the terms of these bills we selected the sites. It was some 2 years before they acquired the title to it, and before they built the structure it was approximately 2 years before they could announce the name of the next project.

Now, with our experience of building six or seven buildings in each congressional district, and on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, we decided that in order to promote a post-office building and a public-buildings program, the wise thing to do was to profit by the experience we had then, and to provide for the acquiring of a site and the making of plans for at least one building. When they come in and the report of the Commissioner comes in here in 18 months, then all they have to do in order to provide for the second site or the second building is for the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation for that. If then it develops that we are in a great depression, we can authorize the acquiring of two sites in one appropriation bill. But when we do, we have to select them one at a time and one each year. The Post Office Department and the Public Buildings Administration did not permit us to select two at one time in the 1930's.

In this bill which provides for plans and the acquiring of sites, in the very nature of things it is contemplated there would be other appropriations for additional sites in the years to come. But I submit that it would be a reflection on this Congress, when in the depths of the greatest depression in human history, we never authorized more than two sites or two buildings, that we would now, when there is not any unemployment to amount to anything, when there is desperate need for material, to authorize something such as proposed by my learned friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] which he himself never presented to this committee and that Congress never adopted in the depths of the greatest depression in history. If we follow the experience and advice of the Public Buildings Administration, we will follow the program here announced, because Congress has previously refused about 3 years ago to authorize any construction program at the present time. If you can trust Congress to authorize funds to build buildings as planned, surely you can trust the Congress to provide for additional plans and additional sites.

Mr. PICKETT. The chairman of the committee, Mr. WHITTINGTON, has worked most diligently and has digested the contents of this bill more thoroughly than any other member of this committee. His contribution by way of explanation of this bill cannot be misunderstood by anyone.

I yield further now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. I appreciate the gentleman from Texas yielding to me at this time.

I was given to understand by members of this great committee, who have spoken before the gentleman from Texas took the floor, that under this bill being considered at the present time, it really means that each congressional district will be entitled to the expenditure of at least $200,000 for a post-office building or other Federal building in his district; that by reason of this legislation he will at least have one new building in his congressional district.

Mr. PICKETT. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT] has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. PICKETT. I will answer the gentleman's question a second time. The answer again is "No." If the explanation I have given is inadequate, certainly the explanation which the chairman has just given ought to be more than ample. But if the gentleman will proceed with his questioning further and read the bill himself, instead of relying on misinformation or a misunderstanding of correct information, he will find that title I, section 103, page 4, of his bill places financial limitation on the site acquisition and plans section of this bill at $40,000,000.

If the gentleman's understanding of this proposal were by any manner of guess to be the correct one, he would have to spend $87,000,000, a sum in excess of the limit of authorization contained in the bill. Simply multiply 435 by $200,000 and see what you get.

Mr. McGREGOR. If the gentleman will yield right there, that $40,000,000 is not for construction; that is for land acquisition and planning.

Mr. PICKETT. He is talking about land acquisition, that is all. There is no construction in this bill. I think the gentleman had better go back and read the bill, read the report and the hearings again.

Mr. CHESNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield.

Mr. CHESNEY. It will be seen from the language on page 3 of the bill that no project will be considered unless it is economically sound and advantageous to the public service.

That answers the question of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. Yes; but read section 102:

It is the intent of the Congress that the equitable distribution of the selected projects required by section 101 of this title shall provide for the participation by each congressional district——

Mr. PICKETT. I know that language; go ahead; what is the gentleman's question?

Mr. REES. Let me read just a little further—shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects. It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized for construction——

Mr. PICKETT. What is the question? Go ahead and ask the question. I have studied the language; I know what it is.

Mr. REES. It is my understanding that there is an authorization of at least one project in each congressional district.

Mr. PICKETT. In the matter of site acquisition; yes.

Mr. REES. So there is such authorization. That is what I tried to get across a while ago. What you are doing is to authorize at least one project in every congressional district.

Mr. PICKETT. Not for construction; we authorize the acquisition of a site; that is all we are doing.

Mr. REES. That is right; I believe we are agreed.

Mr. PICKETT. I do not know just what we are in agreement on if the gentleman understands that it authorizes a $200,000 project in each district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, as one who has been intensely interested in the subject of the Government making authorizations and appropriations for the Post Office Department and furnishing necessary and adequate facilities and buildings to handle the business of the Government, I am quoting the remarks which I made on the floor of the House on February 14, 1949, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that one of the outstanding agencies of the Government, and the one department that has been noted for the administration of its affairs and for its efficiency throughout its organization is about to bog down—I refer to the United States Post Office Department. Mr. Speaker, the population of our country and of most of our cities and towns has increased tremendously, and with the building of good roads and rural electrification, our rural areas have also progressed and have required and now demand extended mail delivery, and besides the services of the Post Office Department have been so multiplied and expanded that, with the recent appropriations sufficient funds have not been made available to the Post Office Department to furnish the personnel and service to meet the needs of the citizens of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, of great importance also is the fact that for many years no appropriations have been made for construction of post-office buildings and Federal court buildings, many of the post offices being housed in shacks which are a disgrace to our Nation, and limited repairs, if any, have been made to provide the necessary space for the handling of the greatly increased volume of all classes of mail, particularly air mail and parcel post, parcel-post mail alone being more than enough to overtax all available room, making it necessary to use basements and any and all rooms in the buildings which should be used for other necessary purposes.

Mr. Speaker, in my district—and I understand the same condition exists in practically nearly all other parts of the United States—many of the present post-office buildings are outmoded, antiquated, and inadequate to handle the mails, and in many instances, as a result, the patrons of the offices are forced to stand in line and wait an interminable amount of time for mail and stamps and other services of the Post Office Department, and while during the war, of course, the citizens of the country were not complaining about these inconveniences and conditions, since the end of the war demands have been made and are now being made upon nearly every Member of the Congress for relief.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, with the funds which have been recently appropriated to the Post Office Department, the Department has been unable to provide the necessary personnel and help not only in the post offices but also on city and rural routes, and I am told that this has been responsible for unnecessary and unreasonable delay in the dispatch of the mails, and which never existed before in the history of the Post Office Department.

Mr. Speaker, I am taking the liberty to call this matter to the attention of the President and administration and the Congress, and especially to the attention of the committees of the House and Senate who are concerned with and have jurisdiction over the authorizations and appropriations in the hope that they will take steps to correct this most unsatisfactory and unpardonable situation, and I trust that they will take such action as they determine best to provide relief to the Post Office Department in order that this fine Department may continue to maintain its service and reputation as it has so well done in the past.

Mr. Chairman, after making these remarks on the floor it was pleasing to me that we were given the green light to consider this important matter, and as a member of the Public Works Committee of the House, I participated actively in the shaping of the bill now under consideration. Our committee gave long and serious consideration to all of the provisions of this bill, and in consultation and agreement with the officials of the Federal Works Agency and the Post Office Department, the language contained in this bill was agreed upon to be the best possible to accomplish the purposes intended.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding about the number of public buildings which might be constructed in any one congressional district, and while the language states that at least one should be approved for each congressional district, the bill further provides that—

It is the further intent of Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

The bill further provides:

That in making such selections they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I think the language of the bill is clear, and as an example, I have at least 18 applications for the construction of post-office buildings in my district; however, in view of the language of the bill, it is my opinion, and I am certain that it will be the opinion of the administrators of the law that those places and projects where the urgency is most acute will be given preferential consideration, and that where previous authorizations for acquisition of sites and construction of post-office buildings had been made that these projects would be constructed in addition to the one project herein authorized under the terms of the bill under consideration.

The point that I am making is that I expect to obtain construction of a post-office building at Lake Charles, La., in my district, which project had been previously authorized and appropriations made therefor, and in addition, I expect to obtain approval for another project in my home city, Opelousas, La., for the construction of a post-office building. Of course, I know that the other cities and towns in my district will be disappointed, but it is fair to say that under the legislation, it will be impossible for the Members of Congress to obtain all of the buildings required in their respective districts at one time.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the hearings of our committee on this bill will further show that the statement which I have made is correct, and I feel that we have presented as good a bill as was possible at this time, and I hope that the Members will vote for this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Public Buildings Act of 1949."

TITLE I—COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING OF FEDERAL PUBLIC BUILDINGS OUTSIDE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SEC. 101. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange, or otherwise, lands or interests in lands as sites or additions to site for Federal public building projects previously authorized and for such new projects as may be selected in the manner designated in this section, to make investigations and studies and to prepare plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications for such projects. Whenever the Federal Works Administrator shall determine such action to be necessary, such investigations, studies, preparation of plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications, may be undertaken prior to the approval of title to the sites by the Attorney General. When buildings to be used in whole or in part for post-office purposes are involved, the Federal Works Administrator, shall act jointly with the Postmaster General in the selection of towns or cities in which buildings are to be constructed, and in the choice of sites therein for such projects. The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress a comprehensive report of all eligible projects and their limits of cost when in excess of $200,000, without regard to the time in which they may be undertaken, which report shall be printed as a public document. When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. Selection of projects for the purposes of this title shall be made by the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General from such report and they may also select such other projects not included in such report which in their judgment are economically sound and advantageous to the public service: Provided, That in making such selections they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

SEC. 102. It is the intent of the Congress that the equitable distribution of selected projects required by section 101 of this title shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects. It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: On page 3, line 14, strike out section 102.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be at all surprised if my amendment is not applauded by a good many Members present; however, I offer it in good faith, motivated by a thought which has been in my mind for many, many years. That is, that the dignity of the Congress and its motives shall be respected by the public.

Let us look into this for just a moment. In line 9, page 3, we find the following language relating to the selection of sites:

Provided, That in making such selections they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I have no complaint whatsoever against that language. If we are to authorize the selection of sites, and, of course, the selection of sites will be followed eventually by the building of buildings — that is inevitable — they should be selected on the basis of "comparative urgency"—where they are most needed.

But section 102 nullifies that proviso which I have just read. It provides, as you all know, that—

It is the intent of the Congress—

We Members sitting on this floor—that the equitable distribution of selected projects required section 101—

Which I have just read—

shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects.

That, of course, is a denial of the policy set forth in the proviso contained in section 101, which says that the sites shall be selected with due regard to comparative urgency. In other words, whether the projects are urgent or not, under section 102 every congressional district must have a project.

I scarcely think that the House of Representatives wants to go on record with that kind of legislation.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. How would the gentleman answer this question: There are two projects equally urgent, one in one congressional district, and the other in another. One is selected by reason of political influence, the other not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman has mentioned political influence. I suggest that section 102 is an open invitation to political influence.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. It is not only an authorization but a requirement of congressional influence in passing upon these things. It is not merely an authorization but a requirement that one shall go to each district.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. The gentleman is touching on the very thing that the gentleman from Kansas tried to discuss a while ago, that we get at least one project in each congressional district of the United States, in addition to whatever site is authorized under this bill, whether right or wrong.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Truly. The thing may work out to the disadvantage of the efficiency of the Post Office Department. Undoubtedly there are congressional districts in this Union today that need more than one project.

I venture the guess that there are some congressional districts in the Union today that do not need an additional project, but nevertheless they must have it under this law. Now, we have got to trust somebody. If we retain the proviso on lines 9 to 13, inclusive, which says that they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to "comparative urgency," why nullify that in the next section by saying in effect "regardless of urgency"? I may be impertinent at this time and in this place to suggest to you—and I do it in all seriousness—that the Congress will enjoy a better position before the country if it drops out section 102.

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. I happen to be a member of this committee. I know it to be a fact that quite a number of Congressmen have introduced resolutions and have been referred to this Committee on Public Works in order to get six or seven post offices in their congressional districts. I represent a congressional district where we have quite a crowded population, but I will say that we have sufficient post offices in my congressional district so that it would not be necessary for me to appear before any committee and try and get a post office, and that is in New York City. I feel that where the post offices are necessary, that the committee should then acquire the sites and they should then hire the architects. After all, this is Government ownership, and I happen to be kind of against Government ownership, but I think it would be a good policy to acquire the sites right now and to draw the plans, and in case we should have a depression—and I hope we do not, with the debt we have in the country today—but in case we should have a depression, then instead of having men rake leaves and putting in time to get money for doing nothing, I think that is the time to put them to work in the building of post offices throughout the United States, or any Government building, for that matter, to make work that is going to accrue to the benefit of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That bears out what I said when the gentleman called attention to the fact that the congressional district in which he lives does not need a new facility. But you have got to have it under this bill.

And another thing. I confess I am a little discouraged when I hear some Members urge support of this bill on the ground that it is a potential relief bill. I did not know we were legislating in that field. I am not as yet sufficiently pessimistic to believe that one of the principal objectives of this bill is to provide employment for the unemployed. That is an entirely different problem.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I would respectfully suggest that if section 102 is allowed to remain in the bill, that in line 12 after the words "comparative urgency" there should be added the words "including political urgency."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The suggestion of the gentleman from Maine is worthy of serious consideration.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members in their second thought will give very serious consideration to this thing. I cannot believe that section 102 will add to the efficiency of the Post Office Department, and I dread its appearance in the law, because in the judgment of suspicious people around the country it will be regarded as an evidence of every Member getting something if he votes for the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it the view of the gentleman that section 102 tacitly, directly or indirectly, insures each Member of Congress that he will get a new post-office building in his district whether it is needed or not? I favor the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It certainly does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, with 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom that I find myself in disagreement with the illustrious gentleman from New York, my colleague on the Rules Committee [Mr. WADSWORTH]. In the Rules Committee we discussed this question which has been brought up in regard to section 102 of this bill. At first I was very much inclined to agree fully with the position taken by the gentleman from New York, but I call the attention of the members to the actual provisions in this section. If you will refer to lines 16 and 17 you will find that this section does not require the construction of a post office or facilities, or of any kind of a building, in every congressional district. It is simply provided in these lines for "the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects." So, in a case like that which was brought up by the gentleman from New York City, where he does not need a post office in his district, it is entirely possible, if not probable, he and the people of his district will benefit by the construction of a post office or a substation in New York City near his district.

After having reflected upon this matter and studied it carefully, after having first been impressed the same way as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that 102 was a bad section, I have come to the conclusion that the real portent of this section is to eliminate political considerations, to make sure that every part of the United States, every congressional district, will be treated fairly, but not necessarily that there will be a post-office building constructed in the district, but that every section of America will be given a fair portion of the benefits of the public building construction program which may be put into effect eventually.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the language in lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, which reads:

But which have been deferred—

Referring to projects already approved—shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If the gentleman will read the whole sentence, starting on line 19, it simply states this:

It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

That paragraph means that we are simply carrying out and putting into effect the projects which were held in abeyance as a result of the war, that no community is going to lose because it sacrificed during the war; that the community which was promised the post office, or for which money has been appropriated or the site has been purchased, is entitled to it now, and will not be cast aside now. In other words, it is only a matter of fair play. I do not see anything wrong with that provision.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I have listened to the arguments on this bill, and I thought it was argued quite conclusively that if this bill passes, it will assure to each congressional district, all 435 of them, participation in this program to the extent of selection of one site in each congressional district and providing for the plan of one building in each district.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If it is needed. But, not necessarily so, as long as the benefits go to the district.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is putting a rather strained construction upon the language in section 102, especially in view of the statements that have been made on the floor of the House by members of the committee itself.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. All the gentleman has to do is read the section carefully, as I have just read it.

Mr. KEEFE. I have read it carefully and must say to the gentleman that I disagree with him in his construction of the language.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio and the members of the Committee that sections 101 and 102 gave the committee as much trouble as anything we had to deal with. But, if the gentleman will note, what the committee sought to do was to see to it that in the selection of sites there should be an equitable distribution of the sites throughout the country.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And also that the benefits should be equitably distributed.

Mr. DONDERO. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] as a member of the committee, to close debate.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill which was originally introduced by me did not contain section 102, which the gentleman from New York proposes to strike out. It provided for the equitable distribution of post offices and public buildings, and when I say post offices, I mean public buildings, because some of them may be naturalization or border stations. We asked Mr. Reynolds, or at least a member of the committee asked him what this language meant, which says that in making such selections, they shall be distributed equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country. He said that was the best language he could devise, for one building in each district except the metropolitan area. He thought that equivalent language could be used, but he drafted the bill to do just what was done from 1926 to 1940; to wit, to provide that every congressional district should participate in this bill. That means except in metropolitan areas there should be a public building. This bill does not provide for the construction of a post office in every district in New York City. The language contemplates that New York City shall participate. Something happened after 1937. There was a redistricting in the United States following the 1940 census, and there was an impounding of funds. So we asked Mr. Reynolds if he intended in this equitable distribution to do what was done under previous acts which provided that there should be a post office where the receipts were in excess of $10,000, the area and population also being considered. He said that is exactly what he proposed to do. He said that meant one building in every congressional district where it was needed, or participation in the metropolitan area. That is exactly what we have done, and we thought that in order to provide for these districts where the funds have been impounded, and where it was right for them to have another building and in order for them to be put on a basis of equality that this language should be written in the bill. So, section 102 is included in the bill.

The gentleman from New York proposes to strike out this language:

> It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects.

In other words, the committee provides that this post office shall be eligible for plans and for construction. I think that is right, and if you strike this language, then I say you have done those people an injustice. I have no objection to the language in section 101. We asked Mr. Reynolds what the words "equitable distribution" meant. He said they meant a post office in every one of the districts except in the metropolitan areas. He said every district ought to participate. They may need substations in the metropolitan area. They may need warehouses. We then drafted this language. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is more responsible for that language than anyone else. We asked Mr. Reynolds if this language conveyed any different intent. I do not think it is necessary, gentlemen, to cover up or conceal anything, if we mean to provide for every congressional district and the small towns of ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand population where, as a result of the laws reported by the committee of which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is a member, the need is just as urgent and on account of increased parcel-post business and other mail, there is scarcely room for the postmistress even to stand to serve the public, in some of the smaller post offices outside of the metropolitan area. In my judgment, inasmuch as the language that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would retain in this bill means, if translated, just exactly what the language in section 102 means, and inasmuch as section 102 protects those districts where their funds were impounded, and inasmuch as there has been a population census in 1940 which changed the situation some places, many districts would be deprived of a building, I respectfully submit that there is not any reason why the Congress should not spell out and say just what we have been doing. I trust the amendment may be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

All time has expired on this amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 23, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 3, line 25, insert after the word "selected" a comma and the following: "or constructed."
> On page 4, line 1, strike out the words "this title" and insert "sections 101 and 102."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is undertaking to combine two propositions in one amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, since these are all germane to the body of the bill that we consider all of these amendments together.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have a very high regard for the gentleman's views, but the first amendment the gentleman has offered inserts the words "or constructed." Inasmuch as the matter of construction is not embraced in this bill, I think we should pass on that first. For that reason, I think we should take them up separately, and I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir. I grant that the point of order is well taken, but if we are going to separate it that way, unless we have one of the other amendments which I propose, there is no construction in the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman wants to have the amendments read for information, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOBBS. The only point is, of course, that unless we have one of the other amendments which I propose to offer, then there is no construction in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] if he wishes to ask unanimous consent to have all of his amendments read for the information of the Committee.

Mr. HOBBS. I do so request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendments offered by Mr. HOBBS:
>
> On page 3, line 25, after the word "selected" insert a comma and the following: "or constructed."
> On page 4, line 1, strike out the words "this title" and insert "sections 101 and 102."
>
> After line 5, insert the following section:
>
> "SEC. 104. (a) In addition to the projects referred to in sections 101 and 102—
>
> "(1) During the first 3-year period following the date of enactment of this act and during each succeeding 3-year period, sites shall be acquired, and plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications shall be prepared, for the construction of at least three post-office buildings in each congressional district in communities where there is no federally owned post-office building, but only if the post office in the community has had $10,000 or more of receipts during the preceding fiscal year; at least two of such post-office buildings shall be constructed in each congressional district during the first 3-year period, and at least three of such post-office buildings shall be so constructed during each succeeding 3-year period:

"(2) There shall be constructed, after acquisition of a site and the preparation of plans, swetches, working drawings, and specifications, a post-office building in each county seat or community where a county courthouse is in use for the purpose of holding regular sessions of court, and where there is no federally owned post-office building, but only if the post office in such community has had $5,000 or more of receipts during the preceding fiscal year.

The Postmaster General, the Federal Works Administrator, and the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall act jointly in carrying out the provisions of this section; and bids for the construction of any post-office building under this section shall be subject to their joint approval.

"(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. Such sums, when appropriated, shall remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he still insists on his point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the point of order was that a Member could not offer three amendments at the same time.

I ask that the amendment be divided and that we consider the first part of the amendment, page 3, line 25.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, granting the gentleman's point of order and his demand that the amendment be divided, I wish to ask unanimous consent that the first amendment to be read be that on page 4, after line 5 inserting a new section. I ask unanimous consent to offer that as the first amendment. This is the one that provides for construction. It would not make sense to refer to "construction" when no construction is provided otherwise.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is the reason I thought the gentleman ought to have offered them separately. I agree with the gentleman that otherwise it does not make sense. I think the matter of construction settles the entire question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment inserting a new section 104 (a).

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS:

Page 4, after line 5, insert the following section:

"SEC. 104 (a). In addition to the projects referred to in sections 101 and 102—

"(1) During the first 3-year period following the date of enactment of this act and during each succeeding 3-year period, sites shall be acquired, and plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications shall be prepared, for the construction of at least three post-office buildings in each congressional district in communities where there is no federally owned post-office building, but only if the post office in the community has had $10,000 or more of receipts during the preceding fiscal year; at least two of such post-office buildings shall be constructed in each congressional district during the first 3-year period, and at least three of such post-office buildings shall be so constructed during each succeeding 3-year period;

"(2) There shall be constructed, after acquisition of a site and the preparation of plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications, a post-office building in each county seat or community where a county courthouse is in use for the purpose of holding regular sessions of court, and where there is no federally owned post-office building, but only if the post office in such community has had $5,000 or more of receipts during the preceding fiscal year.

The Postmaster General, the Federal Works Administrator, and the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall act jointly in carrying out the provisions of this section; and bids for the construction of any post-office building under this section shall be subject to their joint approval.

"(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. Such sums, when appropriated, shall remain available until expended."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this amendment, as stated in general debate which the chairman of the committee was so gracious as to allow me time to explain, is simply that during the first 3-year period after the enactment of this bill and immediately upon the agreement of the committee, composed of the Postmaster General, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Reynolds, the plans of the sites acquired before the plans are drawn, for 3 post offices in each congressional district, shall be drawn and prepared and the sites acquired. Then during the first 3-year period 2 post office buildings shall be constructed, not just planned but constructed, in every congressional district. After that the regular routine program which we have operated under since 1926, except during the war when it was temporarily abandoned, shall be resumed, 3 in every congressional district every 3 years—in other words, an average of 1 a year.

Then we have the provision that the committee, composed of the Postmaster General, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Reynolds, shall have the veto power when bids are too high to be reasonable, and therefore, it will be in their discretion to comply with the order of this amendment to begin the construction program. It will only be in their discretion where unreasonable bids may be found.

Then I wind up by authorizing the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives to make such appropriation as it sees fit to carry out the manifest intention of this amendment. Only when those authorized appropriations have been made does this become effective.

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. If this committee, composed of Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Fleming, or whoever serves on that committee, should say that it is necessary to build three post offices in my congressional district, and that money is being spent for post offices that are unnecessary in my congressional district, am I to stand by and see that money appropriated and spent uselessly, or should I stand up on this floor and oppose that appropriation?

Mr. HOBBS. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that the appropriation question has not risen as yet. This is an amendment to a very good bill which the gentleman's very fine committee drew. It says in the bill that nothing shall be done which is unnecessary, in the judgment of the committee, composed of General Fleming, the Postmaster General, and Mr. Reynolds, of the Public Buildings Administration. So we are amply protected in that regard. You certainly can rely on the Committee on Appropriations of the House and of the other body, for that matter, not to appropriate any money for the building of this post office.

Mr. BUCKLEY of New York. I would be ready and willing to vote for any congressional district that would need two, three, or four post offices, but I would not want a post office put in my district which I would consider a waste of money, knowing that at the present time we have post offices in my congressional district sufficient to take care of the wants of the people.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is exactly right and all of us join with the gentleman in that statement.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. Ever since I have been in the Congress I have endeavored to be of all assistance possible to the people of my district in the matter of securing needed construction of Federal office buildings and post offices. Yet I realize that the problem in the connection which holds in my district is not unique. I am sure that virtually every Member of this body has a similar problem in his district and the only way we can do something about it here today is to support this measure which the distinguished gentleman from Alabama has proposed here today.

It has been nearly 12 years now since the Government had an active construction program for Federal buildings. We ought to resume that program at the earliest possible time.

The bill which we are considering here today is mild enough and I believe that the proposed amendments will guarantee a margin of safety to assure the lowest possible cost of construction and that we will not have to worry about excessive costs at this time when costs of construction of all types are matters for serious consideration.

In my own district there are instances of most pressing need for Federal buildings and post offices. It is a case of most acute necessity which can no longer be overlooked. These people are entitled to some consideration in this regard from the Government. In a great many instances, as we all know, populations and the post-office receipts of formerly small post offices have risen sharply during and since the war and their present facilities are inadequate. There is no valid reason to wait any longer to start this program. The shortage of materials has eased. There is an ample labor supply, as we all know.

Another factor which we cannot afford to overlook at this time is the tremendous rental bill the Government is forced to meet each year simply because there are not Federal buildings in the many instances where they are needed. But I want to emphasize that while these rents are, of course, large in places where the population is great and the need is acute, I do not think we should overlook the situations wherein smaller towns are affected. It would be most unfair and unwise to make provisions for larger cities and neglect or overlook smaller towns.

Passage of such legislation as this is most pressing and most important and we have waited long enough to act. Cessation of construction for a period of 12 years is too long—although we can all understand the interim period of the war. I sincerely trust that we may act decisively in this connection here today and get this program underway. The surest cushion economically in this country is some form of Federal building construction program. The Hobbs amendment should be adopted. Let us not wait longer to inaugurate a genuine construction program.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PERKINS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Add a new section 101 (a) as follows:

"In addition to the projects referred to in section 101 and 102, and where the congressional district does not have any deferred projects or plans therefor.

"(1) The Federal Works Administrator is authorized and empowered to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange, or otherwise, lands or interest in lands as sites for post offices in county seats where a county courthouse is in use for the purpose of holding regular sessions of court, in lieu of selection made under sections 101 and 102, and where there is no federally owned post-office building, but only if the post office in such county seat has had $5,000 or more of receipts during the preceding fiscal year."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, there should not be any objection to this substitute amendment. In fact, if you will notice in the hearings where eligible projects are listed, under Kentucky, you will find that there is not an eligible project for the Seventh Congressional District. My amendment only takes care of my own district, so far as I know. I infer from the statement of the Chairman of the Committee made here today.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, with all due deference this would not take care of the gentleman's congressional district as well as the provisions of this bill. The proposed substitute would limit the building for post-office purposes only. I stated in my explanation of this bill that there was one congressional district in Kentucky where the postal receipts were not $10,000, and there would be eligible under the terms of this bill for construction of a building for post office, agriculture, and other purposes, and you merely destroy the provision we make for you under the terms of this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state that I have taken this matter up with the Post Office Department and with the Federal Works Administration, and they tell me that the two counties in my district, which counties do not have a Federal building, cannot qualify under the present $10,000-receipts-requirement law.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But I told the gentleman that he could qualify for one post office as provided in this bill, and on that I stand, and it would be a better bill if the gentleman would withdraw the substitute.

Mr. PERKINS. In my district we have three counties without a Federal building, and in these three counties we have the Federal Security Agency, the Agricultural Department, the welfare workers and draft board, all renting property. We need post-office buildings, and these counties cannot qualify under the present receipts requirement law. This amendment is only applicable to the counties that cannot qualify under sections 101 and 102 of the bill. So, therefore, I cannot see any objection to the substitute amendment.

My amendment will make it possible to authorize the purchase of a post-office site in those counties where we do not have a post-office building. There is very little industry in those counties in my district where the receipts are below $10,000. A poor road system exists and as a result we do not have but few star routes and many small post offices scattered over those counties. These are the reasons that the gross yearly receipts in the post offices located at the county seats are so small.

If the substitute amendment is not adopted, it means there will not be any post-office buildings constructed in my congressional district. That is the information I have from the Post Office Department and from the Public Works Administrator, inasmuch as they say that none of the counties can qualify under the present $10,000 receipts requirement.

I ask you to support my substitute amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting indeed to hear about all the post offices in the country that may not qualify for a building because they do not have the necessary $10,000 a year worth of business, and it certainly is delightful to hear that some congressional districts do not need any new post offices at all. I know how pleasant it is to stand up and talk about getting a nice new building in your congressional district. But mine is a cry of pain on behalf of my own congressional district.

Many of us like to boast about having the finest, greatest, fastest growing district in the United States. I have quit boasting. I am crying. My district is growing, I believe, at the rate of 7,000 people a month. At the present time it is variously estimated that it has grown to between 800,000 and 1,000,000 people from the 350,000 shown in the 1940 census.

You talk about one post office. One post office would not be a drop in the bucket in my district. We badly need 17 new post offices right now. They are racking mail in the coal bins, and goodness knows why they need coal bins in California. We never use coal for heating in California. It would be very interesting to know why they design coal bins for post offices in California, when we use gas and oil exclusively. So I should like to know from the chairman of the committee if, under the bill as it is presently written, it is possible, in a district that has grown so large and so painfully fast as mine has, for something to be done to get us out of our troubles in respect to post offices by acquiring enough sites to get started on some buildings pretty quick. Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would say the only information I have is the information the gentleman has given the committee, that the committee considered it, and it is contained in the report of Mr. Reynolds to the committee, appearing in the hearings. We understood that in Los Angeles the situation is desperate, and under the terms of this bill we believe the flexibility authority is as much as we can give for enlargement and for other buildings.

Mr. HINSHAW. Somebody wrote a song a while back about wanting to make his home in the San Fernando Valley, or words to that effect. I represent the San Fernando Valley. It seems to me that everybody in the United States is making his home there right now. It is terrific. Twelve thousand building permits a year are granted in that one area alone, and some 16,000 building permits a year in my congressional district, at least, although I have no way of obtaining the accurate figure. It is a painful growth because it is so rapid. I hope and trust that the Federal Works Administrator and the Post Office Department together will find the truth of the very great urgency which we are experiencing there. The mail clerks and the mail carriers are having almost to stand on each other's shoulders to rack up the mail. It is terriffic. This bill is better than nothing but it is a long way short of meeting the critical situation in the Twentieth District of California and others like it. I know that the Post Office Department is fully aware of the facts, and I can only hope that the Department will be given sufficient freedom to take the necessary actions under their interpretation of the terms of this bill.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, my first remarks I want to direct specifically to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS]. I do not know what his situation is, because I have not investigated it, but I am going to accept his word for it that he has three counties in the Seventh Congressional District of Kentucky that under the terms of this bill cannot qualify to be eligible for construction of a Federal post-office building. That would mean that three counties in the district do not have a town where the postal receipts gross the sum of $10,000 per annum. I take it from what he further said in response to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], none of these three counties has a town in them which could qualify for a multiple-purpose Federal building where the postal receipts totaled a gross of $6,000 per year, and there are other Federal agencies in the county which would be housed within the buildings. Those two items I mention are provided for in this bill. Am I correct in my understanding, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS]? Am I correct that those three counties do not have a single post office where the receipts gross $6,000 per year, where you could construct a building to house post-office facilities as well as other agencies of the Government? Is tnat correct?

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. PICKETT. If I may proceed for just a minute, I will yield to the gentleman to answer any questions he may have. I might say, with all due deference, that the gentleman is one of the few Members in the Congress today who has as few as three counties in his district with that situation. Many of us have that many and more. You cannot expect this committee or the Congress to give special consideration to special pleas for special districts and be fair to everybody in the country at the same time. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] has just made one of the most appealing arguments that I can conceive of in that connection. Perhaps some of your folks from Kentucky went to Mr. HINSHAW's district and increased his demand out there. I do not know. I think some of my people from east Texas went out there and increased his demand, but I am glad that the song Don't Fence Me In applied to many of those people who left my district and went to his, because we do not want most of them back. Of course, we are sorry to lose some who moved. However, I will say, in all fairness to the gentleman from Kentucky, that if he is pleading for special consideration in this bill, I believe he is asking for more than any of us is entitled to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that this is a public works bill in that we are setting up a public-works program. These three counties, whose gross receipts are inadequate to qualify them under the present law, do not have industries. They do not have roads, as other counties in my district. As a result they do not have star mail routes, which increase postal receipts, as I understand. In a situation like that, if we are going to set up a public-works program here which will take care of unemployment when a recession or depression comes, why should not we make exceptions in cases of this kind?

Mr. PICKETT. May I say to the gentleman I think he is under misapprehension as to the purpose and intent of this piece of legislation. We are not trying to boondoggle here for the benefit of an unemployment situation which has not yet arrived. We are trying to provide facilities to house the business of the Government of the United States and its Post Office Department. We cannot be concerned in this bill with authorizing the acquisition of sites and planning the construction of a building in a community where the postal receipts do not justify such action. We may get to that point some of these days. If that time comes, then I will be one of the first to help the gentleman get his counties included in a bill. But, at the present time, we are trying to provide for a program throughout the entire United States which will meet the needs of the Post Office Department so that it can render service to the people in communities where the business is sufficient and justifies the construction of Federal buildings.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the gentleman understand my amendment to be effective only in the event that sections 101 and 102 of the present bill were inapplicable?

Mr. PICKETT. I did not pay that much attention to the gentleman's amendment, but I gathered that the gentleman is asking for special treatment.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to advise the gentleman that that is the purpose and intent of my amendment, and I think the language clearly so indicates.

Mr. PICKETT. The purpose and intent, so far as I can see, is that the gentleman is asking for special treatment, and I do not think any of us is entitled to that.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the so-called Hobbs amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, unless there are other Members who desire to speak, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama and the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, it is not pleasant for me to rise in opposition to an amendment offered by my warm and delightful friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. But his amendment seeks to put in motion a rather ambitious program.

There are some 3,072 counties in the United States. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama proposes to build a post office in every county seat in every county in the United States. The bill before us seeks but one post office in every congressional district, or 435. I am aware, as are many other Members, that there are many counties in this country—I know there are some in the upper part of my own State—where the population of the county seat is small; where the post office is not conducted in any Federal building, but is conducted in connection with a grocery store or a meat store or some other commercial establishment. It is not warranted for the Federal Government to even own a building in such a county seat. If this amendment were adopted, it would mean the Federal Government would be obligated to build a Federal building in a county seat that might not have a population of more than 300 or 500 people. It is not based on need. Of course, that would be an absurd thing. It would not only be absurd but it would be a very expensive on the part of our Nation to even formulate a program of such proportion.

So I think the amendment offered by the gentleman is impracticable and should not be adopted, and I hope the House will vote it down.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. I am very grateful to you for the spirit in which you approach this matter and I am so grateful for the spirit you have always emphasized, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the limitation of $5,000 receipts.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes. I am aware that there is a limitation of $5,000 receipts in the gentleman's amendment. However, the act of 1926 sought to fix a limitation or a floor on the amount of receipts of a post office at $10,000, believing that that amount was a fair and reasonable amount to fix as a floor before any town would be eligible for a post office, I do not think that should be changed. It has not been shown that it is unjust or unreasonable. Therefore, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and to the substitute.

The bill under consideration provides for plans and for the acquisition of sites. Many bills were introduced and referred to our committee before we reached a conclusion.

We have here this afternoon one of the most remarkable situations that ever occurred in the Congress. Among other bills introduced was a bill by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], H. R. 19, which I hold in my hand. That bill provides that it is the intention of the Congress, in the enactment of this act, to provide for the acquisition of sites and the preparation of plans for such Federal buildings as may be deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, acting under the supervision of the Federal Works Administrator, in order that the Public Buildings Administration may be prepared to start construction of such buildings, outside the District of Columbia, when the economic conditions and the availability of materials, equipment, and manpower become such that the construction of such public buildings may be undertaken without adversely affecting the public welfare and the economic activities of the Nation.

The gentleman from Alabama, statesman that he is, was among the first to offer a bill for planning and for the acquisition of sites. H. R. 19 is substantially the provisions we have under consideration, and the continuance of section 2 in that bill is substantially the language we have in section 101 of the pending bill and which includes this language.

Then he included a post office in every county seat, no matter how big or how little. It only authorized an appropriation of $42,500,000.

The gentleman from Alabama, himself, in H. R. 19 advocated the very type of bill which this committee is presenting to wit, a bill for planning and for the acquisition of sites.

I condemn the gentleman's arguments with his own words, in his own bill, H. R. 19 from which I have read.

Now the gentleman comes along—splendid, fine statesman that he is—and in addition to planning, and in addition to providing for sites, without telling us that economic conditions justify it, authorizes the construction of one post office once a year for an indefinite period or in perpetuity; then in addition to that the construction of one post office at every county seat in the United States where the receipts are at least $5,000. The sky is the limit of his authorization.

We limited the authorization for preparing plans and acquiring sites to $40,000,000. Now the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] liberal-hearted, broad-minded stateman that he is, having advocated that the committee report a bill for planning and for the acquisition of sites, supplements it now by offering an amendment that would provide for one post office building annually, no matter what the economic conditions were, and in addition to that I do not know how many post offices in county seats. The limit of his authorization would be the sky, because he says: "There are hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time such sums as may be necessary" and without any estimate; and, moreover, in addition, here is what would happen: It authorizes the building of three post-office buildings in every congressional district. In the city of Pittsburgh there are four or five congressional districts; in the city of New York there are 20 or more congressional districts. No wonder the sky is the limit; and the gentleman did not undertake to approximate the amount of the authorization.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. EVINS. I do not propose to state what the gentleman from Alabama had in mind——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the question, please?

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman from Alabama offered his amendment because the committee did not come forward with any bill for construction. I understand that is what motivated the gentleman from Alabama. I understand that is the reason why the gentleman offered his amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The best we could get after Congress had turned down some 3 years ago any sort of planning bill was the bill that we reported, recommended to us by the Federal Works Agency. This bill if passed provides for plans that it may take 2 years to prepare. This will be supplemented by other reports that may be adopted by this Congress or succeeding Congresses.

I respectfully urge that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, as well as the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky be voted down overwhelmingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment be again read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

(The Clerk again read the Perkins substitute amendment.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 33, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTEN: After section 102 add a new section, as follows:

"When any contract is offered or advertised for construction of any public building on any site acquired hereunder the Federal Works Administrator shall thereupon be authorized to acquire an additional site and prepare a plan for an additional building in such congressional district, under the same terms and conditions, as apply to acquisition of the first site, provided there is an area in such congressional district which qualifies for such additional public buildings on the basis set out for approval of the acquisition of the first site."

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment provides for a condition to take place after a construction has been authorized under the terms of the amendment. This bill does not authorize anything for construction, it does not seek to, yet the amendment has the effect of legislating in the bill not in compliance with the import of the bill itself.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, while this bill does not provide for the construction of any buildings, I think it is to be presumed it contemplates construction, else why spend $40,000,000 providing sites and making plans. I think, therefore, the bill clearly contemplates the construction of public buildings. My amendment provides that when construction is started, as it is contemplated by the bill before us, then the Public Works Administrator is authorized to acquire another site and prepare another set of plans. The amendment, I think, is germane and the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKETT. May I say that the bill intends to authorize the acquisition of sites and it is probably contemplated that when the Congress acts on this bill favorably it will later authorize a construction program. This bill does not contemplate any construction program.

Mr. WHITTEN. I still stick to my construction of the word "contemplate." In my opinion, this bill does contemplate the construction of Federal buildings. Insofar as providing for construction, of course, it does not. As I have said, why spend $40,000,000 for sites and plans if you do not intend to build.

Here is a point that I have tried to call to the attention of my good friends on this committee who have worked untiringly on this bill: In each congressional district there are a number of places that need post-office buildings. There are places where people cannot get a box in a post office and have to get their mail from general delivery; some have been on waiting lists for years. There are offices where there is no room for the post-office employees to work. There are a number of such places in each congressional district.

Let me tell you what is done under this bill. The Post Office Department will designate the one place in each district that gets a site and plans for a building, but this bill does not say that next year the Post Office Department will designate another one and the following year another. Under this bill one place is designated and the Congress will have to pass a new bill for the next one. If this bill passes, I hope the committee will bring in another bill because there are a number of places in each district which are almost equally in need of a new building.

The Post Office Department will have some rule for selection, such as amount of receipts, type of building now available, and things of that sort. You will be called on to recommend at least by the people at home if not by the Post Office Department. Now when one such site is acquired, the plans prepared, then when work is begun certainly we should select a site and prepare plans for a building in that area which has just as much need for it, but which perhaps has a little less total collections.

My amendment would not upset the committee bill a bit. It would say that when in the future money is provided and construction is started on a building, then these other places that are as much entitled to a building, but which do not have quite the cancellations or collections, shall be considered for the selection of a site and the putting up of a building. That is what my amendment does. I think the committee would have been wise to have so provided in the committee bill. In fact, from conversations with members of the committee, most of the members thought that was what the committee was going to do.

Of course, you may say this committee will bring in another bill. I have seen the time when it was mighty hard to get them to bring in a bill and when it took a long time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to my colleague from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the matter of construction comes before the Congress, it will have to come first before the Committee on Appropriations of which the gentleman is a Member, and then inasmuch as some of these projects are not in this bill, may I suggest that when the Committee on Appropriations considers it, that will be the proper time to bring up that question.

Mr. WHITTEN. According to the gentleman, heretofore these matters have been handled by the Committee on Appropriations. I think it would have been wiser to let the Committee on Appropriations handle it now in preference to providing for only one site and one set of plans. I have had letters from 20 or 30 postmasters. You do not plan to build anything. Why stir this matter up unless you are going to build? If you are going to act on the matter of selecting a site and providing a plan, why do you not provide for the treatment of similar places on a fair basis, the first, first, but the next should be right behind the first. If there are several places equally in need, or nearly so, certainly the Congress would want to deal fairly with all and not give one a post-office building and the others nothing.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. When the Congress appropriates money to build a post-office building in any town, the Government is authorized to do it, is it not?

Mr. WHITTEN. Well, that is my understanding though members of the Public Works Committee insist such appropriation would be subject to a point of order in the absence of a rule. But the Chairman has argued that the Committee on Appropriations has handled the matter heretofore. If so, why invite trouble bringing up this bill. If an authorization as provided by this bill is necessary, why not accept this amendment and make it a progressive matter so that those places equally in need will at least be in line.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. Did the gentleman understand the gentleman from Texas to say that this bill did not contemplate the construction?

Mr. WHITTEN. Well, the gentleman from Texas and I had some discussion about the meaning of the word "contemplate." Certainly, he is right that this bill does not provide for the construction. I think I am right in that it contemplates such construction, else why spend $40,000,000 for the acquisition of sites and the preparation of building plans?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute that I may yield to my friend, the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman spoke a moment ago about the situation in his district and which probably exists in every other congressional district where a post-office building needs additional lock boxes and other appurtenances to render capable and proper service to the people. Now, if the gentleman will look over title III of this bill he will see that the point that he discusses there is contemplated, if I may use the gentleman's language.

Mr. WHITTEN. Except that many buildings already have all sorts of triangles and rectangles now, trying to get enough boxes into a little rented building. Your provisions will not help a bit in the world.

Mr. PICKETT. If the gentleman will look further in the proposal and the hearings and the report he will find that his situation will probably be taken care of in a number of instances where this is contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard further?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, there probably is some basis for the point of order. However, the amendment provides this: The original act provides for the acquisition of sites, the making of plans, and I take it that the presumption would be that it is for the purpose of having buildings built in the future. The amendment, as I see it, would be germane, provided there is a presumption that the original act calls for the future building of buildings. It provides that when that is done, then the Public Works Administrator has the same authority for the selection and acquisition of an additional site and the preparation of additional plans. It is only on that theory that I can offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the worthwhileness of the gentleman's argument, but in view of the facts he is forced to sustain the point made by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 103. For carrying out the purposes of this title, including administrative, supervisory, traveling, and other expenses in connection therewith, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $40,000,000 to remain available until expended.

TITLE II—ACQUISITION OF SITES AND TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER SITES BY VARIOUS AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT

SEC. 201. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange or otherwise, land situate in the northwest section of the District of Columbia designated as squares 11, 19, 20, and 32, said land to be used wholly or in part together with other Government-owned land adjacent or in close proximity thereto as the site or sites for a departmental building or buildings project authorized to be constructed thereon.

SEC. 202. In order to provide a more suitable site for the new San Diego, Point Loma, Calif., Quarantine Station, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Federal Works Agency, without reimbursement, a parcel of land in the city of San Diego, county of San Diego, State of California, described as follows:

Commencing at an old stone monument marked "U. S. M. Thence north no degrees two minutes east along its east line one hundred and twelve feet to the place of beginning of the land to be described; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west two hundred and thirty-six feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east one hundred and fifteen feet; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west five hundred and forty-four feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east with fence line three hundred and forty-nine feet to the center of the Saginaw-Old Denton Road; thence south eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes east with the center of said road seven hundred and seventy and eight-tenths feet, to northeast corner of said tract, same being the northeast corner of said Bennett Aircraft Corporation's four and eighty-eight one-hundredths acre tract; thence south no degrees two minutes west four hundred and sixty-four feet to the place of beginning.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to transfer to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Works Agency for use of the Public Buildings Administration the following-described land, together with the improvements thereon:

A one hundred forty-nine and seven hundred and sixty-two one-thousandths acre tract of land lying and being in Tarrant County, Tex., particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point in the south line of the David Cook Survey in the center of Cantrell-Sansom Road, one thousand two hundred and ninety-one feet east of the southwest corner of said David Cook Survey, said point being the most southerly southeast corner of a tract of land deeded to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by Globe Aircraft Corporation on the 27th day of June 1947, said deed being on record in volume 1925, page 463, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Texas:

Thence north one-half degree east with fence line four thousand five hundred and sixteen feet, an iron post; thence south eighty-five and one-half degrees east with fence line nine hundred and sixty-seven feet, an iron post; thence south with fence line thirty feet, an iron post; thence south eighty-five degrees east with fence line seven hundred and twenty-six feet, a stake; thence north one-half degree west one hundred and twelve feet, a stake the southeast corner of a six and eight hundred and twenty-three one-thousandths-acre tract of land out of said David Cook Survey, deeded to the Defense Plant Corporation by the Globe Aircraft Corporation on the 20th day of April 1942, said deed being on record in volume 1530, page 357, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Texas; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west two hundred and thirty-six feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east one hundred and fifteen feet; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west five hundred and forty-four feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east with fence line three hundred and forty-nine feet to the center of the Saginaw-Old Denton Road; thence with the center of said road north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west one thousand one hundred and seventy-seven feet; south eighty-four degrees no minutes west one hundred and thirty-five feet; south seventy-two degrees no minutes west eight hundred feet; thence south three-fourths degree east with fence line two thousand one hundred and ninety feet; thence west with fence line two hundred and sixteen feet; thence south one-fourth degree east with fence line two thousand and seventy-four feet, a post in the east line of the Fort Worth and Denver City Railroad right-of-way; thence south thirty-seven degrees east with said right-of-way five hundred and eighty-three feet to the center of the Cantrell-Sansom Road in the south line of the David Cook Survey; thence east with the center of said road nine hundred and forty-two feet to the place of beginning.

(17) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to transfer to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Works Agency for use of the Public Buildings Administration the following described land, together with the improvements thereon:

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of ground, situated in the second ward of the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, together with the appurtenances, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the corner of Ninth Street (formerly Anderson Street and before that Hand Street) and Liberty Avenue; thence northerly by Ninth Street one hundred twelve and one-half feet to an alley; thence at right angles with the last line by said alley westwardly thirty-six feet eight inches to a point in a party wall; thence by a line in said party wall, parallel with Ninth Street, southwardly one hundred twelve and one-half feet to Liberty Avenue; thence eastwardly by the same avenue thirty-six feet eight inches to Ninth Street at the place of beginning.

(b) In the case of any real property transferred to the Federal Works Agency for the use of the Public Buildings Administration, pursuant to this section, by a corporation, all of the capital stock of which is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the Government, a conveyance to the United States of America, without representation or warranty, of all right, title, and interest of such corporation therein shall be made, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cancel notes or otherwise discharge the indebtedness to the Treasury of such corporation in an amount equal to the fair market value of the property at the time of the transfer of jurisdiction and control to the Federal Works Agency, which fair market value shall be determined by the Federal Works Administrator and the head of such corporation: Provided, however, That in the event the Federal Works Administrator and the head of such corporation shall fail to agree, the fair market value of such property shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 206. The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to assume permanent custody and control for the use of the Public Roads Administration, without reimbursement, the property located within the area known as Vancouver Barracks, in Vancouver, Wash., consisting of two buildings numbered 689 and 698, and five and three-tenths acres, more or less, of land described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the east line of West Reserve Street and the north line of East Fifth Street in the southeast quarter of section 27, township 2 north, range 1 east, Willamette meridian, in the city of Vancouver, county of Clark, State of Washington, which point is a bronze disk monument, said point being north twenty-two degrees thirty-seven minutes east, a distance of one thousand four hundred and seventy-four and seven-tenths feet; thence south eighty-three degrees ten minutes east, a distance of exactly forty-eight feet from the southeast corner of Amos Short donation land claim; thence north twenty-two degrees thirty-seven minutes east, a distance of two hundred and sixty-eight and three-tenths feet; thence south eighty-three degrees ten minutes east, a distance of eight hundred and sixty and six-tenths feet; thence south twenty degrees seventeen minutes west, a distance of two hundred and seventy-eight and eight-tenths feet; thence north eighty-five degrees twelve minutes west, a distance of exactly seventy-three feet; thence north eighty-three degrees ten minutes west, a distance of two hundred and eighty-four and five-tenths feet; thence north sixty-eight degrees twenty-three minutes west, a distance of sixty-one and five-tenths feet; thence north eighty-three degrees ten minutes west, a distance of four hundred and fifty-one and nine-tenths feet to the point of beginning.

Mr. WHITTINGTON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title II be considered as read and spread upon the minutes at this point, and that amendments to any part of the section be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 2?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, line 18, strike out "eighty" and insert "eight"; and on page 44, line 20, strike out "northearly" and insert "northerly."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 17 strike out lines 22, 23, and 24, and on page 18 strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, and insert, in lieu thereof, the following:

"(j) The Federal Works Administrator is hereby further authorized to retain for the use of the Public Buildings Administration temporary custody and control of the following-described buildings together with such personal property located therein as may be necessary, in his discretion, for use in connection therewith for a period ending not later than June 30, 1954: Provided, That on or before June 30, 1954, the Federal Works Administrator shall transfer custody and control over such buildings and any such personal property as may then remain therein, without reimbursement, to the Department having primary jurisdiction over the land on which such buildings are situated."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, this is really a clarifying amendment, and is made at the request of the Public Buildings Administration and the National Capital Parks. It has to do with the West Potomac Park housing development.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I am not familiar with this amendment. Will the gentleman explain it further?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It has just been brought to my attention that in the committee files there is a request for clarifying the language with respect to the West Potomac Park housing. I have here a letter dated April 19 to the committee stating that the Public Buildings Administration and the Department of the Interior have agreed upon this language. It substitutes "temporary" for "permanent" on page 17, line 24, and on page 18, in line 2, after "property" it adds "located therein." It is a clarifying amendment. Following that there is inserted the following in line 3, page 18, after "therewith" "for a period ending not later than June 30, 1954: Provided, That on or before June 30, 1954, the Federal Works Administrator shall transfer custody and control over such buildings and any such personal property as may then remain therein, without reimbursement, to the Department having primary jurisdiction over the land on which such buildings are situated."

That request was forwarded to me by the Public Buildings Administration, and I was advised that it was satisfactory to the Department of the Interior. It is to clarify the language as to West Potomac Park.

Mr. DONDERO. As I understand the meaning of the first part of the amendment, you changed "permanent" to "temporary"?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is right.

Mr. DONDERO. In what way will that affect the interest of the Government? Will it cost any money?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It will not cost anything more. There is no cost whatever in connection with this amendment. My understanding is that the purpose of the amendment is to facilitate continuing making available these buildings for Government use.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another clarifying amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 53, line 12, after the word "The", strike out "Reconstruction Finance Corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "War Assets Administrator."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a clarifying amendment. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, may I say to the gentleman from Michigan and the Members of the Committee of the Whole, suggested that amendment. It is a technical amendment. They said that the property was in the hands of the War Assets Administration, and the amendment merely substitutes War Assets for Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further clarifying amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 56, line 16, after the word "The" strike out "Reconstruction Finance Corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "War Assets Administrator."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to title II, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III—IMPROVEMENT OF EXISTING BUILDINGS

SEC. 301. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to formulate, undertake and prosecute a program for the renovation and improvement of federally owned buildings outside the District of Columbia for which funds are not otherwise available, including appurtenances and approaches thereto, that are under the control of the Public Buildings Administration for repair and preservation: Provided, That where necessary or desirable in carrying out the program herein authorized, additional land may be acquired to accommodate equipment or special appliances and devices proposed to be installed or to provide working areas to accomplish the objectives sought in this title: Provided further, That no project, the estimated cost of which is less than $25,000, shall be deemed to be eligible for the program authorized by this title.

SEC. 302. For carrying out the purposes of this title, including administrative, supervisory, traveling, and other expenses in connection therewith, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $30,000,000 to remain available until expended.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard the story of these districts which are heavily populated and in which there has been a great gain in population in recent times so that the post-office facilities are inadequate. I appreciate the problem that confronts the committee and I congratulate the committee upon the very fine job that it has done in bringing out this bill. But I would like to make sure my thinking on it is correct and I therefore ask the chairman of the committee if he could clear up this point for me. I anticipate that after the next census, the district I have the honor to represent will be divided. In that event, will the allocation provided in section 102 apply to the new districts? Will each district be entitled to a post office or will the area embraced in the present district, which actually represents the population of 2 districts have to be content with one post office? On the answer to that question will depend my position on the bill.

I wonder if the chairman of the committee would be kind enough to give me his interpretation of the point that I have presented to him?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would assume that before the Congress has acted upon any redistricting, there will be a report, as provided in this bill, submitted to the Eighty-second Congress when it convenes, and that that report would cover the district as it is at present.

Mr. MILLER of California. I want to point out that as far as it now stands, list No. 1 in the report of hearings contains 21 recommendations for new post offices, at least 2 of which were approved prior to the curtailment of the building program prior to the war. In each of these two cases sites were purchased for post-office buildings.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because I think that by 1951 my district will be divided into two and a half districts at least, or possibly into three. It makes a very important question of fact to be determined.

Mr. MILLER of California. I might point out that in the West, all of the Western States are concerned, and we do want to protect the interests of these new districts which will come into being with the redistribution of seats in the House as a result of the 1950 census.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. I would like to point out that Florida is involved in this as well as California.

Mr. MILLER of California. That is true. I am speaking for all districts that are in the same situation. I would just like to make it a matter of record for the future thinking of the committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am glad to have the gentleman's comments. It will be considered in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] if one of them will please explain what is the meaning of the words in the third paragraph on page 2 of the report. Now that we have voted down the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and have voted to leave in the back-scratching section 102, it seems to me it becomes important to know whether the wording of the bill or the wording of the report is to take precedence, because they seem to be somewhat at variance.

In explaining section 102, the committee report in the third paragraph says, "except that in metropolitan areas containing more than one congressional district which will also participate in the benefits, there shall be located in each congressional district not less than one project as a part of the program authorized by title I of the bill."

I do not find in section 102 any exception relating to these metropolitan areas. I may be in error but I would appreciate an explanation of that apparent inconsistency in the language of the bill and the report.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is substantially synonymous with the language in section 102 which says that every congressional district shall participate in the benefits of this legislation.

Mr. KEATING. But the report says that in the metropolitan areas, which contain more than one congressional district, it will not participate in the benefits. I happen to represent a metropolitan area which has two congressional districts.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It would not be necessary to construct another post-office building in that congressional district, but there might be a substation, and it will participate in the benefits. There is no substantial contradiction between the language of the report and the language of the bill. It means the same thing.

Mr. KEATING. In New York City, for instance, there would not be construction in each of the congressional districts of New York City?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We had New York City in mind when we used the word "metropolitan."

Mr. KEATING. But it does apply to any metropolitan area?

Mr. DONDERO. It does.

Mr. KEATING. Of course, I regret deeply that the Members did not accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. It seemed to me very sound and I have great difficulty in going along with this bill without it.

Mr. DONDERO. May I say to the gentleman that the purpose of section 102 was to get away from the back-scratching idea.

Mr. KEATING. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I do not think it does. I think the great Committee on Public Lands has usually been more successful in drafting legislation to express their intention than they were on that particular section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. (a) In addition to the authority conferred upon him by any other law the Commissioner of Public Buildings, whenever he deems it desirable or advantageous, is authorized to employ, by contract or otherwise and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or to the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations or to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, the services of established architectural or other professional or technical corporations, firms, or individuals, to such extent as he may require for any public building project which the Public Buildings Administration is authorized by Congress to construct, or for any such project, funds for which are transferred by another agency to the Public Buildings Administration for construction of the project, regardless of specific legislation governing such other agency: Provided, That this authorization shall not apply to the employment of such corporations, firms, or individuals on a permanent basis, but their services shall be limited to the individual project for which employed: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall relieve the Commissioner of Public Buildings or any other duly authorized contracting officer of the Public Buildings Administration who shall execute a construction contract from the responsibility of interpreting such contract, of passing on the acceptability of materials and workmanship supplied pursuant to such contract, of approving changes in such contract during the construction period, of certifying vouchers for payments becoming due the contractor, or of effecting final settlement of the contract.

(b) The Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby authorized, whenever he deems it to be in the public interest, to hold a competition for the design of any project, to stipulate the terms, scope, and the conditions of each such competition and to make awards in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 402. The third paragraph of section 5 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, is hereby deleted and the following is hereby substituted therefor:

"With respect to sites or additions to sites acquired under this act, the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby authorized, in his discretion to rent, until they are needed for construction purposes, such sites or additions to sites and any improvements located thereon not reserved by the vendors, at a fair rental value and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem to be in the public interest. Such rentals may be deposited into a common fund account or accounts in the Treasury, and notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1932 (40 U. S. C. 303b), shall be available to pay the cost of such maintenance, repair, and alterations of any improvements located on such sites or additions to sites as is necessary to keep them in rentable condition and for the establishment of necessary reserves therefor: Provided, That except for such necessary reserves, as determined by the Commissioner, the unobligated balances of rentals so deposited into the Treasury shall be covered at the end of each fiscal year into miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That with respect to improvements on such sites or additions to sites which are suitable for residential purposes only and the estimated annual rentals of which will not exceed $1,200, the Commissioner may enter into leases without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended."

SEC. 403. Section 5 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), is hereby amended to delete the following words which appear at the end of the last paragraph thereof: "and to charge against the total sum of $150,000,000 hereinbefore authorized only the respective net excess cost, if any, over and above the proceeds of such sales, or providing such new sites and buildings," and after the words "miscellaneous receipts" change the comma to a period.

SEC. 404. The Federal Works Administrator, together with the Postmaster General where his office is concerned, is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of real, personal, or other property in aid of any project or function within their respective jurisdictions.

SEC. 405. The provisions of section 601 of the Economy Act, approved June 30, 1932, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the Public Buildings Administration to furnish services in the continental United States, on the basis of full reimbursement, at the request of the State Department, to any international body with which the United States Government is affiliated.

SEC. 406. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to contract for seeding, planting, or landscaping the grounds of any public building constructed or acquired by the Public Buildings Administration in an amount not exceeding $1,800, without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 407. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to procure space in the District of Columbia by lease, upon such terms and for such period, not in excess of 1 year, as he may deem in the public interest, for the housing of any Federal agency or agencies, except the Post Office Department, and to assign and reassign such space. As used in this section, the term "Federal Agency" means any executive department (except the Post Office Department), independent establishment, commission, board, bureau, in the executive branch, or other agency of the United States, including wholly owned Government corporations.

SEC. 408. The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to enter into such agreements with the city of Chicago, Ill., as he shall deem necessary and in the public interest, in connection with the construction by the said city of a superhighway through the Congress Street Post Office located in said city. For the purposes of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as shall be necessary to defray such cost, if any, which said Administrator shall determine should be borne by the United States as an incident to the construction by the said city of the superhighway through said post office.

SEC. 409. The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress promptly after the convening of each new Congress, reports showing the location and the approximate accommodations of such public building projects throughout the United States, its Territories and possessions, as they shall find eligible to be constructed in accordance with applicable statutory provisions. Such reports shall indicate the limit of cost of each project when in excess of $200,000. When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. The report herein provided for shall supersede the report required by the Public Buildings Act of 1926 (44 Stat. 630, as amended).

SEC. 410. The Federal Works Administrator, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, is authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to change or rechange the name or designation of any building in the custody and jurisdiction of the Federal Works Agency.

SEC. 411. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the foregoing provisions are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

Mr. WHITTINGTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, this title is covered fully in the report. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the title may be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point and be open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. MANSFIELD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3662) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 222, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill has passed the other body. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 714) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes, and shall move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of H. R. 3662.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of the bill (H. R. 3662) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States, and to provide certain adidtional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes, as passed by the House, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Public Buildings Act of 1949."

TITLE I—COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING OF FEDERAL PUBLIC BUILDINGS OUTSIDE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SEC. 101. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange, or otherwise, lands or interests in lands as sites or additions to sites for Federal public building projects previously authorized and for such new projects as may be selected in the manner designated in this section, to make investigations and studies and to prepare plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications for such projects. Whenever the Federal Works Administrator shall determine such action to be necessary, such investigations, studies, preparation of plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications, may be undertaken prior to the approval of title to the sites by the Attorney General. When buildings to be used in whole or in part for post-office purposes are involved, the Federal Works Administrator, shall act jointly with the Postmaster General in the selection of towns or cities in which buildings are to be constructed, and in the choice of sites therein for such projects. The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress a comprehensive report of all eligible projects and their limits of cost when in excess of $200,000, without regard to the time in which they may be undertaken, which report shall be printed as a public document. When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. Selection of projects for the purposes of this title shall be made by the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General from such report and they may also select such other projects not included in such report which in their judgment are economically sound and advantageous to the public service: Provided, That in making such selections they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

SEC. 102. It is the intent of the Congress that the equitable distribution of selected projects required by section 101 of this title shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects. It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

SEC. 103. For carrying out the purposes of this title, including administrative, supervisory, traveling, and other expenses in connection therewith, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $40,000,000 to remain available until expended.

TITLE II—ACQUISITION OF SITES AND TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER SITES BY VARIOUS AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT

SEC. 201. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange, or otherwise, land situate in the northwest section of the District of Columbia designated as squares 11, 19, 20, and 32, said land to be used wholly or in part together with other Government-owned land adjacent or in close proximity thereto as the site or sites for a departmental building or buildings project authorized to be constructed thereon.

SEC. 202. First tract: Beginning at the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 26, township 23 south, range 9 west, New Mexico principal meridian; running thence due south four hundred and fifty feet, more or less, to the Southern Pacific Railroad right-of-way; thence southwesterly along said right-of-way two thousand six hundred and fifty feet, more or less, to the west line of said quarter section; thence due north along said west line of said quarter section five hundred and fifty-two feet, more or less; thence due east five hundred and twelve feet; thence due north two hundred eighty-four and four-twelfths feet, more or less; to the north line of said quarter section; thence along said north line of said quarter section in an easterly direction to the place of beginning.

Second tract: Beginning at a point on the southeast line of the right-of-way of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, which point is described as being three hundred ninety-six and forty-one one hundredths feet along said right-of-way, northeasterly, from another point which is five hundred forty-seven and nine-tenths feet north and eight hundred and thirty-three feet east of the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 26, township 23 south, range 9 west, of New Mexico principal meridian; being the northerly corner of the premises conveyed to Wah Brothers by Charles B. Allaire and wife, by deed dated August 10, 1899, and recorded in book 37 of deeds, at pages 200-201, in the office of the County Clerk of Grant County, and transferred to book C, at pages 618-619 of the Deed Records of Luna County; thence north fifty-two degrees five minutes east along the south boundary line of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe right-of-way aforesaid to the point where said boundary line intersects the north and south line separating sections 25 and 26, township 23 south, range 9 west, aforesaid; thence south along said line separating said sections 25 and 26 to a point on said line one hundred and sixty-five feet north of the east and west line connecting the centers of sections 25 and 26 aforesaid; thence north sixty-seven degrees fifteen minutes west, along the northeast boundary line of the property conveyed to Wah Brothers as aforesaid, one thousand six hundred twenty and five-tenths feet to the place of beginning; excepting and reserving from said premises one acre on which now stands a brick powder house, being the land conveyed by John A. Raithel and wife to the Safety Nitra Powder Company by a deed dated April 26, 1889, and recorded in book 28 of deeds, at pages 51-52, in the office of the County Clerk of Grant County, and transferred to book C at pages 441-442 of the Deed Records of Luna County.

Third tract: Beginning at the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 26, township 23 south, range 9 west, New Mexico principal meridian; running thence north approximately one hundred and sixty-five feet to a point just south of the county road; thence north sixty-seven degrees fifteen minutes west approximately one thousand five hundred and forty-five feet along the southerly line of said county road; thence south approximately seven hundred and seventy feet to a point on the south line of the northeast quarter of section 26; thence east approximately one thousand four hundred and twenty feet to the point of beginning.

Fourth tract: An easement across the land lying westerly of the above described third tract of land, for the purpose of installing a railroad spur to run into the said third tract of land, which railway spur is to come off of the Atchison, Topeko & Santa Fe Railway, the said railway spur to run northerly of the mill which has been constructed on the tract of land westerly of the said third tract of land; said easement to remain in full force and effect as long as said railway spur is maintained and used.

(15) The War Assets Administration is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Works Agency, without reimbursement, for use of the Public Buildings Administration the following-described land, together with the improvements thereon:

A six and eight hundred and twenty-three one-thousandths acre tract of land lying and being in Tarrant County, Texas, particularly described as follows: Beginning at the most easterly southeast corner of a tract of land deeded to the Defense Corporation by the Globe Aircraft Corp. on the 20th day of April 1942, also recorded in volume 1530, page 357, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Texas; said beginning corner also being the southeast corner of a four and eighty-eight one-hundredths acre tract deeded to the Bennett Aircraft Corp. by John Kennedy, et ux, on the 20th day of March 1940, said deed being on record in volume 1425, page 500, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Texas:

Thence north no degrees two minutes east along its east line one hundred and twelve feet to the place of beginning of the land to be described; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west two hundred and thirty-six feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east one hundred and fifteen feet; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west five hundred and forty-four feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east with fence line three hundred and forty-nine feet to the center of the Saginaw-Old Denton Road; thence south eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes east with the center of said road seven hundred and seventy and eight-tenths feet, to northeast corner of said tract, same being the northeast corner of said Bennett Aircraft Corp.'s four and eighty-eight one-hundredths acre tract; thence south no degrees two minutes west four hundred and sixty-four feet to the place of beginning.

(16) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to transfer to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Works

Agency for use of the Public Buildings Administration the following-described land, together with the improvements thereon:

A one hundred forty-nine and seven hundred and sixty-two one-thousandths acre tract of land lying and being in Tarrant County, Texas, particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point in the south line of the David Cook Survey in the center of Cantrell-Sansom Road, one thousand two hundred and ninety-one feet east of the southwest corner of said David Cook Survey, said point being the most southerly southeast corner of a tract of land deeded to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by Globe Aircraft Corp. on the 27th day of June 1947, said deed being on record in volume 1925, page 463, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Texas.

Thence north one-half degree east with fence line four thousand five hundred and sixteen feet, an iron post; thence south eighty-five and one-half degrees east with fence line nine hundred and sixty-seven feet, an iron post; thence south with fence line thirty feet, an iron post; thence south eighty-five degrees east with fence line seven hundred and twenty-six feet, a stake; thence north one-half degree west one hundred and twelve feet, a stake the southeast corner of a six and eight hundred and twenty-three one-thousandths-acre tract of land out of said David Cook Survey, deeded to the Defense Plant Corporation by the Globe Aircraft Corp. on the 20th day of April 1942, said deed being on record in volume 1,550, page 357, Deed Records of Tarrant County, Tex.; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west two hundred and thirty-six feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east one hundred and fifteen feet; thence north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west five hundred and forty-four feet; thence north one degree ten minutes east with fence line three hundred and forty-nine feet to the center of the Saginaw-Old Denton Road; thence with the center of said road north eighty-eight degrees fifty minutes west one thousand one hundred and seventy-seven feet; south eighty-four degrees no minutes west one hundred and thirty-five feet; south seventy-two degrees no minutes west eight hundred feet; thence south three-fourths degree east with fence line two thousand one hundred and ninety feet; thence west with fence line two hundred and sixteen feet; thence south one-fourth degree east with fence line two thousand and seventy-four feet, a post in the east line of the Fort Worth and Denver City Railroad right-of-way; thence south thirty-seven degrees east with said right-of-way five hundred and eighty-three feet to the center of the Cantrell-Sansom Road in the south line of the David Cook Survey; thence east with the center of said road nine hundred and forty-two feet to the place of beginning.

(17) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to transfer to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Works Agency for the use of the Public Buildings Administration the following described land, together with the improvements thereon:

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of ground, situated in the second ward of the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, together with the appurtenances, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the corner of Ninth Street (formerly Anderson Street and before that Hand Street) and Liberty Avenue; thence northerly by Ninth Street one hundred twelve and one-half feet to an alley; thence at right angles with the last line by said alley westwardly thirty-six feet eight inches to a point in a party wall; thence by a line in said party wall, parallel with Ninth Street, southwardly one hundred twelve and one-half feet to Liberty Avenue; thence eastwardly by the same avenue thirty-six feet eight inches to Ninth Street at the place of beginning.

(b) In the case of any real property transferred to the Federal Works Agency for the use of the Public Buildings Administration, pursuant to this section, by a corporation, all of the capital stock of which is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the Government, a conveyance to the United States of America, without representation or warranty, of all right, title, and interest of such corporation therein shall be made, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cancel notes or otherwise discharge the indebtedness to the Treasury of such corporation in an amount equal to the fair market value of the property at the time of the transfer of jurisdiction and control to the Federal Works Agency, which fair market value shall be determined by the Federal Works Administrator and the head of such Corporation: Provided, however, That in the event the Federal Works Administrator and the head of such Corporation shall fail to agree, the fair market value of such property shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 206. The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to assume permanent custody and control for the use of the Public Roads Administration, without reimbursement, the property located within the area known as Vancouver Barracks, in Vancouver, Wash., consisting of two buildings numbered 689 and 698, and five and three-tenths acres, more or less, of land described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the east line of West Reserve Street and the north line of East Fifth Street in the southeast quarter of section 27, township 2 north, range 1 east, Willamette meridian, in the city of Vancouver, county of Clark, State of Washington, which point is a bronze disk monument, said point being north twenty-two degrees thirty-seven minutes east, a distance of one thousand four hundred and seventy-four and seven-tenths feet; thence south eighty-three degrees ten minutes east, a distance of exactly forty-eight feet from the southeast corner of Amos Short donation land claim; thence north twenty-two degrees thirty-seven minutes east, a distance of two hundred and sixty-eight and three-tenths feet; thence south eighty-three degrees ten minutes east, a distance of eight hundred and sixty and six-tenths feet; thence south twenty degrees seventeen minutes west, a distance of two hundred and seventy-eight and eight-tenths feet; thence north eighty-five degrees twelve minutes west, a distance of exactly seventy-three feet; thence north eighty-three degrees ten minutes west a distance of two hundred and eight-four and five-tenths feet; thence north sixty-eight degrees twenty-three minutes west, a distance of sixty-one and five-tenths feet; thence north eighty-three degrees ten minutes west, a distance of four hundred and fifty-one and nine-tenths feet to the point of beginning.

TITLE III—IMPROVEMENT OF EXISTING BUILDINGS

SEC. 301. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to formulate, undertake, and prosecute a program for the renovation and improvement of federally owned buildings outside the District of Columbia for which funds are not otherwise available, including appurtenances and approaches thereto, that are under the control of the Public Buildings Administration for repair and preservation: Provided, That where necessary or desirable in carrying out the program herein authorized, additional land may be acquired to accommodate equipment or special appliances and devices proposed to be installed or to provide working areas to accomplish the objectives sought in this title: Provided further, That no project, the estimated cost of which is less than $25,000, shall be deemed to be eligible for the program authorized by this title.

SEC. 302. For carrying out the purposes of this title, including administrative, supervisory, traveling, and other expenses in connection therewith, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $30,000,000 to remain available until expended.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. (a) In addition to the authority conferred upon him by any other law the Commissioner of Public Buildings, whenever he deems it desirable or advantageous, is authorized to employ, by contract or otherwise, and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or to the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations or to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, the services of established architectural or other professional or technical corporations, firms, or individuals, to such extent as he may require for any public building project which the Public Buildings Administration is authorized by Congress to construct, or for any such project, funds for which are transferred by another agency to the Public Buildings Administration for construction of the project, regardless of specific legislation governing such other agency: Provided, That this authorization shall not apply to the employment of such corporations, firms, or individuals on a permanent basis, but their services shall be limited to the individual project for which employed: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall relieve the Commissioner of Public Buildings or any other duly authorized contracting officer of the Public Buildings Administration who shall execute a construction contract from the responsibility of interpreting such contract, of passing on the acceptability of materials and workmanship supplied pursuant to such contract, of approving changes in such contract during the construction period, of certifying vouchers for payments becoming due the contractor, or of effecting final settlement of the contract.

(b) The Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby authorized, whenever he deems it to be in the public interest, to hold a competition for the design of any project, to stipulate the terms, scope, and the conditions of each such competition and to make awards in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 402. The third paragraph of section 5 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, is hereby deleted and the following is hereby substituted therefor:

"With respect to sites or additions to sites acquired under this act, the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby authorized, in his discretion to rent, until they are needed for construction purposes, such sites or additions to sites and any improvements located thereon not reserved by the vendors, at a fair rental value and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem to be in the public interest. Such rentals may be deposited into a common fund account or accounts in the Treasury, and notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1932 (40 U. S. C. 303b), shall be available to pay the cost of such maintenance, repair, and alterations of any improvements located on such sites or additions to sites as is necessary to keep them in rentable condition and for the establishment of necessary reserves therefor: Provided, That except for such necessary reserves, as determined by the Commissioner, the unobligated balances of rentals so deposited into the Treasury shall be covered at the end of each fiscal year into miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That with respect to improvements on such sites or additions to sites which are suitable for residential purposes only and the estimated annual rentals of which will not exceed $1,200, the Commissioner may enter into leases without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended."

SEC. 403. Section 5 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), is hereby amended to delete the following words which appear at the end of the last paragraph thereof: "and to charge against the total sum of $150,000,000 hereinbefore authorized only the respective net excess cost, if any, over and above the proceeds of such sales, or providing such new sites and buildings", and after the words "miscellaneous receipts" change the comma to a period.

SEC. 404. The Federal Works Administrator, together with the Postmaster General where his office is concerned, is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of real, personal, or other property in aid of any project or function within their respective jurisdictions.

SEC. 405. The provisions of section 601 of the Economy Act, approved June 30, 1932, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the Public Buildings Administration to furnish services in the continental United States, on the basis of full reimbursement, at the request of the State Department, to any international body with which the United States Government is affiliated.

SEC. 406. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to contract for seeding, planting, or landscaping the grounds of any public building constructed or acquired by the Public Buildings Administration in an amount not exceeding $1,800, without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 407. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to procure space in the District of Columbia by lease, upon such terms and for such period, not in excess of 1 year, as he may deem in the public interest, for the housing of any Federal agency or agencies, except the Post Office Department, and to assign and reassign such space. As used in this section, the term "Federal Agency" means any executive department (except the Post Office Department), independent establishment, commission, board, bureau, in the executive branch, or other agency of the United States, including wholly owned Government corporations.

SEC. 408. The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to enter into such agreements with the city of Chicago, Ill., as he shall deem necessary and in the public interest, in connection with the construction by the said city of a superhighway through the Congress Street Post Office located in said city. For the purposes of this section, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as shall be necessary to defray such cost, if any, which said Administrator shall determine should be borne by the United States as an incident to the construction by the said city of the superhighway through said post office.

SEC. 409. The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress promptly after the convening of each new Congress reports showing the location and the approximate accommodations of such public building projects throughout the United States, its Territories and possessions, as they shall find eligible to be constructed in accordance with applicable statutory provisions. Such reports shall indicate the limit of cost of each project when in excess of $200,000. When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000, the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. The report herein provided for shall supersede the report required by the Public Buildings Act of 1926 (44 Stat. 630, as amended).

SEC. 410. The Federal Works Administrator, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, is authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to change or rechange the name or designation of any building in the custody and jurisdiction of the Federal Works Agency.

SEC. 411. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the foregoing provisions are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 3662) was passed were vacated and that bill was laid upon the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may have permission to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

COWPENS BATTLEGROUND AS A NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully call attention to a bill now pending before the Committee on Public Lands designated as H. R. 2846.

This measure would authorize the purchase and construction of a national military park near the town of Cowpens, S. C., in Spartanburg and Cherokee Counties, where the Battle of Cowpens was fought.

The Battle of the Cowpens, which is proposed to be commemorated by the establishment of a national military park, was a turning point in our war for independence. The numbers involved in this historic conflict seem indeed small, by modern standards, but the effect of the victory which these brave men won was prodigious. Had it not been for this battle and the Battle of Kings Mountain, which preceded it in the same area, the southern colonies would have been lost to the patriot cause, and in all probability the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, with probably the rest of the South as well, would never have been part of the United States of America, and American history would have had to be written in very different terms. We owe it to ourselves and to our posterity to see that the memory of the Cowpens battle be cherished, that the site of the Cowpens battle be honored, and that the traditions of Morgan and Howard and Pickens and the hardy Continentals and militiamen from the Carolinas and Maryland and Delaware, who won this victory, remain forever to enrich our American story.

It was indeed one of the darkest hours of our revolution, the only hope on the horizon at the time being the prospect, though not yet the actuality, of French aid. The British held the entire eastern seaboard from Halifax to Savannah. Their control of Virginia and North Carolina was not yet consolidated, but they had Georgia. Charleston had been captured and British reinforcements were headed south by land and sea. The British plan was to complete the conquest of South Carolina, then to do the same to North Carolina, and then to join arms and fleet with forces moving down the Chesapeake.

In August 1780, the staggering news came to the Continentals that General Gates had been disastrously defeated at Camden, S. C. In that battle the Americans had suffered the loss of Gen. Baron DeKalb, who was killed, General Rutherford and a thousand more killed or wounded, and 800 men taken prisoners, along with valuable cannon and stores and wagons. Lord Cornwallis, the British commander, wrote:

> There never was a more complete victory.

It seemed to assure final British control of the State. A few days later the Americans lost 800 more men under Sumter, in a surprise attack on the latter by Tarleton, though Sumter himself escaped. With the loss of South Carolina to the patriot cause, it seemed inevitable that North Carolina and Georgia—everything south of Virginia, in short—would go too.

Such news was coming to General Washington in the north at the same time that the story of Arnold's treason broke. No wonder Washington wrote:

> We are tottering on the brink of a precipice.

Yet the great leader never lost faith. Now he took prompt action. In spite of his even more pressing problems in the north, and with the approval of Congress, he sent his own second in command and ablest commander, Gen. Nathaniel Greene, to replace Gates in the south, for the over-all direction of the campaign there. Greene was a level-headed Yankee. He made his way south slowly, stopping at Philadelphia to confer with Congress, and in several States along the way, to secure supplies and transportation. He particularly wanted to build up a mobile force of cavalry and mounted infantry. Finally he set up his headquarters at Charlotte Town, now Charlotte, near the South Carolina border. He found the situation among the remnants of the Southern force discouraging indeed.

Nothing—

He wrote to Washington—

can be more wretched and distressing than the conditon of the troops, starving, with cold and hunger, without tents and equipage. Those of the Virginia line are literally naked, and a great part totally unfit for any kind of duty, and must remain so until clothing can be had from the northward.

The first break in the situation had already occurred with the American victory at King's Mountain on October 7, 1780. The place was on the South Carolina side of the border. In that battle the British Lieutenant Colonel Ferguson, with some 1,000 men, mostly Tory militia, were annihilated. The most remarkable thing about this battle, which was the outstanding victory of the Americans in 1780, was that the victory was won, not by organized troops, Continental or militia, but by sharpshooting backwoodsmen from the mountains, who knew little and probably cared little about the war as a whole, but were exasperated by the harshness and cruelty of the British and their Tory sympathizers in their own section of the country. The victory at King's Mountain brought cheer to the American cause, and prevented Cornwallis from carrying out his plan to advance into North Carolina. It was the subsequent Battle of the Cowpens which clinched the situation. This battle took place on January 17, 1781, in the same general area as King's Mountain.

From his headquarters at Charlotte, Greene had sent out Gen. Daniel Morgan to harass the enemy and interrupt his supplies. Morgan was given a fairly free hand to determine his own objectives and movements as he was to operate far from headquarters, but was told to govern himself with extreme caution, an order to which he did not apparently give too much heed or he would never have fought the Battle of Cowpens. He had only a small force.. Its nucleus was 320 men detached from the Maryland line, which included some troops from Delaware; these were Continentals, the nearest approach to regulars which the American Army had. Morgan had also a detachment of Virginia militia, who were fairly experienced troops. There was also with him Lt. Col. William Augustine Washington's regiment of light horse cavalry, consisting of between 60 and 100 mounted men. Other militia groups came in to join Morgan as time went on. On the day of the battle Morgan seems to have had something over 1,000 men in all.

Cornwallis' strategy at this time was to try to get between Greene and Virginia. To do this he had, among other things, to get Morgan out of the way, for Morgan was not only being a nuisance but was actively threatening an important British base position at a place called Ninety Six. Cornwallis sent out Lieutenant Colonel Tarleton, with a force of about 1,000 men to stop Morgan. Most of Tarleton's troops were British regulars, though there were with him also some Tory militia. He had a substantial number of dragoons, or mounted regulars, and two cannon. In every respect his force was stronger, better disciplined and better equipped, than Morgan's, though of approximately the same size. His superiority in cavalry, so important in this type of mobile warfare, was very pronounced.

The time came when Tarleton thought he had an opportunity to trap Morgan; he had learned that Morgan was encamped with his back to the Broad River. Two days earlier, his men pressing hard on Morgan's heels, he had come upon a camp where there were long huts with a plentiful supply of half-cooked provisions, which the Americans had left behind that very day in their haste. This was the 15th of January.

On the 16th, Morgan was encamped in a place known as The Cowpens, on the road from Spartanburg into North Carolina. Here he decided to make his stand. The camp was in a wooded ravine having a stream of water running through it. The ground was slightly undulating, covered with scattered trees of red oak, hickory, and pine, but without underbrush which would have been useful for cover. For about 300 yards in front of the main position, there is a gradual declivity, with 400 yards farther on a steeper grade leading into a ravine. Behind the main position was a slightly higher eminence. Neither of the two ravines offered serious interference with the movement of troops. It was indeed a favorable terrain for mounted troops, in which the British were superior. Nevertheless, arriving here on the 16th, Morgan prepared for the attack.

Morgan's plans for battle were careful, but in the judgment of competent military historians—very unusual. His best troops were the Continentals from Maryland and Delaware, together with some experienced Virginia militia. They were to bear the main thrust of the attack, and were posted in the central position, under Colonel Howard. Some distance in front of them and separated into two divisions, one on each flank, were the militia from the Carolinas and Georgia under Pickens. They were inexperienced and it was not expected that they could stand for long. Their orders were to fire a few volleys as the British should advance, then retire to the rear in good order, then re-form and take part in the later stages of the battle as needed. A few patrols were sent out far in front to watch for the British approach. Morgan had also a third force, Col. William Washington's 80 dragoons, augmented by 45 mounted militiamen who had been found able both to ride and to shoot. These General Morgan posted in the rear, far enough away to escape hostile observation, and near enough to make a cavalry charge if a favorable opportunity should occur.

All Morgan's men had breakfasted and rested.

Meanwhile, Tarleton had broken his camp at 3 a. m., eager to catch the supposedly retreating Americans before they could reach the Broad River or while they were crossing it. As he came on he learned of the American deployment from captured outposts. It seemed a good place for a full attack. He knew the American militia could not meet his trained regulars on equal terms, and that they had only about 500 Continentals and experienced troops. He was superior in cavalry. The terrain was not unfavorable. Once beaten back, the Americans would be forced to the banks of the Broad, and at his mercy.

By 8 a. m., Tarleton's deployment was completed. He had his light infantry on his right, his two cannon in the center, and the Seventh Regiment of Regulars on his left. He had 50 dragoons protecting each flank. In his reserve at the rear, he had a battalion of infantry and 200 cavalry.

At the onset of the battle, the British line advanced with the greatest impetuosity, shouting as they advanced. The American militia in their front lines yelled Indian war cries, but, obedient to orders, withheld their fire until the enemy closed to effective rifle range. Then, after firing their volleys, they retreated, according to plan, but in good order. The British, though suffering somewhat from the initial fire, continued to advance until they reached the zone of fire of the American Continentals and the Virginia militia—Howard's central group. There was slaughter on both sides. The British advance was temporarily checked.

Tarleton now sent his dragoons around the right flank, to harass the retreating American militia. Also he brought forward his reserve. Then his line moved forward again. He had about 750 men in line, with two cannon against Howard's 450 men with no cannon.

Washington's cavalry now countercharged.

At this point Howard saw that Tarleton, by bringing up his reserve, had left his right flank exposed, and ordered a shift in position to take advantage of that fact.

This move had an unexpected result. The shift of position caused some confusion among the Americans. There was a misunderstanding, and Howard's officers, seeing the movement, thought orders must have been given for a retreat and started to move their men off. Morgan came riding over to see what was happening. Howard said, "Men are not beaten who retreat in that order." Morgan then, instead of countermanding the retirement, ordered it continued until the higher ground in the rear could be reached.

Analysts of the battle think the misunderstanding was a fortunate error, and that Howard's units would have been beaten if they had stayed where they were.

This retirement served to convince the British, however, that they had practically won the battle. Their infantry now stopped shooting, fixed bayonets, and began a charge against the retreating Americans. Their cavalry, on their right, began to move. Not more than 30 yards separated the charging British regulars from the retreating Americans, when the latter unexpectedly halted, changed front, and, now facing the British, shot a deadly volley into their ranks. The latter were stopped in their tracks; all was confusion for a moment. Howard, seizing this moment, ordered his line to charge bayonets. In the face of this unexpected development, the British fled in disorder, leaving their field pieces behind them. Their infantry could not be induced to advance again. Their cavalry, who had been just about to strike, were now seized by the same panic. A general flight ensued. The battle was won.

Tarleton himself rallied 14 officers and 40 horsemen, to make a stand against Washington's cavalry, but the contest was now hopeless. Tarleton fled the field.

The battle took 50 minutes in all.

Its effects were very great.

The effect at the time—

Says the military historian who studied this operation for the Army War College some years ago—was to hearten greatly the patriotic cause and to distress the British Army and their Tory sympathizers beyond measure. It was the second link in the chain of events, soon to be followed by others, which led to the surrender of Cornwallis' army at Yorktown.

There was, however, another effect, of great magnitude, which is less well known. Prior to King's Mountain and Cowpens, according to substantial reports, the British were about ready to yield independence to the 10 Northern colonies, confident that they could hold the Carolinas and Georgia. To these they would add east Florida, the West Indies, and the Bahamas, and develop a new colonial empire. Had this possibility not been shattered at King's Mountain and Cowpens, the southern colonies might well have remained, perhaps to this day, part of the British Empire and not of the American Union.

The deliverance was gained by brave men from those States, joined by others from Virginia, Maryland and Delaware. There were great names, too; Morgan the Jerseyman who later became a Member of Congress from Virginia, William Augustine Washington, Pickens, celebrated in South Carolina, and Howard, a name dear to Marylanders. The battle is a symbol of American unity in gaining our independence. Surely these brave men, and their actions during the historic 50 minutes on January 17, 1781, and the ground where the blood of liberty was shed, deserve the affectionate memory of the Republic.

I respectfully urge the committee to proceed with hearings on this too long delayed matter to the end that Congress may have an opportunity to grant the authority and provide the necessary funds for a national military park.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to announce that our colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST] will deliver a radio talk tonight on the subject, Old-Age Security, over the ABC national radio network originating in Washington from local radio station WMAL at 5:45 p. m.

I know this important problem of a comprehensive old-age pension program is of deep interest and concern to many Members, and I hope as many as possible will avail themselves of this opportunity to hear what is going to be an excellent talk by BOB SECREST this evening.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what about the committees?

The SPEAKER. The committees cannot meet because a bill will be read for amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There will be a vote on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYED ENTITLED TO PROTECTION WHEN THEY FIND JOBS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, May 18, 1949, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON] called the attention of the House to the fact that—

In Connecticut alone almost 100,000 of our people are seeking work to keep themselves and their families in the necessities of life. Thousands have used up their total benefits under unemployment compensation, with no relief in sight. Our communities cannot absorb the welfare load being placed upon local agencies, but no solution is being proposed by the administration.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE] said:

The latest information which I have is that there are some 13,000 unemployed in the city of Bridgeport.

Then the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON] added:

In Waterbury, Conn., there are at least 10,500 unemployed at this time. That is not a true picture, because there are a great many who are working only 1 day a week.

On the same day, in the other body, attention was called to the fact that unemployment is increasing.

Over the years, from the floor of the House, in committee room, and elsewhere, attention has been called by me to the fact that certain union officials are responsible for the loss of many jobs, for the fact that hundreds of thousands who have jobs are, for varying periods of time and at the loss of millions of dollars in wages, denied the opportunity to work at the jobs which are available.

On May 16, 1949, from the well of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS], in his remarks on the $3,000 additional clerk hire just allowed to Congressmen, and which I criticized, said, and I quote:

I would say to the gentleman from Michigan that since there has not been any opportunity to do any labor-baiting here lately, this bill that passed the House last Thursday gave him a chance for a little publicity.

During the 14 years I have been here, I have never questioned the ability, the judgment, or the motive of any of my colleagues; nor do I propose to vary that practice and do so at this time.

Fairness, however, requires that I do say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS] that there are various opinions as to the justice of a policy which I condemn. That policy sanctions or approves of unlawful activities on a picket line which prevent men and women who desire to work and who have jobs at pay with which they are satisfied going to and from their work. Condemnation of such a policy is not labor-baiting.

It is my contention that the Taft-Hartley Act carries provisions protecting individual workers from labor goon-squads; from the political activities of certain labor leaders; from being the victims of the schemes of certain Communists who have infiltrated into labor unions and who hold positions of trust.

That Communists have infiltrated into even the CIO is evident to everyone familiar with that organization. All one needs to do is to read the papers of May 18, 19, and 20 to note that Philip Murray and his supporters in the CIO are today here in Washington making a fight against the Communist-controlled unions in the CIO.

It has been my privilege to fight the Communists in these organizations during the years that Phil Murray and his organization were harboring them and backing them in their unlawful activities.

It is my hope that Phil Murray, Emil Mazey, and Walter Reuther will sometime get around to publicly condemn the goon-squads of their union, which follow the Communist procedure.

I say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS] that I am not a labor-baiter; that there is nothing in my record which so indicates, any more than there is, so far as I know, anything in his record to show that he is the supporter of the goon-squads, an advocate of mob violence. And I am not, directly or indirectly, charging him with being an instigator or a supporter of union-inspired rioting, defiance of court orders, or of mob violence.

Nor has he any justifiable foundation for his insinuation that, in calling attention to the passage of this $3,000 additional clerk allowance for Congressmen, I was seeking publicity, or in intimating that I had any desire to do any labor baiting.

His unjust insinuation as to my motives will not for one moment prevent me from calling attention to the fact that the opponents of the Taft-Hartley Act are, in my humble opinion, depriving not only nonunion men but employees who belong to unions of the protection which that act seeks to give them—of their right to work.

From the press we learn that at Bendix, in South Bend, Ind., some seventy-odd employees who had a dispute with the company went on strike. The CIO walked out, with resulting loss of employment to some 7,000 South Bend employees. The Packard Motor Co., the Hudson Co., and General Motors, who were supplied with certain parts by Bendix, were forced to curtail their operations, and some 65,000 employees in Michigan were out of their jobs.

They were out of jobs. Why? Because, instead of using the machinery available under the Taft-Hartley Act and the laws of the State of Indiana, the seventy-odd employees and their union chose unlawfully to defy injunctions issued by State and Federal courts and prevent the removal of dies belonging to the three Michigan corporations.

Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS] thinks he is the champion of labor when he does not condemn a policy which permits a few men to deprive thousands of their pay checks.

In Detroit because one local union charged a speed-up in two Ford plants, the CIO goes on strike and a hundred thousand are unemployed.

The Detroit Free Press of Tuesday, May 17, tells us that the Ford strike will shut down that night all but one of the company's assembly plants, when 675 workers at the Los Angeles Lincoln-Mercury assembly plant will be laid off.

Monday 990 workers at the Long Beach plant and 1,080 at the Richmond, Calif., plant were out of jobs.

Fifteen other plants, at Atlanta, Buffalo, Chester, Pa., Chicago, Dallas, Dearborn, Norfolk, Richmond, Somerville, Mass., Memphis, and Twin Cities, St. Louis, Los Angeles, Metuchen, N. J., and Highland Park, have closed.

Under the contracts with some 6,500 to 7,000 suppliers, deliveries will cease.

At the Rouge plant alone there is a turn-over of 600 freight carloads a day, and there are thousands of trucks delivering material and taking away the finished product each day. All that activity is at an end because of the strike.

In addition, trucks, trailers, and haulaways serve the company's 7,200 Ford, Lincoln, Mercury, and Ford tractor dealers. That work ends. The men are without jobs.

One hundred and six thousand workers of Ford and about 70,000 employees of dealers are all affected by this strike.

When Mr. Thompson and Mr. Reuther insist upon carrying on this strike, reject the Ford offer to re-open all plants except the two where the actual claimed grievance exists, they are assuming a big responsibility, and the question of whether they are wisely representing the employees who are out of work because of the strike is open to serious argument.

Especially is this true when it is learned that Ford's suppliers will be losing business worth $4,000,000 a day, and that Ford's own payroll is more than a million dollars a day, and that there will be a production loss of from 10,000 to 12,000 units a day in cars, trucks, busses and tractors.

In the Fourth Congressional District, men employed by Ford suppliers are being laid off.

And do not think for one moment that this loss of income, this loss of business, does not affect the corner groceryman—in fact, every businessman in every town where the Ford Co. does business or has business connections.

Ford in the beginning claimed that the contract with the union provided for arbitration but Mr. Reuther and the CIO refused to leave the issue as to whether there is or is not a speed-up to an arbitrator.

The power of a union which may be exerted through a strike is unbelievable, and this Nation needs labor legislation which will make it impossible for one man or for a small group of men, through a labor union or any other organization, to injuriously affect the lives of hundreds of thousands of individuals.

Certainly, it is difficult to understand why a dispute—whether there is or is not a contract which provides for its settlement but which concededly affects but a few hundred employees—should be permitted to deprive thousands—yes, perhaps hundreds of thousands—of their opportunity to continue to earn a livelihood.

The CIO insists not only upon the right of its employees to quit work, which concededly they have, but it insists that thousands of others must quit work, cease to do business, until the demands of the few are met.

It not only insists upon the right to cease work, that is, to strike, but it insists that no one else shall be employed to do the work which the strikers refuse to do.

Just how long will the country and the Congress agree with organized labor's position that, until its demands—rightly or wrongly made—are met, no one will be permitted to work in the struck plant or in any plant affiliated with the struck plant?

Is the Congress to permit Mr. Reuther, Mr. Murray, or anyone else who is in a position of power in organized labor, to be a dictator?

This Ford strike may, like the Lewis coal strike, become one of national concern.

The acting executive director of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, wires me as follows:

> The Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, operating near peak load, with impact of Ford strike unemployment yet to be absorbed, is in critical need of operating funds. Passage of the deficiency appropriation bill, now in conference committee, is imperative to provide us with needed administrative funds. Present allotment will be exhausted prior to May 31. May we urgently request your cooperation in aiding passage of this bill?

His wire calls attention to the misery and the suffering which is occasioned because the workers at this Ford plant refuse to arbitrate their grievance under the terms of the existing contract which they have with the company.

The mayor of Dearborn, Mich., which exists primarily because within it are located some of the Ford activities, sends out a circular, copy of a letter directed to Governor Williams of Michigan, under date of May 6, 1949, which reads as follows:

> Unless the Ford strike is sooner settled, you are respectfully requested to attend a meeting in my office in the Dearborn City Hall at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, May 12, 1949, for the purpose of making a supreme civic effort to get the 65,000 Ford employees back to work without starving them into submission.
>
> From my investigation, it appears clear to me that this strike is a result of Ford stubbornness to practice a little "human engineering." The evidence from the city's recent purchase of 18 new Ford cars indicates that at least there is a speed-up in the final assembly of Ford cars.
> Dearborn's superintendent of motor transport, Mr. William Hill, himself 20 years a Ford employee, reports to me that every nut on nearly every bolt on every one of the city's new 18 Ford cars had to be tightened before the cars were put in service, and that when he checked to learn why these cars were turned out in such an unsafe condition, he was advised by supervisors and production-line workers that men are rushed so fast on the assembly job that they do not have time to tighten up all nuts and bolts.
>
> Mr. Hill also reports that every fuel pump on every one of the city's new 18 Ford cars needed tightening when they were delivered, and on the first run of the city's new Ford ambulance, carrying a patient to the Ford Hospital, the fuel pump fell right off. His report also shows that every one of the new 18 Ford cars had leaky windshields.
>
> Mr. Hill reports that on the recent purchase of a new 3-ton Ford truck, it took two mechanics 6 hours to put it in running condition. Before it was ever driven by the city, the needle valve and float level on the carburetor had to be changed, and there were no washers at all under the oil filter connection to the engine head.
>
> The great Ford Motor Co. was founded and established by mechanics and was the world's foremost pioneer in paying workers a living wage, and the grandson of the man who revolutionized industry by such methods should personally and courageously shoulder his tremendous responsibility to the public and the Ford workers to see that they have decent and peaceful working conditions and not let a bunch of FBI quiz kids rob Ford of that priceless place in history.
>
> The way for young Henry to actually learn whether there is a production speed up, dangerous both to human beings and the public safety, is to slip on a pair of his grandfather's working pants and get out on the production line for a few days once in a while.
>
> Your presence at the meeting next Thursday afternoon will serve both the public interest and the interest of the Ford workers, and I hope you will make every effort to come.
>
> With kind regards and my very best of good wishes, I remain,
>
> Cordially and sincerely,
> ORVILLE L. HUBBARD.

We have all heard of the bird which fouls its own nest, but not often do we hear of the mayor of a city who will publicly broadcast a complaint against the merchandise manufactured therein, the natural effect of which would be to curtail the production of the city's chief industry.

The defects in the Ford cars of which Mayor Hubbard so painstakingly complains may be due not to any speed-up but to the carelessness of the employees. Featherbedding and the deliberate failure to render a dollar's worth of service for a dollar's pay is not a new procedure in union activities.

Is it possible that Mayor Hubbard, of Dearborn, wants to give the public the general impression that, instead of purchasing Ford cars, they should buy some other make?

Does Mr. Hubbard think that he is promoting the welfare of either his city or of those who reside therein by deliberately putting out propaganda the principal result of which would be to injure the sale of Ford cars?

I just wonder what Mr. Hubbard would be mayor of if Henry Ford decided to take a few of his millions, a long vacation, sell the Ford industries for junk.

Mr. Hubbard advises "young Henry," as he calls him, to put on a pair of overalls and go to work on the assembly line to learn whether there is a speed-up. Now, that is good advice, and it may not be out of place to suggest that Mr. Hubbard start to operate a motor plant and learn just what it takes to successfully build and sell a car, meet a pay roll.

The current press shows that the pickets in the Bendix, South Bend, plant are armed with baseball bats; that they are defying not only the State court's injunction but the injunction of the United States court.

If the Detroit strike follows the usual course of Detroit strikes, we can anticipate violence and defiance of court orders there. Especially will violence come if Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer of the UAW-CIO, follows a policy which he has advocated in other Michigan strikes.

The UAW-CIO is calling upon the Federal Government to intervene. Hearings held by subcommittees of the House Labor Committee in 1947 demonstrated that, when the Federal mediators came into a strike, they frequently put the heat on the employer and gave the employer to understand that, if he did not make concessions to the union, and rioting and bloodshed under union leadership resulted, the company would be responsible.

But it is nothing new for the Federal Government to take the part of union leaders in labor disputes.

As long ago as when the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, under the leadership of young Bob La Follette, was wetnursing the CIO, raiding the AFL, that committee permitted union organizers to masquerade under its banner, operate behind the front of the committee. That, too, is a matter of record.

To give you some idea of Emil Mazey's tactics, let me quote, not the views of someone who has observed his conduct, but from his own testimony.

Mr. Mazey has been arrested many times in connection with his activities during strikes, but he was never convicted. Mazey seems to be one of those smart, astute, influential individuals who hovers around the outskirts of picket lines, rioting, and mob violence, but who is very careful not to personally take any active part therein. Apparently he stays back on safe ground. It is just as apparent, however, that he has the will to cause trouble.

There was a strike of Local 608, UAW-CIO, in 1947 at Clinton, Mich. Clinton is a town of some 1,600 people. There was an apparently successful back-to-work movement. So Mr. Mazey, who was then at Detroit, Mich., moved in. He was then a member of the executive board of the UAW-CIO, a regional director in Detroit.

Clinton, something less than a hundred miles from Detroit, was under his jurisdiction.

Mazey had been operating sound trucks, in connection with union activities and picket lines, for some 13 years.

When it was apparent that at Clinton the back-to-work movement was about to be successful, the strike a failure, Mr. Mazey went to Clinton, leading some 400 Detroit pickets into that small town, where there had gathered several thousand pickets.

Then, over the loud speaker, Mr. Mazey—and this he admitted under oath—told the assembled pickets, the employees who were in the factory, the employees who were trying to get in, and the assembled townspeople, that "we are going to demonstrate to employers in small towns that they are not going to push our workers around."

No one had been pushing his workers, that is, his pickets, around, except as they, by force, tried, in violation of the State law, to prevent employees going to and from their jobs.

Mr. Mazey's sworn testimony shows that he proposed to demonstrate to the people of Clinton and of other communities in Michigan that, if industrial plants were not closed when the CIO struck a plant, they would bring in sufficient pickets and goon squads, flying squadrons of the CIO, to by force win the strike.

At Clinton, as at other places where the CIO employed mass picket lines, the loudspeaker was used to voice profane and indecent threats; defenseless returning employees were beaten; property was destroyed, and civil strife grew until the State police were called and forced to restore order.

A typical example of how the CIO pickets proceed is that of the line of conduct followed by just one to whom now reference is made.

There was little violence in connection with the strike at Clinton until a majority of the regular employees, not approving of the strike, attempted to go back to work. This the picket lines by force attempted to prevent.

One who might be termed a professional picket, Mrs. Helen Louise Haughton, who lived in Bronson, Mich.—a lady who weighed 168 pounds—deliberately assaulted a 120-pound woman employee who was attempting to go to her work. It might be added that this same woman, Mrs. Haughton, traveled some sixty-odd miles west of Bronson to Dowagiac, Mich., where she again beat up a 100-pound woman worker.

Just how much Helen was encouraged by Mr. Mazey's oration over the loudspeaker we do not know.

In 1947 and 1948, in Ohio, in Michigan, there were, first, picket lines, then mass picket lines, then violence and rioting and defiance of court orders.

In the meat-packing industry, there were labor disputes and strikes in 20 States. Interstate commerce was obstructed. Court orders were defied. There was rioting, beatings, malicious destruction of property and kidnapings.

Subcommittee hearings of the House Committee on Education and Labor disclosed through sworn testimony that it was the usual and customary practice of the CIO and the UEW to, when peaceful picketing failed, resort to name-calling, the use of obscene and profane epithets; to mob violence and to rioting and to open defiance of the law of the land.

That the foregoing charges are true, one needs but to read the testimony of the hearings above referred to and which will be found in hearings before the Special Subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor, Eightieth Congress; on labor-management disputes in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, October 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, 30, and 31; November 14 and 19, 1947, Committee Report No. 6; on the Univis Lens Co. strike, Dayton, Ohio, August 2, 3, 5, 6, and 11, 1948, Committee Report No. 20; investigation of riot at Shakespeare Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., December 4, 6, 17, and 22, 1948, Committee Report No. 14; hearings, Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, Eightieth Congress: Investigation as to the administration of the laws affecting labor disputes, interstate and foreign commerce and the antiracketeering statute, the interstate transportation of pickets, and the activities of the Department of Justice, in connection with strikes in the meat-packing industry in 20 States, May 20 and 21, 1948. House Report No. 2464, twenty-first intermediate report of the committee.

Last Monday, May 16, in a dissenting opinion filed by Mr. Justice Jackson, in a case involving the right to free speech, the Justice pointed out the danger of mob rule, the danger which exists when advocates of mass picketing take over the streets of a city and defy the law-enforcing officers.

Referring to a demonstration in Chicago which grew out of a public meeting held to condemn Communists and which, in turn, was picketed by another group which charged that the members of the first group were Fascists, Mr. Justice Jackson said:

> Each of these mass demonstrations has the potentiality, and more than a few the purpose, of disorder and violence. This technique appeals not to reason but to fears and mob spirit; each is a show of force designed to bully adversaries and to overawe the indifferent. We need not resort to speculation as to the purposes for which these tactics are calculated nor as to their consequences. Recent European history demonstrates both.
> Hitler summed up the strategy of the mass demonstration as used by both fascism and communism: "We should not work in secret conventicles but in mighty mass demonstrations, and it is not by dagger and poison or pistol that the road can be cleared for the movement but by the conquest of the streets. We must teach the Marxists that the future master of the streets is national socialism, just as it will some day be the master of the state." (Emphasis supplied.) (1 Nazi Conspiracy and Aggression (GPO 1946) 204, 2 id 140, Docs. 2760-PS, 2404-PS, from Mein Kampf.) First laughed at as an extravagant figure of speech, the battle for the streets became a tragic reality when an organized Sturmabteilung began to give practical effect to its slogan that "possession of the streets is the key to power in the state." Ibid., also Doc. 2168-PS.

The present obstacle to mastery of the streets by either radical or reactionary mob movements is not the opposing minority. It is the authority of local governments which represent the free choice of democratic and law-abiding elements, of all shades of opinion but who, whatever their differences, submit them to free elections which register the results of their free discussion.

* * * * *

Rioting is a substantive evil, which I take it no one will deny that the State and the city have the right and the duty to prevent and punish.

* * * * *

Only recently this Court held that a State could punish as a breach of the peace use of epithets such as "damned racketeer" and "damned facists," addressed to only one person, an official, because likely to provoke the average person to retaliation. But these are mild in comparison to the epithets "slimy scum," "snakes," "bedbugs," and the like, which Terminiello hurled at an already inflamed mob of his adversaries. Mr. Justice Murphy, writing for a unanimous Court in Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (315 U. S. 568, 571-572), said:

"There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or 'fighting' words—those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality. 'Resort to epithets or personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution, and its punishment as a criminal act would raise no question under that instrument' (Cantwell v. Connecticut (310 U. S. 296, 309-310))."

Some individuals assume, and without justification proclaim, that those of us who protest mob violence and rioting, defiance of the law and of court orders, in labor disputes are labor-baiters. That is faulty reasoning.

Neither unions, members of unions, nor their officers have any special privilege or license which permits them to disregard the laws which apply to others.

The essential provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act were designed to protect the public, employees who belong to unions and nonunion employees, who, after all, make up the overwhelming majority of our employable individuals.

No one would deny to employees the right to organize and bargain collectively. But no one, in my humble judgment, should concede the right of unions or any other group to deprive any individual of his right to work when he can obtain a job which is acceptable to him.

The inconsistency of those who so loudly proclaim their advocacy of the so-called civil-rights legislation is shown when they refuse to include in their bills any protection to the unorganized worker.

No, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS], I am not a labor baiter, nor am I an advocate of the goon-squad, rioting, law-defying method of settling labor disputes.

May I suggest to those who charge that I am a labor baiter that they read the opinion of Mr. Justice Jackson on mob violence, found in the case of Arthur Terminiello against City of Chicago, decided on May 16, 1949, to which reference was just made.

Nor am I so lacking in moral courage that I will not, from the floor of the House, speak my convictions. Nor will I take orders from a so-called labor politician because he says he controls the votes in my district.

To show how some of the strikers feel about the situation, the attached from the Sunday, May 23, issue of the Detroit-News is printed:

SPEED-UP CHARGE UNION POLITICS, SAYS FORD DISCOURAGED PICKET

To the EDITOR:

I have before me statements of position from three of the parties involved in the Ford strike.

These statements are distressing because of the spirit of frustration and futility characterizing all three.

My boss, speaking for management, says, "We don't like it because we don't understand it."

My newspaper in an editorial, The Public Deserves Protection, laments the fact that effective rules have not been made into law to guard against or prevent suicidal clashes of wills for ends only to be won at a frightening cost.

My union official in the same issue, in the Public Letter Box, says, "Submitting this dispute to an arbiter is not the constructive solution to this problem. In fact, it is asinine even to suggest such a course."

Now that the company, the public, and union officials have had their say, what about us who have been forced on the picket line? Are not our interests involved and worth considering?

We cannot all speak with authority on the speed-up issue, because we do not all work at the place in question. But this we do know: Earlier in the year we received a leaflet entitled, "A Message to All Members of Local 600, UAW-CIO."

This message, dealing directly with the speed-up issue, says in part, "Since October of this year, you workers in the Rouge plant have been subjects of a high-powered, mimeographed leaflet campaign denouncing a new and sudden speed-up in the Rouge plant. It was organized, financed and continues to be promoted by an outside organization which is not in any way connected with our local union. This purely propaganda campaign is designed to undermine your confidence and respect in your local union and, in particular, your present local union officers."

That statement, not dated, was signed by the big four—Thompson, Romano, Hood, and Good—and five more union officials.

Immediately before the strike—the same week, in fact—two leaflets, both denouncing union officials for being so slow in calling a strike, were distributed at our place of work. A former athletic director of local 600 was active in the distribution of one of them.

The companion leaflet was signed, "Bill McKie, chairman," a former trustee of our local. Both these former officials have been removed from official position in the union for allegedly refusing to sign the anti-Communist affidavit ordered by the union.

If additional evidence is needed to establish the source and purpose of this speed-up propaganda, the reader is urged to study the tons upon tons of leaflets and pamphlets distributed in an effort to smear Walter Reuther with a pro-speed-up stigma ever since he determinedly tried to make UAW more American than his political opponents wanted it to be.

This documentary evidence is important because it establishes the fact that there is a dominant political angle to this speed-up issue.

It is also well established that the instigators of propaganda of this type are highly organized both within and without the union in factories all over the country.

The activities and methods used by this subversive element prove that it is desperately trying to gain control of our votes and our dues-dollars in order to gain its objectives, namely sabotaging American prosperity and way of life.

The injection of the speed-up issue at this time is, as always, an attempt to sabotage harmonious relations between employer and employees, but specifically it is a clear attempt to embarrass and hamstring union officials in the pending contract negotiations, and to stampede them into a course in which they would become the unwitting and unwilling tools of this perversive element and thus do its bidding.

The auto industry is definitely entering a buyer's market. Therefore production and wages lost by us at Ford's in this strike never can be regained, but will go to our competitors.

For us to sabotage production now to hurt our employer is the height of folly.

Who can think of anything more foolish than to drill holes in the bottom of a boat to drown our employer when we are all in the same boat with him?

DISCOURAGED PICKET.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. YATES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech which he delivered last Saturday evening.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a resolution and in the other an article.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KEEFE, until Friday, on account of official business.

To Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin (at the request of Mr. KEEFE), for 1 week, on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1184. An act to encourage construction of rental housing on or in areas adjacent to Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force installations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating Memorial Day, 1949, as a day for a Nation-wide prayer for peace.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 24, 1949, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

633. A letter from the Director, Executive Office of the President, Bureau of the Budget, transmitting a report of personnel ceilings as determined and fixed pursuant to section 607 of the act as amended by section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (Public Law 390, 79th Cong.) for the quarter ending March 31, 1949; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

634. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a bill entitled "A bill to amend the act of December 24, 1942 (56 Stat. 1086; 43 U. S. C., sec. 36b), entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire lands or interest in lands for the Geological Survey' "; to the Committee on Public Lands.

635. SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, May 23, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, in whose peace our restless spirits are quieted, as we fare forth in Thy fear prosper us this day in our work. Even when our fellow men think they have cause for blame, may we care most for the approval of our own conscience and of Thee who seest our motives and knowest our hearts. We come in the solemnity of half-masted flags speaking of a personal and national tragedy.

In these perilous days, when servants of the state staggering under fearful burdens are constantly facing decisions that may affect the future of the Republic and the world, make our citizenship ever mindful of the terrific strain of public office, charitable in their judgments, sympathetic in their appraisals of those who without stint pour out their strength for the good of the commonwealth. Save us from bringing praise when it is too late, and from uninformed criticism which may savor of ingratitude and even of treachery. When day by day we have done faithfully the work Thou givest us to do, even though men may misjudge our aim, in quietness and in confidence may we leave the result to Thy unerring judgment. We ask it in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 23, 1949, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On May 23, 1949:

S. 460. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to reconvey to the Helena Chamber of Commerce certain described parcels of land situated in the city of Helena, Mont.; and

S. 461. An act to clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

On May 24, 1949:

S. 663. An act to relieve certain employees of the Veterans' Administration from financial liability for certain overpayments; and

S. 812. An act to protect scenic values along Oak Creek Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 714) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1299) for the relief of Frank J. Patzke, Archie Mitchell, J. L. Shoemaker, Einar Engen, and N. L. Gifford.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Holland	Mundt
Baldwin	Humphrey	Myers
Butler	Hunt	Neely
Byrd	Ives	O'Connor
Cain	Jenner	O'Mahoney
Capehart	Johnson, Colo.	Reed

Graham	McFarland	Vandenberg
Green	McGrath	Watkins
Hayden	McKellar	Wherry
Hendrickson	McMahon	Wiley
Hickenlooper	Malone	Williams
Hill	Martin	Withers
Hoey	Morse	Young

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are detained on official business in meetings of committees of the Senate.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] is absent due to a death in his immediate family.

The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] are detained on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is detained in the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. MORSE obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a brief unanimous-consent request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will withhold his request for a moment, the Chair will ask the Senate to permit Senators to present routine matters, before the Senator from Oregon proceeds, in order to avoid the presentation of such matters later.

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me first state the nature of the request I am about to make. Yesterday, during the call of the calendar, Order No. 393, House bill 1754 when reached on the original call, was objected to. Later in the afternoon the Senator who made the objection, after having consulted the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], who presented the report from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, withdrew his objection. Thereafter, at the request of the distinguished majority leader, the bill was taken up for consideration and passed.

A typographical error, which was in the bill as originally reported, was corrected, but then another error was made as to a date.

The bill has to do with the suspension of the requirement for doing assessment work upon mining claims. This work must be done to the amount of $100 every year, and notice of the accomplishment of that work must be filed on or before 12 o'clock meridian on the first of July of each year. The typographical error consisted in the fact that the year 1949 was in the bill, instead of the year 1950. That typographical error was corrected. The additional error that was made, however, was on page 2, line 15, to change the year 1949 to 1950. That change should not have been made. So I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed, the vote by which the amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, the vote on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended, and the vote agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois on page 2, line 15, be reconsidered, so that the committee amendment may be corrected in this particular.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, the committee amendment now being before the Senate, I ask that on page 2, line 15, the amendment changing the date from "1949" to "1950" be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is rejected; and without objection, the committee amendment, as heretofore amended, is agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now ask that the committee amendment, as amended, be engrossed, and that the bill be read the third time

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator from Oregon for having yielded to me.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of December 24, 1942 (56 Stat. 1086; 43 U. S. C., sec. 36b), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire lands or interest in lands for the Geological Survey" (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 20

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to modify the classification of items subject to tax as luxuries

"Whereas the present operation of the Federal law taxing luxuries is such that it violates the basic principle of the equality of all citizens in that it inequitably imposes upon great portions of the population taxes upon items designated luxuries by the Federal act but which are in fact utter necessities; and

"Whereas these inequities fall with particular severity upon the people of the western portion of the United States in the imposition of a luxury tax upon all forms of public transportation and communication in an area of great distances where such transportation and communication are not a luxury but are essential to the conduct of business and the taxing of them indiscriminately as luxuries works such a hardship upon small business in particular that it is in fact ruinous and many are being forced out of business, causing a decline in the national income as a whole and resulting in increased unemployment and serious economic loss to the communities where these small business firms otherwise would thrive; and

"Whereas in like manner a luxury tax on legitimate business in time of peace is inequitable to large portions of the population by robbing them of their normal means of livelihood, as musicians, waiters, actors, actresses, and other persons of special training and talents who are unemployed as a result of the 20-percent luxury tax on theaters, night clubs, hotel dining rooms, cafes, and theatrical entertainment which is forcing many such establishments to close their doors or to abandon the music and entertainment portions of their normal service; and

"Whereas the indiscriminate taxing of necessities as luxuries also works a hardship and inequity upon women, especially women earning their own livelihood, in requiring them to pay a 20-percent luxury tax upon such necessities as low-cost handbags, luggage, cosmetics, fur coats, and similar articles as necessary to their life and occupation as any other article of clothing; and

"Whereas these misnamed luxury taxes also extend to many articles, such as baby oils, necessary in the care of infants, thus throwing a disproportionate burden upon young families, especially those of the many veterans whose normal family development was delayed by their sacrifices in the armed services of the Nation, which young men have not yet had time to achieve the higher brackets of income and therefore suffer under a tax which takes for necessities from those least able to pay; and

"Whereas much of this hardship and inequity could be relieved by a proper classification and designation of such items by price or similar classification so that the luxury tax could be levied only upon those articles which are in fact luxuries or of luxury quality: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of California hereby memoralizes the Congress of the United States to enact immediately legislation to relieve articles necessary to ordinary business and livelihood from the imposition of luxury taxes, to ameliorate at once the hardships upon those in low-income brackets, upon women, and upon small business by the present onerous and inequitable Federal luxury tax; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the chairman and each member of the Committee on Taxation in each House of Congress, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Public Works:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 25

"Joint resolution memorializing Congress to install a system of flood control with facilities for the production of power on the Virgin River in the States of Nevada and Arizona

"Whereas the State of Nevada contains large areas of land held by the Federal Government, which land is exempt from taxation for flood control and irrigation and power purposes; and

"Whereas the farming area served by the Virgin River in the State of Nevada is subjected to periodic floods which destroy valuable crops and farm land and which result in a tremendous and needless loss of property; and

"Whereas thousands of acres of valuable farm land in the States of Nevada and Arizona will be developed through the installation of a dam on the Virgin River that will afford millions of gallons of water for irrigation during the growing season; and

"Whereas such a project, in addition to supplying flood control and water for irrigation, will make available to power users in the States of Nevada and Arizona additional blocks of power so that industry may be attracted to this area, and so that power produced at Boulder Dam may be sold to power users in the industrial area of southern California; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of the Legislature of the State of Nevada that the Federal Government should provide a dam on the Virgin River for flood control, irrigation, and power purposes: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the Senate of Nevada (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to provide a dam on the Virgin River in Mohave County, Ariz.; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Nevada to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Representatives of the State of Nevada in the Congress of the United States, and to each house of the Legislature of the State of Arizona.

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 30

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to give due and favorable consideration to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission

"Whereas during the last generation the enormous expenses of Federal governmental activities has created a condition of confusion and overlapping in the divisions of the administrative authority which has placed upon the President of these United States an ever increasing burden and has resulted in increased costs and inefficient administration; and

"Whereas pursuant to Public Law 162, enacted by the Eightieth Congress, there was created a commission known as the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, which public law was on July 7, 1947, approved by the President of the United States, Harry S. Truman; and

"Whereas pursuant to said Public Law 162, there was appointed a bipartisan group of representative and distinguished citizens of our country who had had experience in governmental affairs, which group made an exhaustive and unbiased examination into the administration of the agencies of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the said Commission has filed a detailed report of its findings and its conclusions therefrom together with its recommendations covering the matter; and

"Whereas it appears to the members of the Michigan Legislature that the said findings, conclusions, and recommendations constitute a cohesive and efficient program which will be of great benefit to the peoples of these United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the members of the Michigan Legislature respectfully request the Congress of the United States to give due and favorable consideration to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission to the end that the said recommendations may be adopted by the Congress of these United States and the President of the United States be directed hereby to effectuate the provisions of such recommenations; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

"Adopted by the senate, May 3, 1949.

"Adopted by the house, May 6, 1949."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 19

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States not to enact legislation relative to socialized medicine

"Whereas the physician-patient relationship, with the freedom of choice enjoyed by the American people in the selection of a physician in whom they have confidence, has long been recognized as part of the philosophy of democracy of the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the members of the Michigan Legislature respectfully urge the Congress of the United States not to adopt legislation relative to socialized medicine; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 45

"Concurrent resolution requesting Congress of the United States of America to pass legislation enabling the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu to issue flood-control bonds

"Whereas damages were suffered by owners to real and personal property by reason of the flood and floodwaters from streams in the city of Honolulu in early 1949; and

"Whereas it is necessary to improve, construct, better, extend, and maintain projects or undertakings for the control of and protection against flood and floodwaters; and

"Whereas the limitations on bonded indebtedness as set forth in the Hawaiian Organic Act and the Revised Laws of Hawaii limit the city and county in the issuance of bonds to finance such public improvement: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring):

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, requested through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii to enact legislation which will enable the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act, or any laws of the Territory of Hawaii or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, to authorize the board of supervisors of the city and county of Honolulu to issue general obligation bonds in the sum of $1,200,000 to acquire, construct, reconstruct, improve, better, extend, and maintain projects or undertakings for the control of and protection against flood and floodwaters, including the power to drain and rehabilitate lands already flooded in the city of Honolulu, and to that end the Congress of the United States of America is hereby requested and urged, through said Delegate to Congress, to adopt a bill in substantially the following form, to wit:

"'A bill to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue flood-control bonds

"'Be it enacted, etc., That the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, any provisions of the Hawaiian Organic Act, of any laws of the Territory of Hawaii, or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, may authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation of the Territory of Hawaii, to issue general obligation bonds in the sum of $1,200,000 to acquire, construct, reconstruct, improve, better, extend, and maintain projects or undertakings for the control of and protection against flood and floodwaters, including the power to drain and rehabilitate lands already flooded in the city of Honolulu.

"'SEC. 2. The bonds or obligations herein authorized to be issued shall be coupon in form, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 5 percent per annum, and shall mature serially over a period of not to exceed 30 years, with or without the privilege of prior redemption as the board of supervisors may by resolution determine. If sold to the Government of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, said bonds or obligations may be sold at private sale at not less than par and accrued interest to the date of such sale. No election shall be necessary to authorize such bonds or other obligations, which may bear such date or dates, may be payable at such place or places, and may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest or as to principal only, as the treasurer of said city and county of Honolulu, with the approval of the board of supervisors thereof, may provide. Except where inconsistent with the provisions of this act, the provisions of chapter 117 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1945, shall apply to bonds and other obligations used under this act. Such bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

"'SEC. 3. Act 273 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1949, pertaining to the issuance of flood-control bonds, as authorized by this act, is hereby ratified and confirmed subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of such Territorial legislation by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by such legislation and for the disposition of unexpended moneys realized from the sale of said bonds.'

"SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii."

Three resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Resolution petitioning the President of the United States to afford the people of the Virgin Islands an opportunity to recommend appointees for the positions of Governor, Government Secretary, and other high-ranking officials of the Government of the Virgin Islands

"Whereas under the provisions of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands the President of the United States is charged with the responsibility of appointing a Governor and Government Secretary of the Virgin Islands; and

"Whereas the Secretary of the Interior, under the terms of the said organic act, is also required to appoint an Administrator for St. Croix, an Administrator for St. John, a Commissioner of Finance, and other executive and administrative officers; and

"Whereas while the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior have conscientiously performed their functions, nevertheless, they have been deprived of the well-matured and deliberately formed will of the people; and

"Whereas the will of the people of the Virgin Islands could be obtained if the principles of the senatorial courtesy are made operative with respect to Virgin Islands appointments, and action resulting therefrom would result in a fair and liberal policy: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, and it is hereby resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands in session assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, petitioned to grant to the people of the Virgin Islands, through their Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, an opportunity to recommend appointees for the positions of Governor, Government Secretary, Administrator for St. Croix, Administrator for St. John, and Commissioner of Finance, until such time as the people are granted the right to elect such officials; that the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands be given a reasonable time in which to make such recommendations before final action is taken either by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior; and be it further

"Resolved, and it is hereby further resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, That this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President and Members of the United States Senate, and that copies thereof be transmitted to the Secretary, the Department of the Interior, the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, Department of the Interior, and the chairman of the Senate Committee on Insular Possessions.

"Resolution protesting against the methods used by the Department of the Interior in formulating the legislative program for the Virgin Islands without giving the people an opportunity to participate therein

"Whereas the Department of the Interior will shortly present to the Eighty-first Congress for its consideration a so-called Virgin Island legislative program which undoubtedly will affect the social, economic, and political life of the people of the Virgin Islands; and

"Whereas neither the people of the Virgin Islands nor their duly elected representatives have been given an opportunity to participate in formulating this program; and

"Whereas the people of the Virgin Islands are recognized as politically matured to participate more fully in the formation of plans dealing with their social, economic, and political status: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved (and it is hereby resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands in session assembled), That said body protests and does hereby record its protest against the methods used by the Department of the Interior to formulate a legislative program for the Virgin Islands without giving the representatives of the people an opportunity to express their views as being arbitrary and not in conformity with the conception of democratic operation; and be it further

"Resolved, and it is hereby further resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Insular Affairs Committee, and the Governor of the Virgin Islands.

"Resolution petitioning the Eighty-first Congress to notify the Virgin Islands Legislative Assembly when Virgin Islands matters are to be discussed by that body

"Whereas it has been authoritatively learned that congressional committees of the Eighty-first Congress of the United States are writing amendments to the Virgin Islands constitution; and

"Whereas while the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands recognizes the fact that the Eighty-first Congress is not bound by constitutional requirements to act in deference to the will of the people of the Virgin Islands, nevertheless, it feels confident in its belief that the friendly and sympathetic attitude which is characteristic of the Eighty-first Congress will motivate it to grant the request of the Virgin Islands people; and

"Whereas the Virgin Islands people desire to be given the opportunity to appear and be heard before any amendment is made to their organic act: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, and it is hereby resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands in session assembled, That the Eighty-first Congress of the United States be and is hereby petitioned to afford to the Virgin Islands people, through their legislative assembly, an opportunity to participate in the process of amending the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands and to voice their opinion on all matters which will affect the Virgin Islands and their people; and be it further

"Resolved, and it is hereby further resolved, That the several committees of the Eighty-first Congress concerned with Virgin Islands matters be and are hereby petitioned to advise the Virgin Islands Legislative Assembly in due course of time when Virgin Islands matters will receive the attention of such committees; and it is further

"Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States Senate; Speaker of the House of Representatives; majority leaders of the Senate and House; chairman of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee; chairman of the House Public Lands Committee; chairmen of the Appropriations Committees; chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee; the President of the United States; the Department of the Interior; the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions; the Governor of the Virgin Islands; chairman of the Democratic National Committee; chairman of the Republican National Committee; and the chairman of the Insular Democratic Committee of the Virgin Islands.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF McKEESPORT, PA.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the City Council of the City of McKeesport, Pa., May 18, 1949, relating to the proposed observance of October 11 each year as General Pulaski Memorial Day. The resolution is signed by Charles A. Kincaid, mayor of McKeesport, and Clifford W. Flegal, Sr., the city clerk. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 5584

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of th United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in Congress

Resolved by the city of McKeesport, in council cssembled, That—

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the Urited States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died of wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas various States of the Union, through legislative enactment, designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated from October 11, 1929, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial

Day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Council of the City of McKeesport, Allegheny County, Pa., That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

EXTENSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS—RESOLUTION OF ST. PAUL (MINN.) TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the St. Paul, Minn., Trades and Labor Assembly, relating to the extension of social-security benefits, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on further coverage of employees under the Social Security Act

Whereas social security has demonstrated its merit not only to the employees covered but also to the general economy of the country; and

Whereas there are thousands of workers who are not now covered by the act, such as farm workers, household workers, employees of nonprofit institutions, such as hospitals, educational institutions, etc., employees of Federal, State, and local governments and the self-employed; and

Whereas all of these employees must be provided for in their declining years if they are unable to provide for themselves; this situation brings about the condition where workers in covered employment help to provide for themselves in their declining years, and are also compelled to provide for noncovered workers through taxation; and

Whereas workers shift from one occupation to another, even in Government employment, which most people think is a permanent lifetime job; and

Whereas every time they shift from covered to noncovered employment their credits to benefits are interrupted and it seriously affects the amount they will receive upon reaching retirement age; and

Whereas many of the Government employees have independent pension plans and for that reason they are apprehensive as to what will happen to their independent plan if they were automatically brought under the Social Security System; and

Whereas in covered employment many industries had prior to the passage (and in some cases subsequent to the passage) of social security, adopted pension plans in addition to social security; and

Whereas we feel that all employees regardless where they are presently employed and coming under an independent pension plan, have a keen interest in the continuation or alteration of such a plan: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we endorse and encourage the passage of amendments to the Social Security Act to bring all people enumerated above under the act. Provided, however, that in cases where private or individual pension plans now exist, that no alteration can be made unless the majority of those so covered in each plan vote in favor of such alterations.

Therefore, we urge that the amount of benefits be increased and that the age limit for men be reduced to 60 years and the age limit of women be reduced to 55 years.
